Honourable senators, to go quickly through the principal features of the bill, Senator Guay mentioned that there is an extensive preamble. That is quite an extension, and there is no doubt that a preamble does help courts in the interpretation of legislation. It also helps those who are responsible for administering the legislation in its interpretation, knowing that the preamble sets out principles, guidelines and directions for the administration of the act, and knowing at the same time that, if it comes to a matter of interpretation before a court, the court can resort to the preamble.

Added to the preamble is a clear statement of the purpose of the act and its objectives in keeping with the principles that are enunciated in the preamble. This is a significant and salutary addition to the act of 1969. Part I, as Senator Guay and others have pointed out, sets out simultaneous interpretations in the debates and other proceedings of Parliament as a legislative duty. That is an advance and a clarification.

The present act contains provisions dealing with legislative and other instruments—a bit of legal esoterica. “Instruments” in that case are not referring to objects but to statutory instruments. If the definition of a statutory instrument seems arcane to laymen, I can tell you that even lawyers are not always sure when a document can properly be called a statutory instrument.

In any event, the clear principle established in this bill, which is again an important step forward, is that the existing legislation permits consecutive release or proclamation of instruments in the two languages. In the bill they must be published simultaneously.

Section 16 provides that every federal court or administrative tribunal, other than the Supreme Court of Canada, has an obligation,—that is a difference in emphasis and a significant one—whenever it is adjudicating in a proceeding involving the use of both official languages, to provide a judge or officer or panel of judges or officers that—and Senator Guay mentioned this today—understands both languages without the need for simultaneous interpretation. That is an important step forward. In some cases they represent more than a mere strengthening or clarification of what now exists—in some cases they represent important changes.

On the question of language of service, honourable senators will remember that the present statute is quite clear. It is not quite so clear on the question of language of use, and I will come to that in a moment. On language of service, however, the provisions in the bill have been made consistent with those of the Charter. I think most senators and most Canadians in the past 18-odd years have become familiar with the increasing implementation of the principles of the 1969 act through the use of signs reading “The Choice is Yours”, for example. These signs have been placed in all our federal institutions, such as airports—

Senator Baroote: And penitentiaries.

Senator Frith: I take the honourable senator's word for that. Honourable senators will remember that the scheme of the previous legislation was the scheme of the commission, which was the recognition that federal institutions should offer bilingual service so that all citizens of Canada would feel comfortable with and reassured about the status of the two official languages throughout Canada in post offices, crown corporations, parks and other national institutions. Canadians are proud of these institutions as national symbols and want to see the official languages given equal status in them. And that was advertised through a clear message delivered by these institutions, on the recommendation and encouragement of the commissioner, that service will be granted in those two languages.

Senator Murray and others have referred to an important addition to the question of language of service. Senators will recall that in some cases it was based on significant demand and in other cases it was automatically required. Added to that has been the principle of the nature of the office as a reason for providing service in both official languages. It is to include such factors as public health, safety and security, the location of the office or its “national or international mandate”. A more precise interpretation of this and other terms is left to the Governor in Council for regulations to be published after due consultation with the commissioner and the communities concerned. These and all other regulations promulgated under the bill are to be the subject of pre-publication and parliamentary review.

This, in my view, raises an important flag or reservation. I am opposed to the extension of government by regulation. Most undesirable legislative practices and most practices that change the principles of parliamentary democracy and freedom arrive in a “Trojan horse” of popularity. Usually, when we find that some parliamentary tradition or privilege has been chipped away or that some freedom or important principle of liberty has been compromised, it is presented as a necessity for the greater good. If one raises doubts as to the need for the compromise of these principles in order to advance the cause that is being brought forward, one is seen as opposing not only a popular but a desirable concept. Because it is my hope that we support Senator Wood's motion for a special committee made up of senators with experience in this field to study this legislation, it is also my hope that that committee will have an opportunity to ask the commissioner's office and the minister why it is necessary to have these terms defined more precisely by Governor in Council regulations. I expect that I and other senators will be reassured in this regard. My support for the principle of the bill is so strong and so rooted in conviction that I have every expectation that my reservations can be allayed. But I bring this point to the attention of honourable senators because I do want reassurance on that score. And when I say “on that score”, I mean not only on the need to use parliamentary regulations or Order in Council regulations—that is, regulations made by the executive—but details on whether the parliamentary review will be an effective review of government by Order in Council.

The bill also proposes that federal bodies with regulatory powers affecting public health, safety and security use those powers whenever it is reasonable to do so to help promote linguistic equality in the bodies they regulate. Since we are dealing with federal bodies and since the same principle applies—that is, the need for Canadians to feel that in all federal, national, Canadian and pan-Canadian institutions there is observance of respect for the two languages—I support and encourage the extension of that principle to federal regulatory bodies.

In general, I salute this legislation. I think it will further stir Canadians to see the presence of the other language and, in that presence, to recognize it as very Canadian. What is developing is one of the most distinctive characteristics of Canadian culture—the widespread use of and respect for our two official languages.

Honourable senators, I should like to make a few comments on language of work. In the English version of the present act, all of the jurisdiction for implementing recommendations and policies on language of work hangs on one three-letter word:

use. In the present act, the languages are to have "equal status as to their use."

• (1510)

When Mr. Spicer and I first discussed the act and its administration, we read together the sections about language of service and discussed the question of language of use—that is, the right of a federal public servant to use the language of his or her choice in his or her work, and not just to serve the public in the client's language.

At that time, at the beginning of his mandate, Mr. Spicer was concentrating on language of service and had some serious doubts about jurisdiction for language of use. In the course of our working together for that seven-year period we built the entire language-of-use régime on that one word: use.

This act gives that one little word a lot of help, because, unlike the 1969 act, it is explicit here that the principle of public servants being able to work in their own language is a part of the legislative scheme and the administration of the régime.

I now come to flag number two—this is for the committee—and that is Part VI, which deals with equitable participation.

The principle that both language groups be fairly represented and enjoy full participation in the work of the government was also not really made explicit until the 1973 parliamentary resolution, and was not given legislative effect. It has been embodied in this bill in terms of equal access to appointment and advancement for both groups, and an appropriate reflection of their presence in Canada.

The B & B Commission was firm about the principle of equal access, because its mandate and its interpretation of that mandate leaned heavily on the concept of equal opportunity.

The question of reflection of presence, however, raises a question that I should also like to explore with the commissioner, the minister and others. Can this be misunderstood as a principle of quotas? The B & B Commission rejected the concept of quotas based on population—that is, taking Statistics Canada reports or census reports, looking at the presence in the country of the two language groups and then applying a quota for representation in the public service.

I am reassured—and I am sure that we all will be—by the fact that the expression is an appropriate reflection of the presence of the groups rather than the rigid application of quotas. Here again the rules of full participation are to be spelled out in Governor-in-Council regulations. For the same reasons that applied earlier in my intervention I will want to ask about that.

The bill lays out in detail, in Parts VII and VIII, the roles of the key governmental agencies responsible for its implementation, and Treasury Board is identified as overall manager and promoter of those principles.

Treasury Board has been playing a large role in the administration of this régime, but in this bill the programs which affect the federal administration, including crown corporations and wholly-owned subsidiaries, will be explicitly subject to the management of Treasury Board. The board is required to publish directives, develop regulations, inform the public and evaluate outcomes and report annually to Parliament. That is a good principle. The bill also assigns to the Secretary of State the duty to pursue all those official languages programs that it now manages, but it must do so as a matter of policy. Again, a salutary provision.

The commissioner remains as language ombudsman, parliamentary monitor of government performance and promoter of language equality, although the bill expands and reinforces those roles somewhat.

The commissioner is given jurisdiction to monitor all official languages legislation, in addition to the bill, and will also be responsible for overseeing the government's promotional activities in the area. He is also required to review all Governor-in-Council regulations promulgated under the act, as I mentioned earlier. He is part of the consulting and review process on government by regulations.

Let's stop for a moment to understand a substantial extension of the commissioner's role. Up to now he has been an ombudsman. The important distinction between the role of an ombudsman and his additional roles here is that traditionally an ombudsman solely makes recommendations. An ombudsman is someone to whom complaints are made about the executive branch, and the ombudsman investigates them and makes recommendations. That has important consequences in fact, in politics and in law.

In fact, it means that he is leaving to someone else the enforcement of his recommendations. He does not have the power to enforce them himself. His powers come from the publicity of his recommendations and from the pressure he has on others who must enforce them.

In politics, small "p", that puts his status somewhere between the executive, public policy and the public.

In law, it makes a difference because traditionally any decision made by a judicial or quasi-judicial body is not subject to judicial review if it is only a recommendation and not an actual decision. What are reviewable by the courts are decisions, not recommendations.

For what it is worth, the leading case, as I remember it, is Guay v. Lafleur. Guay is spelled the same as Senator Guay and Lafleur is spelled in the same way as that of an equally skillful Canadian, but in another arena.

Senator Gigantès: Skating on ice rather than on words!

Senator Frith: Yes. Forgive me for that parenthetical bit of avocasserie.

The difference is significant. The role of the present commissioner, under the 1969 act, is that of an ombudsman, to make recommendations.

Now the commissioner's duty, under Part X, will include his having standing to appear as a party before the Federal Court. Under Part X of this bill, he is given that right to take federal departments to the Federal Court, with the consent of the complainant—and there is usually a complainant wherever an ombudsman is involved, although ombudsmen can launch investigations on their own—or he can join in a complainant-initiated application to the court where complaints have not been satisfactorily resolved. He also retains his capacity to seek leave to intervene in any other adjudicative proceeding involving the status of English and French.

Part X is said to be a response to criticism that the 1969 act lacked an effective executory character. This bill provides a procedure whereby the complainant—or the commissioner on his behalf—can apply to the trial division of the Federal Court for an “appropriate and just” remedy. And it permits the court, under clause 79, to admit as evidence information relating to any similar complaint involving the same federal institution.

Stopping there for another legal digression, generally speaking in law, evidence of similar acts is not admissible, although there are exceptions. The principle is that one ought not to be convicted of an offence because he had previously done something similar.

So a department will now not be merely the subject of a recommendation but could be the subject of proceedings in the Federal Court and have brought against it evidence that it has committed a similar act previously. I am hoping that my analogy is inappropriate and that the evidence given before the committee will convince me that it is.

The new jurisdiction of the Federal Court is also something that is in addition to the legal remedies that complainants can seek under the Charter or under the common law, as was done in the Aviation case, and, as they say in England, I was “in” that case representing the commissioner before the Federal Court, but, however, in a context different from the context that will be possible in the additional powers under Part X.

Honourable senators, there are a number of other salutary provisions in this bill and I flag the following for our consideration. Clause 82 gives Parts I to V of the bill primacy over all other federal law, except the Canadian Human Rights Act. There are some very useful safeguards with regard to staffing. Clause 91, for example, requires that linguistic requirements for a particular staffing action be objectively determined in order to protect against over-zealous or arbitrary application of the bill to personnel matters.

Clauses 85 to 87, as I have mentioned previously, lay out the pre-publication procedure for regulations. I would like to hear more about that. There is in clause 87 a negative resolution scheme regarding new language-of-work regions.

The amendments made to the bill in Part XIV.1 of the Criminal Code regarding the language of trials is also to be supported, in my view. The effect of the changes is to ensure that an accused receives justice in the official language of his choice. Also, in the absence of provincial agreement in those provinces that have not already assented to proclamation of Part XIV.1, these provisions will come into effect no later than January 1, 1990.

Yukon and the Northwest Territories are exempted from the application of the bill, but their territorial languages ordinances, which provide in each case for satisfactory institutional bilingualism, have been entrenched in the bill in that the territorial legislatures cannot diminish any protections in them without the consent of Parliament. Any honourable senator who is interested in the history of the language provisions in Yukon and the Northwest Territories—or, for that matter, the background of language law and legal rights in all of the provinces of Canada—would find, I think, very edifying a study prepared for the commission by Claude-Armand Shepard called: “Law of Languages in Canada”. It is a most scholarly and readable review of the history of language law in Canada.

Therefore, honourable senators, you can appreciate that this bill constitutes a major overhaul of the 1969 act. I believe that it builds creatively on the spirit of the current law. As a member of the commission that inspired the original legislation, I welcome this bill and hope that it will receive quick passage in the Senate after careful study. I hope that it will go to the committee today or, if not, no later than next week. We will, of course, need to set up the committee and, if we wish to send the bill today, we must give Senator Wood an opportunity to bring forward her motion so that a committee will exist to which we can refer it.

I congratulate the government and the House of Commons in having wrestled with this bill—and wrestle they did—and finally managing to send it to the Senate. I hope—and I can say I am sure that my hope will be fulfilled—that these few nits that I have picked with regard to some of the provisions of the bill will be satisfactorily explained in the committee. I do not think that they are properly the subject of any further debate here, although Senator Murray may want to comment on them. However, I am telling him and my colleagues here in the Senate that I would be personally quite satisfied to have the minister and the commissioner appear before the committee so that we can explore the questions I have raised there, rather than here in second reading debate on the principle of the bill.

Apart from that, I say to this bill geh gesind, we are glad to have it and hope that it will receive Royal Assent very soon.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: I wonder if I might ask a question of my friend because of the breadth and depth of his knowledge in this area. My question is really most elementary: Does he feel that this bill, in any sense, will diminish the opportunities for unilingual anglophones to achieve employment in the public service or in crown corporations or in corporations that deal on contract with the federal government?

● (1530)

Senator Frith: I do not think that this bill will diminish the opportunities of any unilingual Canadian. It will certainly encourage bilingualism for those whose native tongue is French, just as it will encourage bilingualism for those whose native tongue is English.

In spite of the odd caveat that I have raised, there is one thing that it does not do; it does not change the principle of institutional bilingualism, and that was the most important principle established by the B & B Commission—that is, the distinction between institutional bilingualism and individual bilingualism.

This bill, by increasing institutional bilingualism, will increase the requirement for individual bilinguals, but it will not make individual or personal bilingualism any more necessary than it was to serve the previous legislation. It also established this principle of institutional bilingualism. Here, too, the emphasis is on extension of language services. It does extend the language-of-use provisions, but mostly it clarifies them rather than extends them.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I was not going to rise on this subject, but Senator Lang has raised a very interesting issue as to what happens to unilingual people.

What would happen to a person whose mother tongue is Inuktitut, but who has also managed to succeed in terms of being able to speak fluently in English but not in French? What happens in that case? Would that person be jeopardized by this bill?

Senator Frith: No more or no less than any other unilingual, including a unilingual francophone, a unilingual anglophone or someone who speaks one of the native languages and only speaks either English or French.

The legislation, in my opinion, does exactly what the previous legislation did; it does not subtract; it adds. It adds opportunities for bilingual people, it adds opportunities for some unilingual French or unilingual English people, but it does not subtract anything from anyone, and I do not think it would subtract anything in the case that you have mentioned.

Senator Watt: I have a supplementary question. Since the aboriginal person I have described is already bilingual, I do not think there is any provision in the bill recognizing that fact—that is, that a person who speaks Inuktitut and is also fluent in English or French is considered bilingual. Is that person considered bilingual or not bilingual? How does the bill deal with that?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Of course that person is bilingual if that person speaks two languages. So is someone who speaks Portuguese and English; so is someone who speaks Romanian and Hungarian. Those people are bilingual. But this bill does not mean to deal with bilinguals as a general principle; it deals with the two official languages of Canada, English and French. It does not make a person more or less bilingual if that person speaks English and Inuktitut.

What has always been part of the problem, and is still part of the problem, is that we now tend to use the word “bilingual” in Canada to designate a person who speaks English and French, and that is understandable. When we are talking about this subject we are, in fact, talking about the English and French languages, but the word “bilingual” is a word that is applied to someone who speaks any two languages.

What this bill means to deal with is not individual people. It sets up a régime of two official languages to which people who speak English or French respond.

By setting up that régime it adds rights. It adds, for example, to a French Canadian, who speaks only French, rights that that person did not have and gives reassurances that that person did not have under a unilingual administration, which was primarily English. The problem in reaction to the legislation has always been that it was trying to take something away from someone who spoke only French or someone who spoke only English, whether or not they spoke other languages. It does not do that and it was never intended to do that. It is simply an administration of fairness to the two official languages of Canada.

Of course, once it sets up a régime of that kind, it does mean that someone who is bilingual has more opportunities, but that person does not have any less opportunity than before the régime was set up.

There is no way in which this legislation subtracts anything, in my opinion. It adds; it adds service and opportunity to individuals and obeys the principle of linguistic justice.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, if I may, I should like to add a few words. I do not have any questions but simply a few observations to make. I was not going to speak on this legislation, but the question asked by Senator Watt whetted my appetite; so I think a few words are in order.

I am, of course, in favour of the bill. I think it is a great step forward. I was also in favour of the original Official Languages Bill introduced by the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau back in 1969. I took part in that debate in the other place and was proud to have been part of the government that brought in that particular legislation. I think this particular bill goes just a little further and defines things a little more.

As a Canadian from the west at the time the original Official Languages Bill was introduced, I can say it was particularly important that that bill was brought in at that time, because in western Canada it was mostly the English language that was spoken—and it still is—and there were very often many misunderstandings about where we were going in terms of language.

I was appalled recently at what happened in Saskatchewan and also appalled at what happened in the province of Alberta. So I think it behooves us as Canadians to make sure that we go forward with the kind of unanimity we have shown in Bill C-72.

Going back to Senator Watt's question, I was glad to see that people who took part in the debate on this particular bill did not talk in terms of “founding races” or “founding peoples” of this country in connection with the official languages, because I get a little angry when I hear people talk about the “founding nations”.

Our people were here first, about 40,000 years ago, as were Senator Watt's people and Senator Adams' people. We were not lost. When people say “the founding nations”, that gets us just a little angry, because we were not lost. We were never lost.

In any event, I want to bootleg just a little on to this and give a little background. Senator Adams and Senator Watt have Inuktitut as their first language. In the case of Senator Adams, you have all seen here that sometimes he has difficulty communicating in English because his first language is Inuktitut, and we have not really provided in this institution accommodation for him. Perhaps Senator Watt has had a little more exposure to the English language so that, in his case, it is not quite so urgent. He can communicate a little better in English.

When we were on the task force studying the Meech Lake Accord, we went to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and I was very impressed with the way the people in those territories were sensitized to the language needs of the aboriginal peoples. In Yellowknife we had translation for Slavey, we had translation for Dogrib and we had translation for Inuktitut that was absolutely excellent. This was a great step forward by those people in terms of their sensitivity towards the language needs of the aboriginal peoples. When we went to Iqaluit, the translation was again present in Inuktitut. Many people came forward who could not speak English because their language was Inuktitut, and the contribution that they made because there was translation was absolutely great. They understood in their own language and they could communicate in their own language what the Constitution was all about. They were able to tell the committee, in a real fashion, in their own words, translated later on into English, what they were thinking in their own communities. The fact that they were able to communicate in their own language was a great step forward.

Perhaps, if I had been better prepared and had done more homework in connection with this bill and this issue, I might have been able to bring forward more concrete proposals. In the future I will do that. Perhaps I should say we will do that. Senator Watt and Senator Adams and I have a particular obligation to comment or bring forward some proposals. We may not be able to do it in an official sense, as there are some 56 Indian dialects in the country.

My first language was Okanagan. I did not speak English until I was three or four years old. I recall an incident when I was appointed to the cabinet back in 1976. Wayne Chevelday-off of the Toronto Globe and Mail asked me if I was bilingual, and I said, "Sure, I am bilingual. I speak Okanagan and English."

I just wanted to flag that in terms of the aboriginal peoples. We can and should do a better job, especially regarding their access to the federal institutions.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Murray speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

[Senator Marchand.]

[Translation]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, first of all, I wish to thank and congratulate all honourable senators who took part in this debate, not only for their excellent contribution but especially for their support for the important principle of bilingualism and Bill C-72.

I apologize to my friend, the Honourable Senator Guay, with whom I have had the pleasure of serving on the Joint Committee on Official Languages for several years, for my absence during his speech this afternoon.

I was called out of town for the morning and I therefore had to postpone my return to the Senate until later. Nevertheless, I intend to read his speech in the Debates of this house with interest.

Senator Guay: Thank you, Senator Murray.

[English]

Senator Murray: I apologize also to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition for having missed part of his speech this afternoon. I look forward at a later date to reading the part I missed, because I appreciate the incomparable credentials that he brings to a discussion of this subject. He has credentials, having served as he did on the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and having served, if I am not mistaken, also as a legal adviser and counsel to the Commissioner of Official Languages during a previous incarnation, before his appointment to this place.

I am happy to accept and accommodate the statement of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition that most of the questions he raised during the course of his speech this afternoon could be more profitably dealt with when we have the Minister of Justice, the sponsor of this bill, before the committee. That is true for a number of the detailed matters that have been raised in the course of the debate.

I must say that I am very happy that our colleagues, Senator Watt and Senator Marchand, took part, on the spur of the moment, in this debate. Sometimes those spur-of-the-moment speeches are the best ones. It was most appropriate that they took advantage of an occasion like this to express their concerns and their preoccupations and their perspectives as members of the founding peoples in Canada—

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: —on language policy and on linguistic justice in this country and on the access we want our citizens to have to the federal government services to which they are entitled.

Earlier this day our friend Senator Lang raised a question during Question Period, and I have obtained the unedited transcript of the Question Period. He alluded to an article in the Montreal Gazette in which it was stated that the Honourable Gil Rémillard had said that it would be "completely unacceptable" for the federal government to use this bill—that is, Bill C-72—to promote bilingualism in the workplace in Quebec.

Let me take just a moment on that matter. The workplace that this bill refers to is the federal government's workplace. It refers to the offices of the departments of the federal government. This bill attempts to state the right of employees of the federal government to speak the official language of their choice in the "workplace" of the federal government, under certain conditions.

The question that arises from Senator Lang's question is whether some of those workplaces are located in the province of Quebec. The answer is that, yes, they are. The answer is that they have been since, I believe, 1977. In other words, there are places in the province of Quebec, obviously, where the government offices function, in terms both of their service to the public and the language of work, in both of our official languages. That has been the case since, I believe, 1977, and that policy is legislated in Bill C-72. If the honourable senator wishes to pursue the matter, I shall do my best.

Senator Lang: I would rather not pursue it, but what was Mr. Rémillard saying, then?

Senator Murray: First, I do not think my friend should ask me; he should ask Mr. Rémillard or perhaps the people who wrote the article in the Montreal Gazette. The point I want to make is that this bill deals with the federal government workplace. This bill provides that in certain places in Canada, which are to be defined by regulation, an employee of the federal government shall have the right to work in the official language of his choice, to communicate with his superiors and so forth; it is all there. Among those places in Canada are a number of places in the province of Quebec, and this has been the case, according to the policy, since, I believe, 1977. It will continue to be the case under the terms of this bill, because the districts that were established by the policy in 1977 have been given legislative sanction by this bill.

Honourable senators, our colleague Senator Wood spoke yesterday. She, too, raised a number of matters that I think Mr. Hnatyshyn will want to deal with when he appears before the committee. I have one or two brief observations to make on her speech. First, I think it was a mite unfair of her to reproach the present government for having taken three years to come up with this bill. She will know that the Official Languages Act was passed in 1969 and that between 1969 and 1988 there have been reports by successive Commissioners of Official Languages and by the Joint Committee on Official Languages recommending changes. Quite a number of the reports by the joint committee were made while Senator Wood and I served on it. All of them suggested that changes ought to be made to the Official Languages Act. However, our predecessors did not bring any amendments to the act before Parliament and, indeed, in their very last Speech from the Throne in 1983, there was not even any mention of a plan to amend the Official Languages Act. This prompted me in my then capacity as co-chairman of the joint committee to write to Prime Minister Trudeau as to the government's position on our recommendations.

He replied in a very full letter, but there was no commitment on the part of the government to overhaul the Official Languages Act. We have done that. It has taken us three years, but I do not apologize for the delay. I think the government has done a good job of it. I think the consultations across the country with minority language groups, with Commissioners of Official Languages and, heavens knows, with Parliament and parliamentarians were thorough and effective. The end result is a very happy one and will prove to be a vast improvement on the old act. I say that because the new act extends bilingualism, legislates on questions like the language of work, brings into one act the responsibility of the federal government to promote bilingualism in the country and to assist the minority language communities across the country.

This bill is an improvement on the old act because it is a much more flexible instrument. We saw that the previous government and, indeed, this government could not move to proclaim bilingual districts. The concept was just too rigid—the idea that you could draw a circle on a map and say, "Ten per cent of the people who live here speak the minority language; therefore, within these boundaries there shall be full bilingual services." It was entirely too rigid for many reasons, some of which I went into yesterday. It seems to me that the idea of declaring these districts by regulation and allowing for common sense and flexibility, and requiring consultation, oversight and parliamentary review of the whole process will prove to be a much more effective way of administering and implementing bilingualism in this country.

Senator Wood noted in her speech that the preamble of this bill assigns responsibility to the federal government for the advancement of bilingualism whereas the Meech Lake Accord imposes the duty on all governments to preserve the linguistic duality of the country. Indeed, this is the very point we were making at Meech Lake. The Meech Lake commitment was never considered, certainly not by the federal government and not by a good many of the provinces, to be a maximum. Rather, it was considered a floor, a minimum on which we could build. We do promote linguistic duality in this country. I think it is fair to say that the Government of New Brunswick and the Government of Ontario do the same. So the Meech Lake commitment, which was the most on which we could get unanimous agreement to preserve linguistic duality, was never considered as a maximum standard by any of the interested participants.

Senator Wood also raised the question of bilingualism in crown corporations and their affiliates. She knows that some time ago the joint committee made recommendations about requiring all subsidiaries of crown corporations to accept the obligations of the Official Languages Act. That kind of blanket treatment of crown corporation subsidiaries would be very difficult—I think impractical—to apply. I can do no better than to quote to her the reply the Right Honourable Pierre Trudeau made to me when I wrote to him about the matter five years ago. He said:

The Committee's ninth recommendation and its sixth report deal with Crown corporations in both general and specific terms. As the Committee will be aware, the Official Languages Act applies to Crown corporations as defined in Part VIII of the Financial Administration Act. To bring all subsidiary corporations and mixed enterprises within this ambit presents significant legal problems and it should be thoroughly examined before any steps are taken. Some such entities are incorporated and operate exclusively outside Canada or under the laws of a single province. Others have an extremely localised scope and deal with an essentially unilingual clientele. The government nonetheless agrees that, generally speaking, wholly-owned entities should respect official languages policies. The government is developing criteria to govern the application of official languages policies to various categories of Crown corporations and their subsidiaries.

I therefore invite the honourable senator to question Mr. Hnatyshyn on this matter when he comes before the committee. Blanket application of the act to all subsidiaries of crown corporations would be, as Prime Minister Trudeau suggested at the time, quite a difficult and impractical step to take.

The honourable senator also referred to the privatization of crown corporations, and she notes that this bill does not refer to that matter. I have a copy of Bill C-129, which I believe is still before the House of Commons, which provides, in effect, for the privatization of Air Canada, and I had sent for it to confirm, as I trust I shall, that under clause 10 of the bill that would privatize Air Canada, under "general", the Official Languages Act applies to the corporation. I think that it makes far more sense to deal with these matters on a case-by-case basis than to try to cover them in the Official Languages Act of the country.

Honourable senators, before I sit down, I do want to deal briefly, but I hope thoroughly, with the speech given yesterday afternoon by our colleague Senator Everett—and I am sorry that he is not here this afternoon. I appreciate the speech that he made. I appreciate his generous view of bilingualism in Canada and his support for this bill. Senator Everett did express some views, however, with which I must take issue, and he made some statements of fact which I know are incorrect.

First of all, in dealing with Manitoba, the honourable senator said that Parliament some several years ago had adopted a resolution calling upon Manitoba to become officially bilingual. I think that it is important to note that the resolutions—and there were two of them—passed in 1983 by Parliament with regard to Manitoba did not "call upon Manitoba to become bilingual." They called upon Manitoba to respect the Constitution of Canada. They called on Manitoba to respect the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on that matter. When it appeared that there was some undue delay in the process, they called on the Government of Manitoba of the day to persist in its efforts.

The resolutions were proposed on October 6, 1983, by Prime Minister Trudeau, and again on February 24, 1984, by Mr.

[Senator Murray.]

Axworthy, the then Minister of Transport. Indeed, Mr. Trudeau in the first paragraph of his speech said:

By the resolution which is before the House, we, in this chamber, are called upon to do two things: first, to ensure that the Constitution will be obeyed; and, second, to right a wrong.

So Parliament's resolution of that day was addressed to a province which had been found by the Supreme Court to have constitutional obligations with regard to bilingualism.

The Government of Canada of the day had been prepared to support a constitutional amendment that would have relieved Manitoba of some of its constitutional obligations in return for the provision of certain services to the francophone minority. Honourable senators will recall that an agreement to that effect had been worked out between the Pawley government and the franco-Manitobans; an agreement that would have relieved Manitoba of some of those obligations—translating all of the statutes and so forth—in return for providing certain services. That was the great controversy of the day. But the Government of Canada and, I think it is fair to say, all parties in Parliament were prepared to go along at the time, but, unfortunately, this reasonable approach did not lead to a constitutional amendment, and the matter played out as we know it did.

Senator Everett referred to appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada supported by the federal government respecting statutes in both official languages. He alleges, for example, that the federal government had not provided funds to the anglophone minority in Quebec to challenge Bill 101. I have to tell the house that this again is at variance with the facts. The Supreme Court will eventually render a decision on the signage provisions of Bill 101, and appeals in this matter have been supported financially by the Government of Canada under the Court Challenges Program. Indeed, it is widely believed that the creation of the Court Challenges Program in March 1978 was seen as the government's response to Bill 101, which had been adopted in the late summer of 1977.

Mr. Trudeau was not prepared to entertain the suggestion that the power of disallowance, for example, should be used by the federal government in a matter of this kind. His response was that people should challenge the law in the courts. When they did challenge the law in the courts, his government, and I think the succeeding government, assisted financially. The government provided funding under the Court Challenges Program for Procureur Général du Québec v. Chaussure Brown. The funding began prior to September 1984 and it was complete at the two lower levels of the process and partial at the Supreme Court level.

I should remind the house, and I think this is important in view of Senator Everett's statements, that Canada filed a separate factum, both in the Procureur Général du Québec v. Chaussure Brown and in the case of Victor Herbert Devine et al v. Procureur Général du Québec. Canada filed a separate factum in both cases, arguing against Quebec's signage law on the basis of the Charter's freedom-of-expression provisions and the improper use of the "notwithstanding" clause by the Quebec National Assembly.

Our colleague Senator Gigantès put it very well yesterday afternoon. The francophone minorities in most of Canada would give anything to have the constitutional rights, the legislated rights and the administered rights that the English minority enjoy and have enjoyed for many years in the province of Quebec. It is true, as Senator Gigantès has said, that there is really no valid comparison that can be drawn between the rights that are enjoyed by the Anglophones, and have been enjoyed by the Anglophones, in Quebec and those that francophone minorities in much of Canada have struggled and are still struggling to obtain; rights which, as we know, in some cases were there when they entered Confederation but were taken away from them by the English majority in later years.

We understand the desire of the Government of Quebec, of course, to ensure that the French language remains a vital force in Canada, but it must be noted that only Quebec provides public support for three universities that operate in the minority language: McGill, as Senator Gigantès has noted, Concordia and Bishop's. There are only two other provinces that support universities that operate solely in the minority language: New Brunswick, which supports l'Université de Moncton; and Nova Scotia, which supports l'Université St. Anne at Pointe l'Eglise.

This government—and, indeed, our predecessors—have never supported the restriction of minority language rights in any province. The government encourages the provinces to be as generous as possible. In my opening speech on Bill C-72 I commended Ontario and Quebec—Ontario for Bill 8 on the provision of services in French, and Quebec on its recent law on the provision of social and health services in English.

When asked what he thought a particular premier should do about minority rights, the Prime Minister stated—and he applied the statement to every other premier—that linguistic minorities should be treated in the way that we would want to be treated if we were in that position. He has been a champion of linguistic justice in all his public career and even before that. I do not think anyone can put in doubt—Senator Everett did not—the underlying commitment of this government to linguistic justice across this country. Senator Everett is mistaken in the inference that he draws that there is some kind of double standard on the part of the Government of Canada. Minority rights are indivisible.

I hope, therefore, that these comments will help clarify the situation regarding the current status of English and French, both in western Canada and Quebec. I assure Senator Everett that the government is even-handed in its support of anglophone and francophone minorities.

I do appreciate his support for Canada's languages, and I would encourage him and others to take an active part in dispelling myths and support a more generous approach by all governments in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before a motion is put relating to third reading, may I suggest that we proceed to Motions? There is a motion in the name of Senator Wood, for which she gave notice on Tuesday. That motion provides for the setting up of a special committee to study Bill C-72. I infer wide, if not unanimous, support for sending the bill to such a committee. Since I expect that Senator Murray will move that it be referred to a committee before third reading, we would be well advised to set that committee up in case, as I suspect, it is the committee he would like to send it to.

Senator Murray: That would be quite acceptable to us.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL C-72

SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Leave having been given to proceed to Motions.

Hon. Dalia Wood, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, July 12, 1988, moved:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to consider, after second reading, the Bill C-72, An Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada;

That, notwithstanding Rule 66(1)(b), the special committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Bonnell, Cools, Côtteau, David, De Bané, Guay, Ottenheimer, Robichaud, Tremblay and Wood;

That the quorum of the special committee be four members; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I move that Bill C-72 be referred to the special committee just now set up for that purpose.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Murray, bill referred to Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-72.

MACEDONIA

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Gigantès calling the attention of the Senate to the question of Macedonia.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I am grateful to have this opportunity to tell you about an issue that was brought up repeatedly when I was in Greece with a parliamentary delegation. It is an issue that is delicate and threatens the excellent relations between the Government of Canada and the Government of Greece. Unfortunately, it also affects the view that Greece takes of NATO. The view that the Greek government takes of NATO is one that should concern Canada.

The Greek government, I was told when I was there, does not believe it would be defended by NATO military units either in the event of a Turkish attack on Greek islands or, in the worst eventuality, of Yugoslavia and Bulgaria driving down to the Aegean Sea during a Turkish attack on Greek islands.

Athens expects that in such circumstances NATO members would not offer military help to Greece but would merely express disapproval of the attacks and, at most, interrupt diplomatic and commercial relations with the aggressors.

The Greeks do not feel that their fears are paranoid, nor do they dismiss as so much rhetoric statements by Turkish parliamentarians laying claim to Greek islands. According to the ministers with whom I met, a Turkish government might well attack Greek islands, as it invaded Cyprus in 1974, to protect itself politically from internal popular discontent.

Whereas, in 1964, U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson told Ankara in writing that he would use the Sixth Fleet to prevent a Turkish attack on Cyprus, the Americans made no such threat in 1974 and allowed a de facto partition of the island. Greeks of all parties see this as "proof" that the U.S. favours Turkey over Greece.

The British, who are guarantors by treaty of an independent Cyprus, made no real effort to stop the Turkish invasion in 1974 or to argue convincingly that, since the Greek Cypriots, who favoured union with Greece, had been neutralized and discredited by the Turkish invasion, Ankara had made its point and should have withdrawn its troops.

Given such American and British indifference to Greek feelings, it is not inconceivable, the Greeks think, that some Turkish government might attack the Aegean Islands to distract Turkish public opinion from domestic troubles.

To justify their fears of Yugoslav and Bulgarian incursions into northern Greece, in the event of a Turkish attack in the Aegean Sea, the Greeks cite Yugoslav claims to Macedonia and Bulgarian claims to Thrace. I believe you will be shown some maps that illustrate this, maps printed in a Canadian publication. Greek ministers are critical of Canada for not seeing in such Yugoslav and Bulgarian claims a possible build-up of a case for an invasion: "The Turks and the Greeks are at war. We are intervening to protect our brother Macedonians," the Yugoslavs would say, or, "our brother Thracians," the Bulgarians would say. The Athens government maintains that there are no such people in Greece as "Macedonian brothers" of Yugoslavia or "Thracian brothers" of Bulgaria.

Support by Canadian officials, elected or otherwise, for non-Greek Macedonians laying some sort of territorial claim to Greek Macedonia is considered by this Greek government, as by all its predecessors, to be a thoughtless encouragement of a potential conflict in the Balkans.

Honourable senators have in their hands a photostat of a map from a publication financed by the Canadian government, a publication that lays a so-called Macedonian claim to an important part of Greece.

Such Canadian support for "people who wish Greece harm", I was told, could generate a feeling that Canadians in authority do not care to learn the facts about Greece and that these Canadians are unduly influenced by a British hostility to Greece that lingers from the days of the Greek-Cypriot independence movement; and by U.S. dislike for Mr. Andreas Papandreu, a former U.S. citizen who is much more assertive and prickly in his relations with Washington than any Greek leader heretofore. Incidentally, these Greek complaints are not particularly addressed to this particular government; similar complaints were voiced before against the government of Mr. Trudeau and earlier against previous governments. This is not a partisan issue I am bringing forth.

I replied that this Canadian government, like its predecessors, had never said or done anything that could remotely be interpreted as encouraging any claims against the territorial integrity of Greece and that, moreover, Canadian governments have not supported secession movements based on linguistic or ethnic distinctions anywhere, anytime. That happens to be fact: No Canadian government has given such support.

The answer of my interlocutors in Greece was that, in this field, the Canadians have occasionally sinned out of ignorance, which may be an excuse, but it is no less damaging for Greece.

With the increasing likelihood that the U.S. might withdraw its forces from Europe, regardless of what its NATO allies think, local wars that do not involve great power intervention become more likely. Thus, the Greeks fear that the danger of attacks by Communist countries on Greece becomes more likely.

Even if the American bases remain in Greece, the Greek ministers who spoke to me did not believe that the U.S. would come to the aid of Greece militarily in the event of Yugoslav or Bulgarian invasions of northern Greece during a Turkish attack on Greek islands in the Aegean.

Consequently, the Greek decision on whether the U.S. bases should stay or not will hinge on what additional financial advantages the continued U.S. presence might represent for Greece as opposed to the disadvantages of closing them down. A Greek minister told me: "This is not an issue of having a friend around in a spare room but of how much rent we can get from an unloving tenant versus how much it would cost us to terminate his lease." It is coldblooded, but that is what I was told. The government in Athens claims that Turkey gets NATO weapons on much better terms than does Greece, and this is not easily acceptable in Athens.

I come to the specific issue which bothers the Greeks, and that is: Who are the Macedonians? There are people in Canada who call themselves Macedonians.

In the fourth century B.C., after the death of Alexander the Great, his empire was divided among his generals. One division, the kingdom of Macedonia, represented the core domain of Alexander's father, covering what is now Greek Macedonia, southern Yugoslavia and southwestern Bulgaria, as honourable senators will see from the map I have given them. Eventually, this territory became a Roman province.

The Christian Church established an Archbishop of Macedonia, covering the same territory as the Roman province. The eastern Roman empire, that is, the Byzantine empire, retained the province of Macedonia as an administrative division.

Slav-speaking people invaded that part of the Balkans in the sixth century A.D., as did Turks later. The Turkish empire dealt with its subject people through their religious leaders, for instance, the Greek Orthodox Archbishop in Macedonia.

The people of the Turkish province called Macedonia, when they emigrated to Canada, among other places, called themselves Macedonians because they came from a Turkish province called Macedonia. Hence the identification of some Slav-speaking immigrants as Macedonians in Canadian municipal records from the early years of this century.

However, Greek-speaking immigrants from Macedonia generally identified themselves as Greek. Why did not the Slav-speaking Macedonians identify themselves as Yugoslavs? It was because Yugoslavia, a union of various Slav linguistic groups, was not so named until 1929. The various Slav tribes inhabiting Macedonia did not identify with the Slav nation states of the kingdoms of Serbia and Bulgaria because the various Slavic tribes inhabiting Macedonia did not feel their interests were taken into account by the kingdoms of Serbia and Bulgaria in the early twentieth century. Apparently, they still do not. That is why Macedonia is a separate political division of the Yugoslavian federation. However, the Greeks inhabiting the Turkish province of Macedonia at the beginning of this century thought of themselves as Greek and were fighting an independence guerrilla war against the Turks.

A 1909 Turkish census showed that in the part of ancient Macedonia which is now in Greece—as you can see from the map—the overwhelming majority of the population, that is, 86 per cent, attended religious services in Greek, in Greek Orthodox churches. The emphasis is on churches, because the Turks divided their subject people by religion.

In the 1911-1912 Balkan war, Greece, Bulgaria and Serbia—the precursor of Yugoslavia—evicted Turkey and divided the ancient province of Macedonia among themselves. The Greeks took the part adjacent to Greece, which had had an overwhelming Greek population in the 1909 census which I mentioned a short while ago.

There were exchanges of population—in other words, uprootings. Slav-speaking Macedonians who had lived under the Turks in what is now Greek Macedonia felt they had lost their homeland when they moved to Yugoslavia or Bulgaria. There were Greek-speaking Macedonians who had lived in what is now Bulgaria or Yugoslavia who also felt they had lost their homeland when they moved to Greece.

Yugoslavia has tried to soothe the regional nationalism of its southern republic, Macedonia, by encouraging the people of that region to think of expansion into Greece. In a sense, the Communist guerrilla war against Greece from 1944 to 1950 represented an attempt by the Iron Curtain countries to push down to the Mediterranean at the expense of Greece.

In both world wars, Bulgaria seized Greek and Yugoslav parts of ancient Macedonia, but lost and had to give them up. This shows how old land claims are persistent, even if not valid.

Similar observations can be made about Thrace. Any art critic would say that its ancient artistic heritage is clearly Greek, but it is exhibited here in Canada by Bulgaria as Bulgarian. The Greeks are sensitive to such things. "It's as if the Japanese took credit for Westminster Abbey," I was told in Athens, "or as if the British claimed Joan of Arc." Claims by Slavs in Yugoslav Macedonia that Alexander the Great was theirs caused similar indignation. The Slavs came to the Balkans nine centuries after Alexander's death.

But what does ancient history matter? What do such symbols matter? Well, the fact is that they do. The British are proud of Good Queen Bess and of Drake, and surely no one in Canada thinks that is wrong. The very Greek inhabitants of the Greek province of Macedonia are proud that Alexander the Great was born in Greek Macedonia to a father who spoke Greek and was Greek. They do not forget that Alexander was tutored by another Macedonian, Aristotle, who never doubted himself that he was Greek. This pride in their Greek ancestry kept the Macedonians Greek through centuries of foreign domination, which they fought, side by side with the Western Allies, through the two World Wars and in a brutal war against Communist guerrillas backed by the Iron Curtain countries of the Stalin era.

The Greeks see in this "cultural expropriation" an attempt to keep alive Bulgarian claims on Greek territory.

They are puzzled by the lack of sensitivity shown towards these issues by Canadians who were so incensed when General De Gaulle shouted "Vive le Québec libre." The whole point at issue, honourable senators, is a booklet, published with the use of Canadian funds, entitled "Macedonians", which contains this map which you have seen and which says that Greek Macedonia should be returned to the Macedonians. The Greeks say that Macedonia is in the hands of the Greek Macedonians.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987—MOTION TO TRANSMIT COPY OF SENATE RESOLUTION TO LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES AND FOUR NATIONAL ABORIGINAL ORGANIZATIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Watt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.:

That the Honourable the Speaker do transmit to the Legislative Assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, and urge that the provinces do likewise; and

That a copy of the said Resolution be transmitted by the Honourable the Speaker to the Legislative Assemblies of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories and to the four National Organizations representing the aboriginal peoples of Canada.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if Senator Watt speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name. Senator Watt and I have discussed this motion. It is in two parts, the first of which proposes that the Speaker transmit to the legislative assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada that was adopted by the Senate on April 21, 1988, and urge that the provinces do likewise. The second part of the motion is that a copy of the said Resolution be transmitted by the Speaker to the legislative assemblies of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories and to the four national organizations representing the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Senator Watt, I and others have agreed that it would be preferable to have this motion split into two separate motions. If that is done, I am happy to yield to him and to second his motions.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, earlier today Senator Flynn was present. When he left he asked that, if this motion came up, it be allowed to stand in his name. I just want to ask that that be done.

Senator Frith: We will not dispose of the matter today. If Senator Phillips wishes to adjourn the debate on the two motions in Senator Flynn's name, of course we will not resist that.

[Senator Gigant]

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987—MOTION TO TRANSMIT COPY OF SENATE RESOLUTION TO LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES AND FOUR NATIONAL ABORIGINAL ORGANIZATIONS DIVIDED—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, with the concurrence of the seconder of my motion, Senator Len Marchand, I now ask for the consent of the Senate to split the motion before us into two.

The first motion would now read:

That the Honourable the Speaker do transmit to the Legislative Assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, and urge that the provinces do likewise.

The second motion would now read:

That a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, be transmitted by the Honourable the Speaker to the Legislative Assemblies of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories and to the four National Organizations representing the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

I make this request at the suggestion of Senator Lang and others who have spoken to me privately. If I understand them correctly, they are suggesting that we should not be mixing apples and oranges in the same motion.

They have made the point that, if the Senate is to institute the practice of communicating directly with the legislative assembly of each province in order to facilitate the Constitution amendment procedure found in Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982, we should do it in a separate and self-contained motion. This would leave no doubt that the Senate would be acting as one of the 12 legislative bodies involved in authorizing the proclamation of an amendment to the Constitution.

Nevertheless, I maintain that the Senate should also communicate with the territorial assemblies and the four national organizations for the reason I originally outlined when I made my motion.

Although these bodies do not play a role in the Constitution amendment formula we are now operating under, I feel the Senate has a responsibility to communicate with these groups through a separate resolution. As I stated in my original speech, the rights of the aboriginal peoples could be affected by our resolution, and they have been recognized as legitimate participants in Canada's constitutional reform process.

Moreover, after the special emphasis the Senate placed on northern concerns with the Meech Lake Accord, I think that it is only natural that we keep the people of the territories informed of the results of our deliberations by communicating with them through their legislative assemblies.

I therefore ask that the Senate give its consent to the splitting of the motion, and that we adopt the two motions at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps we should have it understood that the original motion has now been split into two separate motions. I take it that Senator Phillips will move the adjournment of the debate on both motions in Senator Flynn's name.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: That is correct.

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I understand that these motions require a seconder. Since I was the seconder of the original motion, I would like it clearly put on the record that I second both of these motions as they now stand.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, although I offered to second these motions in the comments I made earlier, I am quite content to yield to Senator Marchand as seconder of both motions.

On motion of Senator Phillips, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I believe that all remaining orders stand.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Agreed.

Senator Frith: At this point I believe Senator Murray wishes to revert to Question Period.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I should like to revert for a moment or two to the oral Question Period. My purpose in doing so is to deal briefly with some questions that were put in my absence today by Senator Bonnell. I believe it is urgent that I provide a reply at once.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (1640)

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

STATUS OF MR. GANONG—APPROVAL OF PAYMENTS TO BOARD MEMBERS—INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED LOAN IRREGULARITIES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, earlier today Senator Bonnell put a number of questions on the record to me in my capacity as minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

The first question was:

[Is it] true that Mr. Ganong, of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency board, has resigned, and, if so, the reason behind his resignation? And is it a fact that the members of the ACOA board are allowed to approve large sums of money for themselves as directors of that board?

Honourable senators, first, the person in question is Mr. David Ganong of St. Stephen, New Brunswick. Mr. Ganong was not a member of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency board; he was a member of the Atlantic Enterprise Board, which also reports to me. He resigned some time ago, stating as his reason that the company of which he is a principal intended to apply for substantial financial assistance from agencies of the Government of Canada for the purpose of modernization, expansion and so forth and he felt it would be more appropriate for him not to be a member of the board. He explained to me that as a principal of the company he would have to carry this application personally, making representations to officials, answering questions of officials and perhaps board members, and that he would feel more comfortable if he resigned.

I explained to him that the obligation on part-time members of such boards is that when a matter in which they have an interest is being dealt with they must declare their interest and must absent themselves from any consideration or participation in the deliberations related to that application. Nevertheless, as I told him in a letter, which I can table here next week if honourable senators are interested, I appreciated the reasons why, in this case, he felt it appropriate to resign, and I did not disagree with his reasons. In fact, I agreed with his course of action and accepted his resignation.

With regard to the next part of the question, "And is it a fact that the members of the ACOA board are allowed to approve large sums of money for themselves as directors of that board?", that is phrased in rather unfortunate terms, to put it mildly.

Members of the ACOA board, and the other boards in the Atlantic provinces which report to me, are, in part, provincial public servants appointed on the recommendation of their respective governments and, in part, private-sector representatives who enjoy the highest reputation in the business communities and provinces from which they come.

The policy which has existed for some considerable time, so far as I am aware, concerning part-time members of such boards is as I described it a few minutes ago to the house. When a matter in which they have an interest comes up, they may not take part in the consideration of, or deliberations of any kind relating to, that application. The ACOA board itself does not deal with applications from commercial firms; it deals largely in a policy-advisory capacity and does consider applications from non-profit institutions that wish to play some role in the economic development of the Atlantic region.

Senator Frith: Mr. McPhail gave some evidence about that in the committee.

Senator Murray: Yes, I am aware of that. The president designate of the agency, Mr. McPhail, has already given some evidence before the Senate Committee on National Finance on this matter, and we are prepared to give more evidence, if more evidence is required on these matters.

The next question put by Senator Bonnell was:

While checking into the ACOA board, could the acting leader also find out if it is true that the ACOA board is now under police investigation because of loan irregularities?

Honourable senators, I am astounded by the question. I can only tell the house that neither I nor any ministerial colleague with whom I have had an opportunity to consult in the last hour or so, nor any government official, nor any official of the agency with whom I have consulted in the last little while, has the faintest idea what Senator Bonnell is referring to here. We have not the slightest reason to believe that any police investigation is under way with regard to the ACOA board or, indeed, any other board under my ministerial jurisdiction.

I trust that if Senator Bonnell has any information to the contrary he will place it on the record in order to substantiate this question; and, if he has no such information, I trust that he will hasten to withdraw any inference that the question may have left.

Honourable senators, I would simply say in conclusion that when I appointed all the members of the ACOA board I called each of them on the telephone to ask them to take part and to become members of the board; I read to each of them from a document which was in front of me, which stated what their obligations are with respect to conflict of interest. The document that was provided to me by the government and the provisions which I read to the respective members of the ACOA board were the same provisions that had been made applicable to members of other boards.

Since that time the members of the ACOA board have received copies of the conflict-of-interest post-employment guidelines, which, while they are not really relevant to part-time members, do give a clear idea of the spirit, intent, purpose and letter of the government's conflict-of-interest policy.

Again, I am prepared at any time to answer any questions about these matters. I believe that the conduct of these boards is absolutely above reproach, as is the character and integrity of the people who are serving on them.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 19, 1988, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 19, 1988

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-126, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to speak to the request for leave for second reading of this bill.

I believe that at the beginning of this week we should have some understanding as to the government's plans for the Senate and its legislative program. I say that for two reasons. One is a statement by the Prime Minister that he intends to keep the House of Commons sitting all summer to implement the government's legislative plan and that, therefore, there will not be an election called and that the summer will be "business as usual." I take it that does not mean business as usual in the summer but business as usual in a normal sitting period.

The other reason I raise this point is that I, perhaps naively, had been working the last few weeks under the assumption that we had been granting cooperation to the government in its legislative program. Frequently we have given leave to deal with bills later the same day as the day of introduction in the Senate, often abridging further the time for second reading and helping, I thought, to get bills to committee for study. But, apparently, that cooperation is viewed by the government as "dilly-dallying" and "putting bills on hold". Apparently, granting, as we have for many bills, leave to proceed with first reading later the same day as the bill is introduced is looked upon by the government as putting the bill on hold. Mr. Lewis, when dealing with the ACOA Bill, said that that was not a single instance but was part of a back-and-forth legislative battle being waged between the two chambers in recent months. He said that by this morning the Senate would have 24 bills from the House of Commons "on hold".

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Frith: He said that there were 24 pieces of legislation with which the Senate was "dilly-dallying". He called on his Liberal colleagues in the other house to accept the responsibility for what the Liberal majority in the Senate is doing by putting these bills on hold and by dilly-dallying with them.

Honourable senators, let us look at the bills we are "putting on hold" and are "dilly-dallying" with.

In respect of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, last week we received the message back dealing with the Senate's amendments, the House accepting some of them, and we sent it immediately to committee. I am told that the committee will report this week. Is that "on hold"?

Bill C-105, dealing with railway safety, also received accelerated second reading and was sent to committee. It was ready to be dealt with last week and will be dealt with today at third reading, with Senator Stewart, as I understand it, making a speech.

Then we have Bill C-103, the ACOA Bill. We have just received a message from the House of Commons on that bill today. The largest portion of that bill was dealt with very speedily and sent back to the House of Commons so that it could be implemented. The members of the House of Commons took the position, because of a ruling by the Speaker of the House of Commons, that we had not been polite and had not asked for their concurrence, as we ourselves had thought we should.

Senator Flynn: Ha, ha, ha!

Senator Frith: We get a "Ha, ha, ha!" from the person who said we should not be polite. "Ho, ho, ho!"—Santa Claus is back. If he looks at the Debates of the Senate he will see that we wanted to include such a statement in the message, and, in fact, that that statement was contained in the message.

Senator Flynn: You don't know how to read!

Senator Frith: It was Senator Flynn, "Mr. Ho, ho, ho!", who was the one who said, "No, don't be polite. Just send it back. Don't even ask for their concurrence!" Look it up.

Passing on to another bill, Bill C-83, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, it also was referred to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration—as I recall, at Senator Flynn's suggestion and with our agreement. That committee referred it to a subcommittee and that subcommittee brought forward a draft report, which has been communicated to the leadership on the other side.

Then we come to Bill C-52, regarding coastal shipping. Again, that bill was given prompt treatment and was not put on hold and was not dilly-dallied with but was referred to a committee promptly. The committee discussed some amendments. The minister agreed with the amendments, but said that he wanted to consider the wording of the amendments because he, the minister, was going to have those suggested amendments checked by his officials. So, if that bill is on hold, it is the minister who has it on hold and the government that has it on hold.

An Hon. Senator: More dilly-dallying!

Senator Frith: I am not accusing the government of dilly-dallying, because it is not, but certainly the Senate does not have that bill on hold.

Then we come to Bill C-72, the Official Languages Bill, not exactly a minor piece of legislation. That was introduced in the Senate and we were ready to debate it on Tuesday last. Senator Murray, quite understandably, wanted to start the debate on the bill, so we dealt with it on Wednesday and Thursday. We then established a special committee on the spot to deal with that legislation and referred it to that special committee. That special committee has already been organized and will hold its first meeting today.

Senator Wood: Tomorrow.

Senator Frith: Tomorrow. More dilly-dallying! We have had two days' debate on that bill and it was referred to a special committee so that it could be given speedy passage. That special committee has already started and has held one meeting, but the government says that the Senate has put it on hold, that it is dilly-dallying.

Senator Barootes: What is your point?

Senator Frith: Senator Barootes has not yet got the point. I had forgotten that Senator Barootes, as we noted last week, is a bit of a slow learner, so I will try to speak more slowly.

Senator Flynn: No, just more intelligently.

Senator Frith: Then we come to Bill C-58, relating to the Criminal Code and international treaties. Again, that got accelerated treatment in the house and was referred to a committee. The committee has dealt with that bill and it will be reporting on it this week.

Bill C-61, proceeds of crime: accelerated treatment in the house, sent to committee, the committee has already studied it and will be reporting probably this week. Bill C-75, Canada-Nova Scotia energy agreement: as I recall it, we gave it one day's debate and sent it to the committee July 13. "Dilly-dallying"? Bill C-93, multiculturalism: ready for third reading today. Bill C-124, Canada Labour Code: again accelerated treatment; just got it last week, ready for third reading today. Bill C-121, Eldorado, is here now for first reading, as is Bill C-129. These are bills that I assume the leadership in the other place says we have put on hold. We only saw them ten minutes ago. Bill C-126, Bretton Woods, first reading today; Bill C-92, first reading today; Bill C-73, up for first reading today, along with possibly Bill C-30—all here only for minutes.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Barootes: I guess we should have pre-studied them all!

Senator Olson: No. I guess your comments are inaccurate.

Senator Frith: Let us just realize what we are being accused of. What the Senate is being accused of is dilly-dallying. We are told there are 24 pieces of legislation. Well, there are not. If you take Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as two separate bills, there are one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven—Are you following, Senator Barootes?

An Hon. Senator: You're going too fast; he's out of fingers!

Senator Frith: —twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen and nineteen. There are 19 bills before the Senate, not 24. And of those 19 bills we have yet to have nine for more than ten minutes. Is that dilly-dallying, taking ten minutes?

An Hon. Senator: No. It is shocking.

Senator Frith: Bill C-121 and Bill C-129—there are two bills. Three, four, five, six, seven of the 18 bills. He must be including them, because he said, "by tomorrow morning." And he is fed up with our dilly-dallying over bills that we have not even seen. He says, "We regret very much these delaying tactics." How could he say we were going to delay these bills when we had not ever received them?

Senator Bosa: He is a master of anticipation!

Senator Frith:

This is not a single instance. By tomorrow morning—I am reading from July 18, so when he says "tomorrow morning" he means today.

—the Senate will have twenty-four bills from the House of Commons on hold, 24 pieces of legislation with which the Senate is dilly-dallying, on which it is not going forward.

So, honourable senators—

Senator MacDonald: A simple "no" would suffice.

Senator Frith: I notice you listened long enough before you said that. Thank you for your attention. There's one fast learner.

Honourable senators, according to my understanding, we have at least three of these bills already: Bill C-137, which must be one of those with which the leader in the other place says we are dilly-dallying; the message on Bill C-103; and these other bills that we will receive. Since the Prime Minister says it is business as usual and that we are going to be sitting all summer anyway, and since if we grant short notice on any of these bills we are accused of dilly-dallying and putting them on hold, I cannot understand—although we are prepared to listen to a reason—why, against that background, we should in any way abridge the time provided in the rules and why we should not proceed with business as usual.

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doody: Well, honourable senators, thank you, thank you, thank you. I appreciate the applause before I speak, because I doubt very much that I will get any afterwards!

All I can say, honourable senators, is that we try to conduct the business in this place as it suits this place. What they do in the House of Commons is beyond my control, as I suspect it was beyond the control of my counterparts when they were in this position. We get government business and we deal with government business as it comes. The cooperation that we get from honourable senators opposite is appreciated. When honourable senators opposite see fit to go into further detail on bills or to slow down the progress, for whatever reason, then that is obviously their choice. The same choice applies to the legislation we have before us today. In an effort to conclude the business as quickly as possible in order to try to get some time off this summer, I thought that it would be helpful to deal with these bills at second reading today, get them into committee and let the committees deal with them next week. But if it is the wish of the majority of this place that we deal with them in the normal course of events, with two days' notice, and follow the rules strictly, as they were written, then that is fine with us. We are prepared to stay here to deal with government business for as long as the majority of the Senate feels that we should.

● (1410)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Does the government have any plan other than the one suggested by the Prime Minister, namely, that we would be sitting all summer?

Senator Doody: I am not sure that that is exactly or entirely what the Prime Minister said. Presumably, that is a news item that my friend was quoting from. I have not seen it nor do I know its context.

Senator Frith: I saw the Prime Minister say it on television.

Senator Doody: If the honourable senator got the impression that the Prime Minister would like to see the government's business dealt with before we adjourn, I am sure that is exactly what the Prime Minister would like to see, whether or not it takes all summer to do it. I hope that is not a necessity. I hope that we get the agenda dealt with long before the summer is over. I may be wrong; it may take all summer; but, if that is so, then that is what we are going to have to do.

Senator Guay: The Prime Minister is on holidays.

Senator Doody: I did not mean to interrupt you!

Senator Guay: The Prime Minister is on holidays while we are sitting here. He has taken his holiday.

Senator Doody: Thank you; that was very helpful. I should have thought it would be in the interests of all of us to move the agenda along in anticipation of some time off this summer. But, as I say, the rumours are rampant in this place that there is a hope to clear up by the end of this week in the other place. That is a strong rumour; that is not a fact. I do not know how firm an agreement, if any, has been reached. I know that is the aim and the ambition and the hope of some of the officials in the other place.

I had hoped that we might be in a position to go along with that in step, but it may take us a little longer. It may not be possible under the present circumstances, in which event we will simply have to do the best we can within the rules of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I was not dealing with a rumour. The Prime Minister said on television, after a meeting at Meech Lake, if you will pardon the expression, that there will not be an election and that the government will be having the House of Commons sit all summer until the government's legislative program is completed. So I am going to have to rely on what the Prime Minister said, that that is the plan that the government has for Parliament for the summer.

If Senator Doody is in a position to say—and maybe tomorrow he will be—that the Prime Minister's plan has changed so that Parliament will be taking a break this Thursday or Friday, or sooner or later, then I think we should consider giving accelerated treatment to acceptable legislation that might meet a Royal Assent deadline this week in anticipation of a summer break.

In the absence of that, we will follow the Prime Minister's suggestion or plan that it will be business as usual, and we will not be granting leave for any abridgement of time provided by the rules. We are quite prepared, however, to listen to a change in the government's plan or a clarification of that plan tomorrow. In the meantime, business as usual.

Senator Guay: We should follow the Prime Minister's example and take a break too!

Senator Doody: I assume, then, that what has been said in response to a request for leave on Bill C-126 will be said in response to similar requests on Bills C-73, C-129, C-121, C-110, C-92 and C-30. Would that be a reasonable assumption?

Senator Frith: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Doody: It was our hope that the bills would be read the second time as soon as possible, but apparently honourable senators opposite would prefer that we bring in some sort of schedule relating to the business of the other place. I am not in a position to do that. I cannot tell honourable senators when the other place is going to rise or when it is going to finish its business. I suggest that they consult with their party leaders in the House of Commons, and I will do so with ours. If we receive information in this regard, perhaps we can ask for leave tomorrow; otherwise, second reading will be given to these bills on Thursday next.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, second reading debate will begin for the bills on Thursday. We have already said that, if there is a change of plan, if there is some reason why we should make exceptions to facilitate the Prime Minister's plans, we can hear about it tomorrow. We are prepared to consider bringing these bills forward for debate tomorrow, if the government has other than a business-as-usual schedule.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the pleasure to inform the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons. This message has been distributed to each senator. Shall I dispense with the reading of the message?

Hon. Senators: Dispense!

HOUSE OF COMMONS
Canada

Monday, July 18, 1988

Ordered,— That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the text of the Message made by the Senate to Bill C-103, An Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, because this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87, as recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General to this House, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and asks that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form.

ATTEST

ROBERT MARLEAU
The Clerk of the House of Commons

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, now.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, that the message from the House of Commons be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is hardly necessary for me to place on the record the sequence of events that has landed us in the situation in which we find ourselves today with regard to this bill. These events have attracted considerable attention and comment in the nation's media, in particular in the media in the Atlantic provinces, which is the region most concerned with this bill.

Honourable senators, we cannot, I suppose, take what is called judicial notice of statements made in the media. Nevertheless, I have taken personal notice of the statements attributed to the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate on this matter within the last couple of days. If he has been correctly reported, I take it that his position and that of his colleagues is that they do not intend to contest the ruling that has been made by Mr. Speaker in the other place; the decision that has been taken by the other place; and the message that has been sent by them to us to the effect that the bill should be sent back to the House of Commons from this place as one bill, not as two bills.

That being the case, I felt that the most expeditious way of dealing with this matter at this time would be to refer the message from the House of Commons to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. Indeed, the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition has indicated, in the remarks attributed to him in the media in the last couple of days, that it is the intention of honourable senators opposite to deal with the bill as one and to give it further examination in committee. It is with a view to expediting this process that I have made the motion which Your Honour has just read to the house.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to say at the beginning that the quotations to which Senator Murray referred in his comments, as far as I am concerned, were accurate.

However, the issues that have been raised by the motion that has been made by Senator Murray are quite numerous and complicated. I think it is impossible today to deal with the motion, if only for the reason that I have not had an opportunity to read the debate in the House of Commons on the message itself. Before dealing with Senator Murray's motion it is necessary to examine the argumentation made in the House of Commons, if any, in support of the motion which it adopted. If the argumentation is so convincing that the division of Bill C-103 resulted in changing the considerations, conditions, and so on, of the supply and grants-in-aid in Bill C-103—if that contention were validated by the argumentation—one might have pause. It is for that reason that I should like to read the debate.

Let us bear in mind that the Senate, this body, sent the message to the House of Commons on July 7, 1988. The Speaker reported the message on July 8, and it appeared in the order paper of the House of Commons on the following Monday. The action taken by the government on that Friday—the day after the message was transmitted from this house—preceded any ruling by His Honour the Speaker. Indeed, the reasons advanced in the message from the House of Commons are not at all adjudicated by His Honour in his ruling.

However, I mention the time factor because the House of Commons kept the message from the Senate for two weeks less two days. Therefore, I hope that no one will accuse us of dilly-dallying or of delaying tactics if we take perhaps a few days to deal with the message from the House of Commons and the motion made by Senator Murray, because there are a number of things I believe ought to be said on behalf of the Senate on the issues that have arisen.

Honourable senators, in order that misapprehension will not occur, let me say that it is certainly not my intention to contest the bill or to persist further in advocating the division of the bill. In my judgment, that division had real merit, in that, first of all, it would have ensured that the government could enact the ACOA portion of Bill C-103 on July 8 and that the Senate would be able to continue with its consideration of the separate subject of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. I believe that those merits justified the proposal made in the Senate.

However, the House of Commons has said, "No, we disagree with your proposal," and it is not, in my view, worth the further effort to continue that process, because the advantages were really in the way of facilitating the government legislation. If our proposal had been accepted, ACOA, Part A of the original bill, would be the law today. It is not; but that does not end the matter.

Senator Murray has now moved that the message from the House of Commons go back to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, where it may be considered. The result of that consideration is unknown, but we all know that if further progress is to be made the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will have to begin anew any consideration of Bill C-103, because Bill C-103 has not been reported out of that committee at all, and, in the words of the message from the House of Commons, the undivided Bill C-103 will engage the attention of that committee.

Certainly, as I said in comments to the press, it is not our intention to deal with Bill C-103 except in a normal and orderly way and, if justified, to move amendments. If amendments are unnecessary or are not justified, they will not be moved.

With those preliminary comments, I should like honourable senators to have an opportunity to read the debate in the other place and consider Senator Murray's motion further. Now may I adjourn the debate?

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

ENERGY

TAR SANDS PROCESSING PLANT, FORT McMURRAY, ALBERTA—GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL COMMITMENT—DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF PROJECT

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. I have put this question to him a number of times previously. It has to do with the so-called OSLO project near Fort McMurray, Alberta. The Edmonton Journal has a front page story today indicating that the federal government has made an offer to a number of companies involved—I think there are six—to “kick start” the project with about $1 billion of grants, plus some guaranteed loans, to get this project under way.

I should like to ask the minister if it is a fact that an offer of this magnitude has been made by the federal government to the project managers of the OSLO project.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry, I cannot add anything to what I have already told the house on that matter.

Discussions are continuing, and I will make inquiries to see whether there is anything further to report on that matter at this time.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, according to the Minister of Energy for Alberta, within the last few days something new was added to the federal government's participation in this project. Would the minister care to comment on what has been added that was not offered before?

I can tell him that there are thousands of people in Alberta who are looking forward with great anticipation to this project getting under way. Therefore, when the federal government is making offers so that the project can be initiated, I think the minister has a responsibility to let the public know.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the interest of my honourable friend and of the people of Alberta, but I have to tell him that the federal and provincial governments and the sponsors are still reviewing proposals. That is why it is not open to me to divulge the contents of the various proposals that have been made and that are being considered. Negotiations are continuing.

Senator Olson: May I try one more time?

Can the minister give us some indication of when the project will be under way? He need not tell us whether the amount involved is $1 billion in grants or $1.5 billion in guaranteed loans; if that is still a matter of negotiation, so be it. Could the minister give us an indication of when the federal government hopes the project will get under way if the amounts and the other terms and conditions are acceptable to the three parties involved?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am sorry, I cannot do that today.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PARAGUAY—STATUS OF SENOR HERMEN RAFAEL SAGUIER—GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE AND ACTION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he will take the necessary steps to inquire into the safety, freedom and whereabouts of Senor Hermen Rafael Saguier, a citizen of Paraguay.

I would be glad to share with the leader or his staff the small amount of information I have on this man. As I understand the situation, he was given political asylum in the Colombian Embassy in Paraguay this spring, but voluntarily left that protection after accomplishing his objective of gaining asylum in that embassy for a fellow citizen who was being persecuted by the Paraguayan government.

To be specific, will the Leader of the Government in the Senate inquire whether the Government of Canada has taken any steps in relation to this matter; whether it has undertaken any inquiries; whether it has any information about this man's freedom and whereabouts; and, specifically, if, in the knowledge of the Government of Canada, Senor Saguier is now under house arrest or reprisal of any kind by the Government of Paraguay?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall inquire as to what information the Government of Canada has on this matter.

ENERGY

HEAVY OILS—CONSTRUCTION OF UPGRADER AT LLOYDMINSTER, SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT FUNDING AND ACTION

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

All of us have heard, with interest, of the federal government's participation in the development of the Hibernia oil fields in the Newfoundland area at a cost of about $3 billion to Canadian taxpayers.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Buckwold: I join with Senator Doody in applauding the deal.

However, my question relates to the situation in my area, namely, the heavy oil fields in Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, where for some years now there have been negotiations between the federal and provincial governments and the industry in terms of upgrading the heavy oil in a proven field of immense potential.

We hear conflicting rumours in the sense that one week the project is to go ahead, the next it is doubtful whether it will go ahead, and the next week the rumours may be to the effect that the project will be cancelled.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is one I think he will understand. Is the Government of Canada continuing active negotiations with the Province of Saskatchewan, the Province of Alberta and the industry itself? Is there any chance of an announcement in the near future? Is the government prepared to be as generous to that area of the country as it was to Newfoundland in supporting a project that, at the moment, may not be economically as sound as it was, considering the price of oil? Finally, can we look forward to an announcement in the future?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The honourable senator will be aware that some weeks ago an agreement was reached between the federal government, the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan and Husky Oil relating to the upgrader project. The honourable senator will also know that private equity contributions were made to finance half of the project costs.

My information is that Husky is currently in the process of negotiating with other private sector participants.

Senator Buckwold: Is it your response that the deal is ready to go forward once Husky is able to announce its successful negotiations with the other parties? By any chance, is the federal government prepared, as was the case in Hibernia, to sweeten the deal?

• (1450)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot comment on the last half of the question, of course.

Senator Frith: The leader could, but he does not want to.

Senator Murray: Husky sought and Husky received an agreement that would make it possible for that company to seek new private equity participation in the financing of the project. As I have indicated, this financial package was such, Husky felt, as to enable it to find other private sector partners. The government's participation generally is in respect of low interest loans to cover the other half of the total project costs.

I do not think I can go further than that at the moment. I am certainly not at liberty to release the agreement, pending conclusions of negotiations between Husky and its potential private sector partners.

CORRECTIONAL SERVICE OF CANADA

RESIGNATION OF COMMISSIONER AND DEPUTY COMMISSIONER—GOVERNMENT ACTION—REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, before putting my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, may I ask him, on the first occasion he is speaking to the Solicitor General, to commend him for his bold and imaginative action in launching an inquiry into the TV viewing habits of the inmates in Edmonton Institution? Of all of the problems facing the Correctional Service of Canada, I think the TV viewing habits of the inmates in Edmonton Institution is about the 784th, but this bold action by the minister, by way of a royal commission or an inquiry under the Inquiries Act, will no doubt result in great advances in corrections, and possibly lead to legislation and a special recall of Parliament when the public's safety is at risk.

My question is the same as the question I asked last week respecting the resignation of the man who had trouble following guidelines. At that time I asked:

Did the government ask for and receive the resignation of Mr. Rhéal LeBlanc, Commissioner, and Mr. Gordon Pinder, Deputy Commissioner, Offender Policy and Program Development?

Both men resigned within weeks of the report of the Comptroller General of Canada that the awarding of over $600,000 worth of contracts to an Edmonton firm was not in conformity with guidelines set by Treasury Board. It was the minister who said that the commissioner had trouble following guidelines. Those words are not mine.

My question again is: Did the government ask for the resignation of those two people?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do believe I answered the question insofar as it relates to Mr. LeBlanc. I answered the question in the negative.

I have asked for a report on the question insofar as it relates to Mr. Pinder.

Senator Hastings: As a supplementary, if I recall, the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicated that he would check his information to see that it was correct. I am wondering if he has had an opportunity to check his information and will now respond on behalf of the government. The Leader of the Government is a member of the executive and can speak for the government. I ask him again: Did the government ask for the resignation of Mr. LeBlanc and Mr. Gordon Pinder?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if any of the information I have placed on the record in this matter turns out to have been incorrect I shall hasten to correct the record.

ABORTION

BOROWSKI APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—GOVERNMENT REQUEST FOR DELAY—GOVERNMENT
LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would kindly elaborate upon the government's decision to ask the Supreme Court of Canada to delay its decision on the Borowski case.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it is the position of the government and of my colleague, the Attorney General, that, the government having indicated its intention to take a legislative approach on the question of abortion, the legislative position should be on the record before their lordships proceed with this case.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the debate on its proposed resolution of three options for a vote in the House of Commons on the abortion issue? Is it the intention of the government to pursue the debate on this resolution before the House of Commons recesses for the summer break?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know, and the honourable senator does not know, when, if at all, the House of Commons will adjourn for the summer break.

As to whether the government would proceed with a resolution relating to abortion, we wish to do so, but the modalities are now being discussed between the house leaders in the other place.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether he is aware of the reply of the Supreme Court of Canada with regard to the request of the Minister of Justice regarding delaying the Borowski decision.

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators, I am not.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if I understood correctly that the government is considering the possibility of having the House of Commons adjourn for the summer break while leaving the question of abortion in the unsatisfactory state in which it now rests? Will the members of the House of Commons go off on their summer break and leave the question of abortion in limbo?

Senator Murray: That question is both procedural and even theological in its implications, but, to come to the procedural part, that is a matter for the House of Commons. The government would like to proceed with a resolution on abortion so that the House of Commons could give a direction to the government as to the legislation that the House of Commons would want to see on this matter. Unfortunately, procedural problems have intervened with the resolution that was on the order paper. It has been withdrawn. The government house leader in the other place has been holding discussions with his counterparts to try to find a way of proceeding that would be acceptable on all sides.

There, I am afraid, I must leave it. The rest would be speculation on my part.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the answer given by the Leader of the Government implies that the question is now in the hands of backbenchers on the government side and in the hands of people in opposition parties who are not under the yoke of responsibility. Now he is saying—

Senator Murray: But who fought our proposal?

Senator Stewart: Is it the desire of the government to evade the responsibilities which rest with a government under a system of responsible government in connection with a matter as important as the abortion question?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the ultimate outcome of this matter will be determined by Parliament in response to a government bill that will be brought forward in the normal way and subject to the normal conventions of collective responsibility that we all understand.

In the meantime the government is of the view that it is in the public interest to allow individual members of Parliament the opportunity to vote their consciences on a matter that has moral and religious implications. Therefore, we decided to proceed by way of resolution. In this way the honourable members of the other place will have an opportunity to vote their individual consciences on this matter. The result of that vote will constitute a direction to the government to bring in legislation on this matter. We believe this is the way that best reconciles the need for the members to vote their personal convictions on a matter of this importance with the need to have legislation brought in by the government—legislation subject, as I say, to the usual conventions.

Senator Stewart: May I then ask whether the implication of this response is that the government proposes to do nothing with regard to this important matter until such time as it has been able to work out with opposition parties some form of procedural device for an opinion poll to be taken in the House of Commons? Is it only after that that the government will see fit to proceed in what the honourable senator has called the normal way?

Senator Murray: I regret that the honourable senator does not appreciate the uniqueness of this situation. I also regret that he finds it so reprehensible that, on a matter of this seriousness, individual members of the House of Commons are to have the opportunity to vote their moral convictions on a matter of this kind. The government will exhaust every avenue in order to obtain the cooperation of members of Parliament so that we can proceed in an orderly way. It should not be beyond the ingenuity of members of the other place to devise a procedure that will allow members of Parliament to vote their individual consciences and come to a collective point of view that will constitute an instruction to the government to bring in legislation.

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I am puzzled by the comments of the Leader of the Government about the need for ingenuity in the other place. Why does the government not bring in a bill and allow a vote on that? Why does the government need an ingenious solution to a traditional practice?

Senator Murray: We need that sort of solution because we want to give to all members of the House of Commons, including members who would otherwise be bound by cabinet solidarity, the opportunity to vote on a resolution their individual preferences in this matter.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, when was it established that members of a government are required to respect the convention of cabinet solidarity on a free vote? When was that new convention introduced—this afternoon?

Senator Murray: I regret to say that I do not understand the question the honourable senator has put.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): He has asked why the House cannot have a free vote on a bill. It's that simple.

Senator Stewart: If a bill is to be brought in by a private member or by a minister and it is announced that, as far as the government is concerned, a vote against that bill will not be regarded as entailing confidence and that all members of the government party are free to vote their consciences, why does the Leader of the Government in the Senate assert that ministers of the Crown will not be able to express their consciences in the same way as any other member of the House of Commons?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that would have been one option, but we felt that it would be expeditious to proceed in this way and to seek to ascertain what is the consensus of Parliament before bringing in a bill.

Senator Frith: The answer, honourable senators, is expedience.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, on a supplementary question, has this government ruled out a fourth option in its resolution to be presented to the House of Commons—a fourth option which is along the lines of Bill S-16 and which has been requested by the Campaign Life Coalition?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware that the discussion between the house leaders relates to the content of the three options that were recently on the table so I am really not in a position to answer that question.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PANAMA—SAFETY AND SECURITY OF VICE-PRESIDENT—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION

Hon. Jerahmiel S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I learned this week that the Vice-President of Panama, Dr. Esquivel, is now in hiding in that country. Would the government see fit to make a representation to the Government of Panama to ensure that the safety and security of Dr. Esquivel will be preserved?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have no information on that matter. In order to bring forward an answer I shall have to make inquiries of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

THE ENVIRONMENT

STATUS OF ENERGY MINISTER'S PROPOSALS ON ENERGY EFFICIENCY AND ALTERNATIVE INITIATIVES

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I, too, have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. By way of background, Senator Spivak and I were recently sent to Toronto by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to attend the Conference on the Changing Atmosphere—an important and disturbing conference at which policy-makers and scientists from around the world explored the frightening and perhaps disastrous damage that has been and is being done to our atmospheric environment by some of the practices of industries around the world.

At that conference the Minister of Energy, Mr. Masse, indicated in a speech that he had proposals before cabinet concerning the promotion of energy efficiency and alternative energy initiatives as well as proposals in the area of research and development. Could the Leader of the Government give us some indication of the status of these proposals? Perhaps he could provide to us a timetable to which we could refer in informing ourselves on an issue which, if not addressed, makes all other issues pale in significance.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I cannot provide a timetable on these matters. They are still under consideration by cabinet.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Mira Spivak, moved the third reading of Bill C-124, to amend the Canada Labour Code.

[Senator Haidasz.]

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words at third reading of this bill. Often, in this chamber, bills are exceedingly controversial and highly partisan. From time to time, when a bill that has the general support of the various parties comes to this chamber, it should be noted; that sort of general agreement is Parliament at its best.

Honourable senators, Senator Marsden outlined at second reading our support of this bill and our pleasure in having it before us. Bill C-124 confirms the amendments to the Canada Labour Code that made the employer primarily responsible for the employees' occupational health and safety. Some measure of flexibility is provided for in areas where rigidly enforceable standards do not seem to be appropriate in terms of engineering work or structure in the workplace. The criterion here becomes "in accordance with good engineering practice" rather than a specific and detailed blueprint of what is, in fact, a good structure. Further flexibility is provided in the setting of safety standards to the latest criteria. The transition to the most current standard is to be made to the extent that it is practicable or reasonably practicable.

This bill makes particular provision for a Safety Standards Council for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It sets a particularly good example in that the Safety Standards Committee, composed of five members, includes one ministerial appointee, two employees and two management personnel. Therefore, the corporation is represented by a ministerial appointee, by management and by employees.

I would hope that the agreement that came about for the drawing up, the promotion and the passage of this bill among government, management, labour and, in this case, all of the political parties can go forward. In labour relations generally in Canada and in management of industries and promotion of the welfare of our economy, extra effort should be made by all parties to ensure that an agreement is arrived at so that industry in this country can operate efficiently, effectively and competitively.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN MULTICULTURALISM BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the third reading of Bill C-93, for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I want to make a few comments in regard to Bill C-93. While I support the overall objectives of Bill C-93, namely, the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada, I cannot accept the passing reference in the preamble of this bill to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. More particularly, inclusion of a reference to the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada in the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act (Bill C-93) suggests that the languages and cultures of aboriginal peoples are lumped together with that of the languages and cultures of Canada's many ethnic groups, without recognizing the very special nature of the aboriginal cultures.

Lumping native peoples together with other ethnic groups in this manner tends to denigrate and, indeed, negate the significant role—cultural and otherwise—of the native peoples as original peoples of Canada. The aboriginal peoples are not simply another ethnic group with a distinct language and culture. The aboriginal peoples are the founding peoples and original nations of Canada. Each of the aboriginal peoples has a distinct language and culture which predates and precedes in Canada that of any of the multitude of ethnic groups which came later to this great country. Any multiculturalism policy of the Government of Canada must recognize this important distinction between the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the numerous ethnic groups. To do otherwise is to deny the special nature and special contribution of the languages and cultures of the various aboriginal peoples of Canada as well as to deny the special constitutional status of the rights and interests of aboriginal peoples contained in Canada's Constitution.

I propose that a non-derogation clause be included in the proposed legislation. Such non-derogation clause should provide that nothing in the act should be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada under section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

As you are all aware, similar non-derogation provisions have been included in federal legislation—for example, the Canada Oil and Gas Act—and in bills tabled in Parliament, such as the Canada Laws Offshore Application Bill.

Consequently, I propose the following non-derogation clause for inclusion in the Canadian Multiculturalism Bill (Bill C-93):

Nothing in this act should be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada under section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Moreover, I propose an additional amendment to the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act (Bill C-93) by amending the preamble of that legislation in the third "whereas" so as to read as follows:

AND WHEREAS the aboriginal peoples of Canada are the original Nations of Canada, each with a distinct language and culture, which constitute the underpinnings of the cultural heritage of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the Constitution of Canada recognizes and affirms the rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada;

I request that these amendments to the legislation be adopted, failing which I am unable to support the proposed Canadian Multiculturalism Act (Bill C-93).

Honourable senators, I intended to make those proposed amendments in order that they be recognized and acknowledged. However, I do not want it said that I am being obstructive or am going against the idea of a multiculturalism policy. I personally feel that a multiculturalism act is required in this country. I should like those proposed amendments to Bill C-93 recorded to ensure that the precise problems I have talked about are dealt with in this house in some way, not only to reflect on this particular bill but to reflect on other bills that have been passed from time to time.

It has been very difficult for me and my colleagues, Senator Len Marchand and Senator Willie Adams, to see bills, which are passing through this house almost on a daily basis, make a direct or indirect reference to aboriginal peoples, denying that my people were the first people in this country. From now on I shall correct this so that history will read accordingly.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few brief remarks.

First, I want to say that I sympathize very much with Senator Watt. I realize what it means to him to be ignored in the legislation he has made reference to.

However, some of the concerns expressed by Senator Watt are not really reflected in this bill. Some of the wording has been deliberately used in order to include all of the aboriginal peoples. I have one very brief explanation in front of me which I wish to read. Perhaps Senator Watt can contact the department for a more detailed explanation.

I understand that the former Minister of State for Multiculturalism, Mr. David Crombie, sent a letter to Mr. John Amagoalik, co-chairman of the Inuit Committee on National Issues, in which he said that the bill does not subsume or override any custom or any rights enjoyed by the status or non-status Indians, Métis or Inuit. They did not want to mention all of these names in the bill so they used the word "aboriginal", which is the generic term and includes all of the native people. It was not intended to exclude any particular segment of aboriginal society.

Honourable senators, Bill C-93 received a multitude of representations from a variety of ethnocultural groups. In these representations many recommendations were made to the government, such as establishing an independent department of multiculturalism, appointing a commissioner of multiculturalism with terms of reference similar to the Commissioner of Official Languages and a full-time minister at the head of the new department to be known as the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. None of these recommendations has been included in this bill.

I would like to recommend to the Prime Minister that he give consideration, when this bill is proclaimed, to designating the Minister of State for Multiculturalism as the minister designate of the act, as provided in clause 2 of the bill.

Hon. Willie Adams: I wish to address a question to Senator Bosa. I think that in his opening remarks last week on Bill C-93 Senator Barootes included the aboriginal peoples in that bill. Perhaps you could tell me what clause does not include the aboriginal peoples. Last week Senator Barootes stated that the aboriginal peoples were included in the multicultural system.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, if Senator Adams wants to look at clause 2, line 14 states:

but does not include

(c) any institution of the Council or Government of the Northwest Territories or the Yukon Territory, or

(d) any Indian band, band council or other body established to perform a governmental function in relation to an Indian band or other group of aboriginal people;—

Under "aboriginal people" lies the explanation that I gave before of the variety of groups that constitute the aboriginal peoples. So it does not include the aboriginal peoples or Indian bands in support.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I think if I speak now I will be closing the debate.

Senator Frith: Not at third reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Not on third reading, senator.

Senator Barootes: Not on third reading? Thank you.

Honourable senators, I wish to take this opportunity to thank Senator Watt, Senator Bosa and others who have participated in this discussion.

All of us are aware of the sensitivities that have been expressed here today. Indeed, we should have as much empathy and sensitivity to that as possible. I believe that some provision has been made in the "whereas" clauses to recognize the rights of aboriginal peoples of Canada under the Constitution of Canada.

Second, as my friend Senator Bosa pointed out, in clause 2, paragraphs (c) and (d), mention of the special position of the aboriginal peoples has been made. Should more be necessary, I think this chamber would be pleased to give consideration to anything that has been advanced by any of the senators here today.

We have the opportunity to give our assent and thus place into law an act which recognizes the cultural and racial diversity in Canada.

I should like to pay special tribute to Senator Haidasz, the first Minister of State for Multiculturalism in Canada. Because of his pioneering work and the work of his successors up to the present minister, the Honourable Gerry Weiner, we are able today to recognize in our laws and our country that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of our society.

What Parliament has done is to reach out to all Canadians, encouraging them to celebrate the richness of our history, the strength of our people and to grasp the opportunity of our future.

Last week I and others expressed the fact that this land of ours had been built by people from every part of the world and people of all origins. Canada is the land of opportunity, and I feel that we have achieved the promise, made to us earlier in this century by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that this century belongs to Canada.

Now, honourable senators, we are at the door of a new era in our history. In the debate on second reading we also heard debate on Bill C-72. These two bills are interrelated, in that they both go to the heart of what it means to be a Canadian.

Bill C-72 reflects the continued evolution of that legislation. It will replace a law that has to some extent become outpaced and outdated. Bill C-93 on the other hand is a daring and pioneering effort. Together the two bills capture the contemporary Canadian mosaic. They speak of our future and of the two fundamental characteristics of a contemporary Canada.

The bill that we are considering—and I hope we will pass into law—is different from many of the bills that are brought to us. It speaks not of problems but of promise and of the future. It speaks of opportunity, and it reaches out to achieve our potential as a nation. This is a bill about our people, our history and our future.

I will close my remarks today by paying special tribute to the late Senator Paul Yuzyk. His vision of a Canada which embraced the contribution of Canadians of all origins, of all races and of all peoples was an inspiration. He blazed a trail that many have followed. He was a Canadian visionary.

Today we are doing this in his memory. His vision has been realized, and we all wish that he were here today to witness this bill being passed.

Honourable senators, I believe that today we are making history.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the third reading of Bill S-18, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

RAILWAY SAFETY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Turner, seconded by the Honourable Senator Guay, P.C., for the adoption of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications (Bill C-105, An Act to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other Acts in consequence thereof, with one amendment), presented in the Senate on 7th July, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough)).

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, Bill C-105, to ensure the safe operation of railways, is part of the package of measures brought forward in Parliament in this session dealing with the deregulation or re-regulation of the transport industry in Canada. Honourable senators will remember that some of us were here dealing with those measures in July and August of 1987.

This is an important bill. It deals with the question of safety on the nation's railways. We in the Senate have been accused of dilly-dallying. I want to call the attention of honourable senators to the fact that the bill was introduced in the House of Commons with a royal recommendation on January 17 of this year and that it came to us here in the Senate on May 18—in other words, four months later. This is now July 19, so we have had the bill for two months. If we manage to get it through the Senate today or tomorrow we shall have done twice as well as they did in the other place—and we generally do far better than that.

The amendment made in the committee relates to those persons employed by the railways who are assigned to designated positions. By "designated positions" we are referring to running crews, dispatchers and others in positions critical to the operation of the railway systems. The amendment is in clause 35 of the bill. That clause, as the bill came to the Senate from the other place, dealt simply with new legal obligations of medical doctors. Clause 35 of the bill said that:

(1) Where a physician or an optometrist believes, on reasonable grounds, that a patient holds a position in a railway company that is declared by regulations made under paragraph 18(1)(b) to be a position critical to safe railway operations (referred to in this section as a "designated position"), the physician or optometrist shall, if, in the physician's or optometrist's opinion, the patient has a condition that is likely to constitute a threat to safe railway operations, send a notice to the chief medical officer of the railway company or to a physician or optometrist specified by the railway company. In other words, the bill in its original form would have required private physicians or optometrists to report the medical conditions of their patients if those conditions were thought to endanger safety.

At the same time, the bill made—and still makes—provision for regulations. In clause 18 the bill authorizes the Governor in Council to make regulations respecting various matters, insofar as they relate to safe railway operations, and in relation to persons employed in the designated positions. Under that general category, regulations could prescribe minimum medical standards—including audiometric and optometric standards—to be met by those persons. In other words, the bill would have imposed a statutory obligation on private physicians to report to the railway company the medical conditions of their patients if those conditions seemed to bear on safety, but the bill did not require that there would be regular examinations sponsored by the railway companies. It was this apparent imbalance that attracted the attention of some members of the committee.

We were told by representatives of the Canadian Medical Association that the association objected most emphatically to the requirement to breach confidentiality which was to be imposed upon private physicians by the terms of the bill. It would be hard to exaggerate the fervour with which the representatives of the Canadian Medical Association recorded their objection to this intrusion into the relationship of the private physician and his patient.

On the other hand, it was observed by the members of the committee that, although great concern was being expressed for safety, little provision was being made to assure safety, in that the bill was essentially relying on chance. It might be that an employee, engaged in a designated position, did have a dangerous medical condition, yet it might be that he would not go to his private physician and that consequently his medical condition would not be detected. In other words, discovery would, in a sense, be fortuitous. Those were two things that were wrong with the bill when it came to the committee. On the one hand it breached confidentiality; yet it made inadequate provision insofar as company-sponsored examinations were concerned.

In order to correct this imbalance, this excessive intrusion on confidentiality on the one hand with no provision in the bill for company-sponsored examinations, your committee is now recommending to the Senate that:

A person who holds a position in a railway company that is declared by regulations made under paragraph 18(1)(b) to be a position critical to safe railway operations (referred to in this section as a "designated position") shall undergo a company-sponsored medical examination (including audiometric and optometric examination) at least every twelve months.

Therefore, the new régime, assuming that the bill goes forward to Royal Assent in the form in which it has been reported out of the committee, is that persons occupying these designated positions will undergo company-sponsored medical examinations every 12 months. At the same time, if in the 12-month intervals they go to their private physician and the private physician discovers some medical circumstance which might bear on safety, the private physician will be required to report it. I have to say to honourable senators that this solution was not found acceptable by the representatives of the Canadian Medical Association; yet they allowed that it was, at least, a step in the right direction. The amendment works a considerable improvement on the bill. I believe all members of the committee would agree with me in that. Because clause 35 intrudes on confidentiality, it is a very important clause. We have made it somewhat less offensive and, at the same time, have provided greater assurance for safety in rail operations by making this amendment.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Spivak, bill, as amended, placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987—MOTION TO TRANSMIT
COPY OF SENATE RESOLUTION TO EACH PROVINCIAL LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion, as modified, of the Honourable Senator Watt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.:

That the Honourable the Speaker do transmit to the Legislative Assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, and urge that the provinces do likewise.—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.).

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I read last Thursday's Debates of the Senate. It seems the Liberal majority wanted the Senate to decide on the matter this week. I have no objection to disposing of this motion, although I would have preferred to drop the idea of two motions, the result of splitting the original motion. This is a new procedure I was not aware of. I would have preferred to see both motions die on the order paper. I think that is what they deserve.

First of all, I would like to say that from the procedural point of view I don't think it is up to the Speaker to transmit a copy of the Senate resolution to each of the legislative assemblies. I make a distinction between the Senate resolution and the resolution of the House of Commons. I think it should be up to the Clerk of the Senate to transmit the Senate's constitutional resolution to each of the legislative assemblies, since under our rules, the Clerk is responsible for transmitting messages. I assume that is what we want to transmit to the legislative assemblies.

Second, the motion wants the Speaker to urge the provinces to do likewise. I think such urgings are even less appropriate for the Speaker. The invitation is addressed to the legislative assemblies. Here the motion mentions inviting the provinces to do likewise. The provincial governments signed the accord referred to as Meech Lake. The legislative assemblies, according to our constitutional process, are supposed to ratify the accord so that, logically, the motion should say "That the Clerk of the Senate do transmit to the Legislative Assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on April 21, 1988, and indicate that the Senate invites the said legislative assemblies to do likewise." This is just a procedural aspect.

I would like to get back to what I would call the substantive issue raised by Senator Lang in this debate. It is in fact a useless repetition of the debate we had which led to the adoption on April 21 of the resolution and again on May 25 to the adoption of a resolution saying that the Senate sent the message to the House of Commons informing the House that the Senate had adopted the resolution on April 21. This motion is clearly repetitious and, as far as I am concerned, quite useless since the legislative assemblies are aware of the situation.

In any event, to get back to the substantive issue, how far has this constitutional process progressed? First of all, the resolution adopted by the House of Commons on October 23, and adopted again at the end of May—in the same terms if I am not mistaken—by the House of Commons, and adopted by eight legislative assemblies so far—I submit that if this resolution is adopted by the legislative assemblies of Manitoba and New Brunswick between now and 1990, the Governor General will then have the authority to proclaim a constitutional amendment according to the terms of the resolution adopted by the House of Commons.

In this respect, the Senate resolution will be of no use at all. I am convinced that Senate approval can be dispensed with if—and this applies to any motion from the Senate—the legislative assemblies of all ten provinces and the House of Commons adopt this resolution. The text of section 47 of the Constitution Act, 1982, is perfectly clear in this respect.

And what about the Senate resolution adopted, as I said earlier, on April 21, which was the subject of a message on May 25 and is the subject of Senator Watt's motion today? We are talking about a third debate. What about this resolution that does not use the same wording as the House of Commons resolution?

This resolution can become a valid resolution, if approved by the House of Commons and by all the legislatures. It would mean the House of Commons would have to change its position completely. It would mean that the eight legislative assemblies which have already expressed their approval would have to make an about-face and that the legislative assemblies of Manitoba and New Brunswick, which have yet to make their positions known, would approve the Senate's text rather than the text of the House of Commons.

So theoretically this is all quite possible. Of course, we can tell everybody to change their minds because we are right and they are wrong. Senator Watt can go ahead and claim that our position is the right one and that the other parties should change their position. However, I doubt very much, and I think that privately, he probably agrees, that adopting this resolution today will make any difference. It would be repetitious and it would be useless. If the House of Commons or the provincial legislatures want to change their minds, they can do so. They are aware of the divergent views of the Senate. The Senate stands alone, for the time being. If the Senate expects everybody else to change their minds, that's fine, if you believe that is possible. I don't. In fact, I was opposed to this resolution. I was opposed to the terms of the resolution adopted on April 21. I was opposed to the message that retransmitted the resolution to the House of Commons on May 25. And I am also opposed to the motion proposed by Senator Watt, which I feel is procedurally very defective.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Watt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.:

That the Honourable the Speaker do transmit to the Legislative Assembly of each province a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, and urge that the provinces do likewise.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just for grammatical clarity, as pointed out by Senator Flynn, the motion should read, "... and that the legislatures of the provinces ...". Senator Flynn proposed this change, but I am not asking him to move that amendment. Perhaps the mover would agree that it should be changed to read, "... that the legislatures of the provinces ...", because that is what the Constitution provides.

Senator Flynn: It should read, "... and that the Senate invites the legislatures ...".

Senator Frith: I appreciate the other points as well, but I think that one correction is rather obvious. It is the legislatures of the provinces that are partners in the amending formula, not the provinces.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, on division.

THE CONSTITUTION

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987—MOTION TO TRANSMIT COPY OF SENATE RESOLUTION TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES AND FOUR NATIONAL ABORIGINAL ORGANIZATIONS ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Watt, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.:

That a copy of the Resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada, adopted by the Senate on 21st April, 1988, be transmitted by the Honourable the Speaker to the Legislative Assemblies of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and to the four National Organizations representing the aboriginal peoples of Canada.—(Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, my comments on the previous motion would also apply to this motion.

However, I do not see why Senator Watt specifically mentions four organizations since there must be hundreds of bands that would be interested in this matter.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, it is quite obvious why I mention four national organizations. It is because there are only four national organizations.

Motion agreed to, on division.

CHILD CARE

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE ON FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE ENTITLED "SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the eighteenth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology respecting Child Care.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, with the permission of Senator Bonnell, I should like to make a few brief comments on the report on child care of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

At the outset I want to thank the committee for its efforts and, particularly,

[Translation]

I would like to pay tribute to the memory of our colleague, the Honourable Yvette Rousseau, who was a member of the Subcommittee on Child Care. At the time of her death, she was very interested in and very committed to our work.

[English]

The principal purpose of this report was to learn how federal proposals on child care, that is, the national strategy, could possibly affect the situation presently existing in the various provinces. To this end, the committee spoke to key informants and other witnesses in all the provinces and territories—persons involved on a hands-on, day-to-day basis with child care services; those involved in running child care centres; parents; advocates, researchers and so on. This was important since, for the first time, we are in the process of a federal-provincial effort to create a national child care system affecting over 60 per cent of women who have children under six and who are in the labour force.

The various provinces are at very different stages in the development of child care services, from British Columbia, which does not see itself as responsible for encouraging the development of services but whose chief concern is to subsidize fees for low-income parents, to Quebec, which has passed legislation to develop a range of services such as centre and family home day-care services; services in schools, such as lunch and after four care; and services for mothers who are not in the labour force.

The study found that, in terms of the national strategy, representatives from poorer provinces have some fears that, after the boost in child care spaces during the seven years projected for this initiative, they may find it difficult to finance improved facilities with 50-cent dollars. Those provinces with more developed systems, such as Ontario, are afraid that their needs will mean that expenditures will hit a ceiling before seven years have passed.

The study found in all provinces an absence of adequate or even enough planning services—that is, in practical terms, child care offices; consultants; and data collection. Even the most basic question of how many children of what family income receive what subsidies cannot be answered at this time, except for Ontario. Only estimates of need, based on numbers of children with parents working, training or studying, are used. There are inadequate measures and personnel to enforce compliance with standards.

In terms of what have become the customary benchmarks of child care services—that is, availability; the number of spaces; quality and affordability; and whether parents can afford to pay for services—in all provinces, no matter what their policies, there are deficiencies in all three of these areas.

There is a serious absence of services for infants, a serious shortage of child care services for non-urban areas, where demand for child care may be seasonal or driven by different schedules from those in cities—whether on the prairies or in Newfoundland fishing villages—and a shortage of flexible services to meet parents' needs.

• (1600)

As to quality, problems exist in terms of varying requirements for qualifications of child care workers, low salaries, monitoring and enforcement of regulations, et cetera. Different provinces subsidize families at widely—and wildly—varying income levels so that in some provinces only about 4 per cent of all pre-school children with working parents were eligible for full subsidies in 1987. In comparison, 23 per cent of those children in Saskatchewan and 38 per cent in Ontario were eligible. Moreover, provincial subsidy levels are far below federal levels.

Of course, not all parents eligible for subsidies actually receive them. For example, on July 12 the Globe and Mail had a story claiming that more than 4,000 families in Toronto who are eligible for subsidies are on the subsidy waiting list.

All of this points to a desire and a hope, on the part of those whom the study saw, for a very strong federal role; for federal direction to provide, nationally, a service for all Canadian children that is of reasonable quality to all who want it at a cost they can afford.

The federal government does not have the power to stipulate requirements that are so specific that they amount to interference with the administration of provincial programs, but the history of the development of Canada's health care system yields valuable lessons for the evolution of a child care system. In that case financial assistance was offered to the provinces on conditions, and it remains to be seen what conditions will be incorporated into federal-provincial agreements in forthcoming legislation.

The study raises a number of issues that are important to the current federal-provincial process—questions relating to funding; standards; salaries and training of care givers; monitoring and enforcement; the promotion of development of the non-profit sector; parental involvement and support for parents who spend significant amounts of time out of the labour force, that is, those who care for children at home.

I recommend this study to all senators interested in the improvement of child care services—and I know this is a majority—as a useful portrait and analysis of the Canadian situation, and one that I hope will be useful in the future examination of federal child care legislation.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, since this order stood in the name of Senator Bonnell I suggest that it again stand in his name.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the order stand in the name of the Honourable Senator Bonnell?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Bonnell, debate adjourned.

GUYANA, TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

GOODWILL VISIT BY CANADIAN PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, July 6, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a goodwill visit by a Canadian Parliamentary delegation to Guyana and Trinidad and Tobago, which took place from April 24 to 28, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, I was pleased to have been asked to be part of a parliamentary delegation on a goodwill visit to Guyana, Trinidad and Tobago. Other members of the delegation were Senator Robert Muir and Mr. Robert Pennock, M.P., Etobicoke North. Accompanying the delegation was Mr. D.G. Longmuir, Director, Caribbean and Central America Relations Division, from the Department of External Affairs. The purpose of the visit was twofold: to show the governments of both countries Canada's keen interest in maintaining and promoting good and fruitful relations with them and to provide Canadian parliamentarians with the opportunity to see firsthand our foreign policy in that region of the world.

Guyana is located on the northeast corner of South America and is bordered by Surinam to the east, Venezuela to the west, and Brazil to the south. Guyana has an area of 214,000 square kilometres. The population is estimated at 790,000 of which approximately 72,000 live in its capital, Georgetown.

Initially colonized by the Netherlands, Guyana came under British rule in 1803. The majority of the population are descendants of people from India, China and Portugal, imported labourers and black African slaves. Political radicalism and the threat of Marxism delayed independence until 1966, when Mr. Forbes Burnham became the country's first Prime Minister.

Though Guyana initially had a Westminster-style government, the country became a republic in 1970 and, subsequently, the legislative body became a unicameral national assembly composed of 65 members.

While in power Burnham pursued a policy of cooperative socialism that saw the nationalization of the sugar and bauxite industries and deterioration in relations with the west in favour of closer ties with other socialist countries.

On his death in 1985, Burnham was replaced by Desmond Hoyte, his Vice-President. Hoyte has pursued reform policies which seek to roll back cooperative socialism. Though much remains to be done, the human rights situation has improved and better relations with the west are being pursued. Guyana also has some very serious economic difficulties. However, when it comes to trade, Guyana has a favourable balance with Canada. Canada's exports to Guyana totalled $5.2 million in goods and services in 1987, consisting mainly of sawmill equipment, milk powder and paper chemicals—

Senator Doody: And rum?

Senator Bosa: Yes—while imports from Guyana amounted to $35.5 million, and consisted primarily of bauxite ore, molasses, raw sugar and the liquid that the honourable gentleman opposite likes so much, rum.

Senator Doody: It is very well thought of in the maritimes.

Senator Frith: Highly spoken of!

Senator Bosa: Guyana has traditionally been a major recipient of Canadian development assistance, with Canadian aid generally directed at improvements in fisheries, forestry, air transportation, water supply and electric power. Total direct aid disbursements for the 1982-87 period amounted to $11.9 million.

After a review of Canada's relations with Guyana in 1984, it was determined that, while Guyana would remain a beneficiary as a country within the framework of government policy towards the Caribbean Commonwealth, aid disbursements would remain modest until there was evidence of improvement in Guyanese economic management and an IMF agreement was in place.

No members of the delegation had been to Guyana before, and, notwithstanding the very short time that we were there, we were able to meet a cross-section of Guyanese society, including government officials, members of the business and professional communities as well as officials and volunteers of the facilities of some non-government institutions such as the Red Cross, the Home Ownership Program of the St. Francis Human Development Association, and the kitchen facilities of the Beacon Foundation.

Throughout our visit we were very ably assisted by our High Commissioner, Mr. William E. Sinclair, and his staff. Mrs. Sinclair, a very gracious lady, hosted two receptions at the commissioner's residence, thus enabling the delegates to meet many more Guyanese in an informal setting.

In Georgetown we stayed at the Pegasus Hotel. Just as we were checking in, there was a Soviet parliamentary delegation preparing to leave for the airport. We later learned that they had preceded us in our visit to Trinidad and Tobago as well, a matter that was noted by the media. Our first engagement was a visit to a gold mine some 200 kilometres inland at Omai, the Golden Star Resources and Placer Dome Mining Operations. We were taken to Omai by helicopter, which gave us an opportunity to view Guyana's vast forests. At the mine we were doused with mosquito repellent as a precaution against the very real danger of contracting malaria. While the tour of the site proved interesting, physically it proved to be much more strenuous than anticipated. It involved standing in the back of a truck and being jarred and lurched over very rough, forested terrain. It was hot and dry. Mr. R. Garwood, the exploration manager, briefed the delegation on the history of the mining at Omai. While walking to those areas that we visited on foot I asked Mr. Garwood if there was any danger of reptiles in the area, to which he replied, "Yes, that is why I am walking with my head down."

On our return to Georgetown we stopped at Kaow Island for a tour of a CIDA development aid project, known as the John Willems Timber and Trading Co. Ltd.

Other visits included a meeting with Dr. Cecil Rajana, head of the Department of International Economic Cooperation, Office of the President, for an overview of Canada's bilateral aid program. Dr. Rajana stated that CIDA programs are well focused and well targeted. He mentioned, among others, the forestry projects, which are export oriented. He also said that the fisheries projects were well thought out, resulting in increased rural incomes as well as cheap protein for the population. When asked about any problems related to CIDA projects, Dr. Rajana referred to the extremely lengthy process and the long and frustrating cycle for completion procedures, a cycle that often takes four to five years from the initial discussions to the beginning of a project.

The delegation then called on His Worship Robert Williams, Mayor of Georgetown. During this encounter reference was made to the fact that Ottawa and Georgetown and two ecclesiastical institutions, St George's Cathedral and Christ Church Cathedral, are twinned. The mayor expressed hope that that twinning association of the two cities would become more active. Mr. Williams also made reference to the modern garbage trucks given to the city by CIDA; they were much appreciated.

We visited a fruit tree crop demonstration unit, another CIDA development project, on our way to Timheri International Airport. Guyana at the time was experiencing a severe water shortage due to a prolonged period of drought. Suddenly, there was a downpour—one of the heaviest rainfalls I have ever seen. We were pleased, even though we got wet, and I am sure the Guyanese people were pleased at this much-needed rain.

In conclusion, the delegation was well received and government officials would appreciate more such visits from Canada. The delegation certainly left with greater awareness of Guyana's modest resources, overwhelming problems and the efforts the people of that country are making to resolve them.

After a short flight, we landed at Port of Spain, the capital of Trinidad and Tobago. Trinidad and Tobago has a population of approximately 1.2 million of which 60,000 reside in Port of Spain. The islands of Trinidad and Tobago lie north-east of Venezuela. They were discovered by Columbus in 1498.

Originally settled by the Spanish, the islands were captured by England in 1797 and formally became a colony in 1802. Trinidad and Tobago became a member of the West Indies Federation in 1958 and was granted full independence in 1962, after the dissolution of the federation. In 1976 Trinidad became a republic. Forty per cent of the population is composed of descendants of African slaves and nearly 50 per cent are descendants of Indian and Chinese labourers brought to work on the islands after the abolition of slavery.

Trinidad and Tobago, because of its relatively high national income and status as a regional aid donor, is no longer being considered for traditional CIDA aid programming. No new direct bilateral projects are under development or contemplated, but Trinidad still benefits from mission administered funds, special programs and industrial cooperation projects and some bilaterally-funded regional projects. Modest disbursement levels will be maintained through these channels.

One bilateral project is ongoing. It is the Piarco International Airport Project. Less than half of the original $10 million approved loan has been spent, after long delays, and there is currently no agreement with Trinidad as to how the remainder is to be used.

There was very little non-government organization involvement in Trinidad in 1986-87. However, CIDA's disbursements totalled $64,600. Major activities included a Special Education Project and a Faculty of Education Project, both with the University of Manitoba. Trinidad's political life had been dominated largely by the black peoples' National Movement since 1956. In the 1986 elections Robinson's National Alliance for Reconstruction, a multiracial coalition of opposition groups, won a resounding victory, taking 33 of 36 seats in the House of Representatives. The defeat of the once dominant People's National Movement signalled, in the eyes of National Alliance for Reconstruction supporters, a victory for multiracial democracy.

The economy of Trinidad and Tobago is dominated by the petroleum sector, and the country enjoyed boom years between 1974 and 1982 as the price of oil rose. The sudden drop in world oil prices has seriously affected Trinidad's economy and the GDP has been declining since 1984. Unemployment is high at around 17 per cent and is expected to rise to 25 per cent by 1990. The government is faced with budget deficits, balance of payments problems, shrinking foreign exchange supplies and a mounting external debt burden. The government recently brought in tough budget measures to bring the deficit under control. It announced its intention to go to the International Monetary Fund for compensatory financing. The government has also reaffirmed its determination to set off unproductive state enterprises.

Canadian exports to Trinidad in 1987 totalled $69.7 million and consisted primarily of foodstuffs, pharmaceuticals and telecommunications equipment. Imports from Trinidad in 1987 totalled $36.9 million. Approximately 25,000 Canadians visit Trinidad and Tobago annually.

[Senator Bosa.]

We were received at Port of Spain by Canada's High Commissioner, James C. Best.

Senator Frith: He is known as Cal Best, is he not?

Senator Bosa: Yes, but officially he is known as James C. Best.

Senator MacDonald: Yes, he is a famous Nova Scotian—Carrie Best's son.

Senator Bosa: Both of you are quite correct. Mr. Best accompanied the delegation to a number of meetings with government officials and hosted two receptions at his residence, where delegates were able to meet a number of parliamentarians, government officials, academics and professional people.

Trinidad and Tobago relations are friendly and far-reaching. The delegation paid courtesy calls to the Minister of External Affairs and International Trade, Dr. Sahadeo Basdeo, who has strong personal links to Canada. During our meeting we discussed trade, education, immigration and the battle against drugs. Dr. Basdeo expressed concern at the high fees that Trinidadian students have to pay for admission to Canadian learning institutions. Honourable senators, this is a matter for the Canadian government, and it should review this aspect of our relations with that island, because Trinidadians are very keen on getting their education in Canada.

Senator Doody: Bring in a private member's bill!

Senator Bosa: This is a government matter. I doubt whether, if I brought in a private member's bill, this government would be much influenced.

Senator Frith: You just got one of your own bills passed today!

Senator Bosa: Speaking on the need for cooperation in the fight against drug trafficking Dr. Basdeo said there was need to set up an infrastructure for cooperation between the two countries. The minister asked Canadians to understand the recent problems relating to Ghanaians with forged Trinidad and Tobago passports entering Canada. He said that that should not be a reason for restrictions on citizens of Trinidad and Tobago entering Canada. The government is doing all it can to ensure that its citizens are fully apprised of regulations governing entry into Canada.

The delegation toured the Coast Guard facilities at Chaguaramas, which Canada has been providing technical assistance to for several years. It paid courtesy calls on Opposition Leader Patrick Manning as well as House of Representatives Speaker Nizam Mohammed and Acting Senate President Leonard Bradshaw. The delegation also visited the St. Augustine Campus of the University of the West Indies, after which we flew to Tobago for a visit to Dr. Jefferson, Chairman of the House of Assembly, and a Canada fund-sponsored cooperative at Belle Garden.

In conclusion, I can state on behalf of my colleagues that the goodwill visit accomplished the two objectives that we set out to attain: to impress on the Governments of Guyana and of Trinidad and Tobago Canada's degree of interest in the region and the broadening of our understanding of Canada's foreign policy with those countries.

I should like to say a special word of appreciation concerning our High Commissioners, Messrs. William E. Sinclair and James C. Best, who made our visits so informative and interesting, and Mr. G.D. Longmuir, who ably briefed and assisted us throughout our visit.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM BILL

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed, without further amendments, to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-137, to provide for incentives to assist in financing exploration for mineral resources and hydrocarbons in Canada and to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—BILL ATTACHED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, yesterday I reported a message from the House of Commons concerning Bill C-103. Only the message was received, and not the bill itself. Today the bill has been returned to the Senate. When considering the message, I trust honourable senators will take this into account.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition is not here at the moment, could we delay this matter so that he will have an opportunity to respond later?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if there were anything controversial about this matter, I would certainly make that suggestion myself. What happened yesterday was that a message came from the House of Commons informing the Senate that they did not agree with the text of the message made by the Senate to Bill C-103. They neglected to attach the bill to that message. Today they have sent the bill, and now His Honour is going to attach the bill to the message. The Leader of the Opposition can deal with both when he resumes the debate that he adjourned yesterday.

Hon. Charles McElman: Could the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate inform us whether it could be considered an affront to the Senate or an abuse of the Senate's privileges that the House of Commons did not send the bill back to us?

Senator Doody: It could be, or it could even be a reflection on the efficiency of the other place.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Would it be appropriate for this chamber to comment on that, just as the other chamber feels it appropriate to comment on this one?

Senator Doody: I find it interesting that the honourable senator is asking me what would be appropriate when he knows where the power lies.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REVISED MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—
MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the twenty-fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs respecting the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, dated June 28, 1988, relating to certain amendments to Bill C-55, to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other acts in consequence thereof.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Neiman, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, July 20, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, dated July 13, 1988 relating to certain amendments to Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, July 14, 1988, examined the said motion and now reports as follows:

Your Committee recommends that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendment 3 and earlier amendment 5(a) to the Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof;

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 2(a) and (b) and earlier amendments 5(b) and (c); and

That the Senate agree to the further amendment made by that House to clause 8.

The Committee notes that one of the conditions which circumscribes the power of the Minister to direct a ship not to enter Canada's waters is that "the country (of embarkation) would allow the passengers to return to that country . . ." This phrasing is very similar to the safe country wording in Bill C-55 about which the Committee had serious reservations. As we stated in our twenty-fifth report, we were concerned that the words "allowed to return" did not afford sufficient protection for claimants to ensure that they did not go "into orbit."

In connection with Bill C-55, our concerns were addressed by the commitment of the Minister to amend the law at an early date and, if difficulties arise in doing so, to instruct immigration officials to interpret the law so that no claimant is put at risk in the interim period. Because similar wording is found in Bill C-84, the Committee expects that the same action will be taken with respect to this Bill as well.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Neiman, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration later this day.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to inform the Senate that Senator Murray is absent today. I will be pleased to take as notice any questions honourable senators may wish to ask.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Delayed answers.

Hon. Charles McElman: Not so fast, Mr. Speaker. We must not rush things in this place; it is not our habit.

Senator Hastings: Let us do some dilly-dallying!

Senator McElman: Let us dilly-dally a bit.

Senator Flynn: You do that very well.

Senator McElman: Yes, I have had lots of lessons.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—INADEQUACY OF REGIONAL REPRESENTATION

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have a copy of the 1987-88 annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Just as a footnote, for some 20 years successive governments in New Brunswick—going back to the Robichaud years, Mr. Hatfield's tenancy in the premiership, and now with the Honourable Mr. McKenna—have made appeals to the CBC asking that a grave shortcoming of the CBC be corrected, namely, that New Brunswick is the only province in Canada that does not have a full-schedule CBC television station.

Senator Barootes: What?

Senator McElman: The result of it is that, through an agreement between CBC and a privately owned station, we get quite a large part of CBC programming but we do not get the whole of it. This has been considered a serious situation not only by governments of New Brunswick but also by the people of New Brunswick.

I think I found perhaps one of the reasons of recent date. Someone strangely found two channels in the atmosphere when we had been told for years that there were no channels available. Because of the dilly-dallying of the CBC, the CRTC has ruled that those channels be turned over to the private sector. So we are in trouble again.

I have looked at the board of directors listed in this latest annual report for the CBC. Including the president, Mr. Juneau, there are 15 directors. Of those, five are for Ontario; seven are for Quebec; one is for Alberta; one is for Nova Scotia; one is for Manitoba; and there are no directors of the CBC, according to this report, for British Columbia, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

I consider this an affront to the Atlantic provinces to begin with—the honourable the deputy leader, your province and mine, as well as Prince Edward Island.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate not urge upon his colleagues that, when directors are being appointed over the next period of time, these shortcomings be corrected?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall certainly make representations.

[Senator McElman.]

PENITENTIARIES

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF INMATES IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate will have noticed that, by a decision of the Supreme Court of Ontario yesterday, inmates in provincial institutions in Ontario have been granted the vote in a provincial election.

I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government would make representations to his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to withdraw his opposition to the application of Richard Sauvé for franchisement in federal elections in order that those 12,500 Liberal votes in federal institutions may be enumerated in the coming election.

Senator Flynn: Liberal votes?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I shall certainly pass that information along to the appropriate minister and ask him for his reaction.

Senator Flynn: How do you know that all of the prisoners are Liberals?

THIRD READING

Hon. Mira Spivak moved the third reading of Bill C-105, to ensure the safe operation of railways and to amend certain other acts in consequence thereof.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REVISED MESSAGE FROM COMMONS— MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS— CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twenty-fifth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (motion respecting Bill C-55) presented earlier this day.

Hon. Joan Neiman moved the adoption of the report.

She said: Honourable senators, my remarks with respect to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee reports on both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 will be brief, since other members of the committee will be commenting in more detail during this debate.

Bill C-55, which was given first reading in the other place on May 5, 1987, is the government's measured response and purported solution to the malfunctions, misfunctions and undoubtedly serious problems in the present refugee determination system, which, I remind you, is a very small proportion of Canada's total immigration program. The bill is a radical departure, both in philosophy and implementation, from the recommendations contained in three previous studies on refugee determination commissioned by the previous government and then this government. I would remind you also that the last of those reports, which was entitled: "Refugee Determination in Canada" by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, was studied carefully by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. That committee agreed almost unanimously with the report, making only a few minor changes.

For reasons of its own, the government chose to ignore the recommendations of that committee and to take quite a different approach—one that caused reactions of disappointment, dismay and vehement opposition from every witness the Senate committee heard, with the exception, of course, of government spokespeople. I have to admit that some of the members of our committee, including myself, felt frustrated and inadequate from time to time as we tried to understand what the effect and implementation of its proposed procedures would mean.

In the end, because the committee had spent so much time on Bill C-84, we decided to focus on those provisions in Bill C-55 which appeared most obviously to affront the spirit, if not the letter, of our international commitments regarding the treatment of refugees and also of our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The committee's proposed amendments to the bill were, I believe, modest and designed to obviate the possibility of immediate court challenges to the present provisions—a certain eventuality which would clog the system once more, causing the kinds of delay that, as the government has argued quite rightly, comprise a serious problem in the present system.

The reaction to the committee's amendments among those assisting refugees was disappointment that we had not gone far enough, had not been tough enough. We were urged constantly—and still are, as recently as this morning—to stand firm.

Being conscious of their continuing concern, I think it fair to say that members of the committee were even more disappointed by the government's response to its recommendations.

One of the most serious concerns engendered by the bill was the possibility that refugee claimants could be sent back to a supposedly safe country, where, in turn, they might be shipped out to another country where they could be in jeopardy or face possible death. The present formulation in Bill C-55 uses the word "returned". Let me read a comment in explanation contained in a letter from the spokesperson for refugee affairs at Amnesty International and addressed to me as chairman of the committee. This same argument was made to the committee by several other people representing refugee assistance groups. The letter reads in part:

The word "returned" causes considerable difficulty. In Europe, many Governments have forcibly removed refugee claimants to a safe third country on the basis of legislative enactments using the word "returned" and the national Courts of many European countries have held that a refugee has been "returned" if he or she has entered the territory of a third country even if not legally admitted. What usually happens is that a refugee claimant being "returned" to a safe third country is usually kept in a transit lounge until forcibly placed on an airline bound for some other country. In essence, the refugee claimant is put in orbit. Therefore, the legislative word "returned" has legalized the "refugee in orbit" syndrome in Europe. It is our view that much stronger wording than the word "returned" will be necessary in order to prevent refugees from being put into orbit.

It seems that the minister did not fully understand the impact of that word "returned", as did not, I confess, the members of our committee.

We sought to correct the problem, as we saw it, by presenting our own amendments to the provision. In her response to the Senate's proposed amendment—and that is one of the amendments which were rejected—the minister, nevertheless, in referring to the provision in the other place on June 3 stated:

... this provision will not be used to put people in orbit between countries, as we want assurances that the people we send to third countries will be accepted there or will have access to that country's refugee determination system.

As the committee pointed out, that is not what the present Bill C-55 states. Regrettably, the provision in the present version, which the minister has again asked us to accept, does not provide the assurances on which the minister said she would insist. As I have pointed out in our report, she has now agreed to rectify that provision as soon as possible in future legislation, because, even more regrettably, the government did not accept one of the amendments proposed by the opposition parties that would have addressed the problem.

It was for that reason that the committee asked for and received a letter from the minister, addressed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, which forms part of its report. That letter contains what the committee hopes and believes to be the minister's commitment that that particular provision in the legislation will be amended to conform to the statement which she made in the other place and which I quoted. Furthermore, and most importantly, until that amendment can be enacted into law, her officials will be instructed to deal with each refugee claimant in the spirit of that assurance so as to, in the words of her letter, "... ensure that no claimant be at risk in the interim." That certainly relieved many of the concerns of the committee and induced us to make the report in the form we have today.

Bill C-84, as honourable senators will recall, is the so-called "emergency legislation" in response to a couple of incidents that occurred last summer. Unfortunately, the committee felt compelled to deal with that bill first because of its supposedly urgent nature. It had to hear at least a fair representation from across Canada of the innumerable people who wanted to appear and comment not only on its perceived objectionable provisions but also on those in Bill C-55.

The most notorious provisions of Bill C-84 were those regarding the turning around of ships at sea. You know the history of the Senate's proposals with respect both to those provisions and to others which the committee felt required amendment. We made a few modest gains on our first round and now, finally, the government has, itself, amended the bill so that all the provisions concerning the turning around of ships containing possible refugees will be nullified within six months of the coming into effect of Bill C-55.

The committee is grateful that the minister has reacted to the very sensible and humane arguments made against those provisions by so many people.

Finally, Bill C-84 contains the same objectionable phrase regarding refugees arriving on ships being returned to the country from which they embarked. As the committee stated in its report, it assumes that the assurances given by the minister in her letter, reproduced in the committee report on Bill C-55, will apply equally to any action taken under the provisions of Bill C-84.

I should just like to conclude by paying a special tribute to the patience and endurance of the members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. I had the unfailing cooperation of too many members to mention any by name. I believe we achieved a few measures in our study of these bills. I wish we had been able to do more, but we must be content with what we have accomplished so far.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, the distinguished American historian, Barbara Tuchman, pointed out in the epilogue to her most perceptive analysis of history, "The March of Folly", that the most important test of government is the ability to admit error. How and when to admit error. How and when to change course. To wrest, publicly, such admissions and changes in course from government, honourable senators, is precisely the role envisaged for the Senate. When the Fathers of Confederation crafted the theory of this chamber, the theory of "sober second thought", it was founded on the notion that in the heat of the political moment politicians rarely find the time to learn from history, rarely take the time to learn from experience.

"If men could learn from history, what lessons it might teach us!"

Thus wrote the great poet laureate, Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Then Coleridge went on to lament:

"But passion and party blind our eyes, and the light which experience gives is a lantern on the stern, which shines only on the waves behind us."

Machiavelli, the founder of the modern school of political science, taught that a prince, like a government, ought always to be a great questioner and a patient listener of the truth about those things of which he has inquired. The prince should be angry if he finds that anyone has scruples about telling him the truth. Barbara Tuchman, after essaying these ideas, concluded that good governments, above all, need good questioners.

So, honourable senators, is that not the best definition of our duty: to ask good questions; to ask good questions when the heat of politics distorts reason and ignites public passions?

Here the lessons of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 are most instructive. Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, as we know, were bills to amend the process and the penalties in our immigration and criminal laws respecting refugees. Honourable senators will recall the perceived mood of the country last August. Just a year ago the House of Commons was to be recalled to legislate a solution to what we were told was a pressing matter, "a national emergency," triggered by the sudden landing of 173 Tamils and one other off the coast of Nova Scotia last July. You will all recall the big headlines. The headlines and TV whipped up public opinion and inflamed public passions.

The government moved. The government reacted. The government moved swiftly to introduce new draconian penalties against refugees and their facilitators.

Bill C-84, this draconian measure, came to the Senate after speedy passage in the Commons on September 15, 1987. We debated it briefly and then referred it to the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. From September 16 to December 15, for three months, the Senate committee held 26 hearings and reviewed 562 briefs. The first Senate report recommended 17 amendments. That report passed without division, reflecting the unanimous view of the groups and citizens across Canada. Because there was an overwhelming consensus on all sides of the Senate for change, the Senate's report reflected that change.

The Commons referred the legislation back on February 4 with a message accepting seven amendments, rejecting ten amendments and introducing two new amendments. That was debated for several days in February, was then referred again to the Senate committee, which held eight meetings, and was finally amended again in a report on March 3, this time with four amendments. This "emergency" legislation then languished in the House of Commons for three and one-half months before being referred back to the Senate. A Commons' message was received by the Senate on July 12 with two amendments accepted and two rejected. This is the eleventh day that this matter has been before the Senate, and it has been the subject matter of over 35 Senate committee hearings.

This, honourable senators, is the mathematics of parliamentary public discourse. This is the mathematics not of delay, not of obstruction, but of genuine, thoughtful legislative process of the law. Of the total of 20 amendments to Bill C-84 proposed by the Senate, eight were accepted and two new amendments were proposed by the government itself.

When we turn to Bill C-55, the pattern is similar. Bill C-55 was introduced in the Senate on October 22 and was debated for five days. It was then referred on November 3 to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. The committee held 36 hearings, received over 440 briefs, travelled throughout most of the country and returned with a report, which, in principle, was concurred in by all members of the Senate, even though divided, because there was an overwhelming consensus for change.

Finally, we referred our report to the House of Commons on May 17. A message was then received back in the Senate on June 28 from the House of Commons and was debated briefly in the Senate on July 14. Again, in aggregate, this bill took nine days in the Senate, 37 committee meetings, 13 amendments—four accepted, three others accepted in part, six rejected and four new amendments proposed by government itself.

When we aggregate these numbers for both of these bills, which were companion measures, the time spent indicates the difficulty and the complexity of the issues raised by Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. This was recognized by all honourable senators. This was recognized and accepted by Senate members from the government side, and finally this was accepted by the government and the Commons. In total, 33 amendments were proposed, 11 accepted, three accepted in part, six new amendments were introduced by the government and 18 rejected in these two companion bills. Equally important, as the chairman of the committee has pointed out, in addition, two written undertakings were given by the minister, dealing with future amendments for "safe return" and just compensation for board members who might be displaced by the new scheme. So, over 20 days in this place and over 63 days in committee was the total time taken to study these measures.

But what happened? Over the past 11 months the parliamentary dialogue gave both the Canadian public and the government an opportunity to reconsider, and when the heat of the moment had cooled the public and the government gained a deeper understanding of the contours of this complex legislation. In the course of those 11 months public discourse changed. The media coverage changed. The media became more thoughtful. The media began to cover the substance of these complex measures.

The lengthy public discourse actually transformed the thinking of the media, the government, the Commons and the bureaucracy. They all became more sensitive to Charter concerns. Honourable senators, you will recall that there were compelling constitutional problems hidden within the bowels of this legislation centred on the conformity to the Charter of Rights, centred on the conformity to Canadian obligations under our international refugee treaties and, of course, on the reformation of the public administration dealing with the refugee processes to ensure fairness and efficiency. The government first proposed, theatrically, to "turn back the boats". This clashed with established Canadian legal principles and Canadian humanitarian principles. It appealed to the darker voices in this country. We are pleased that those darker voices were not heeded.

Let us be candid. Let us be honest. Part of the difficulty, part of the delay, honourable senators, lies in the competing voices and visions for the future of our country. We hear these contested voices and we see these darker visions because they are reflected in the Commons. One set of voices and visions argues, "We are okay, Jack! Refugees go away! Leave us alone in our stable state." These voices demand we stop the world and lift the drawbridges. These voices demand that we should be much more restrictive in whom we let into our country and how we do so. The refugee process, they say, should be long and difficult. Otherwise, these dark voices predict, our Canadian way of life will be undermined. Social unrest will result. Canada's "peace, order and good government" will be displaced by a polyglot injection of refugees, particularly those who are non-European or non-Caucasian in origin, who do not hold so-called "finer values" and who will lower our fine Canadian standards of civic behaviour. A few are just enough, they say. How they forget the lessons of our history. How these voices forget their own roots. How they forget their own family histories. For are we not all immigrants? Are we not all refugees? Are we not the sons and daughters of immigrants and refugees, in this chamber and in the chamber on the other side?

There is, honourable senators, another set of voices, and they tell us that Canada has yet to achieve its destiny, has yet to achieve its greatness, occupying, as it does, the greatest land mass in the world. Unless we match our land mass with massive diversity and innovative skills of new people, we will fall behind, they say. Our standard of living will deteriorate if Canada's growth falters. Our birth rates are static or falling. Our population is aging. The dynamics of growth from youth and diversity are in jeopardy. Canada could open its doors. Canada could easily double its population and bring greater benefits to all.

Again, honourable senators, history is instructive. In Paul Kennedy's magnificent work entitled "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers", which traces economic change and conflict from the year 1500 to the year 2000 over and over again, the same pattern for growth and greatness, he tells us, is dependent directly or indirectly upon the nurtured population growth of the rising nations. How open its migration is and how the society absorbs migration has been the benchmark of innovative, dynamic societies. Nations fall when nations' hopes are outstripped by their economic growth. Nations rise with a growing, diverse, industrious population.

In my own city, Toronto's highly acclaimed urban expert, Jane Jacobs, has demonstrated in her book "Cities and Wealth of the Nations" that national wealth is accelerated by the diversity of population. Diversity spawns innovation. She proved it. The English historian Paul Johnson, in his awesome history of the modern world entitled "Modern Times", calls this "the displacement factor". People displaced from one civilization to another tend to be on the cutting edge of change and innovation. The more diverse the population, the greater the innovation, the greater the change, the greater the growth.

So, honourable senators, despite the time, despite this 11 months, despite the mathematics of democratic debate, the wrong questions were asked. The questions for Canada should not have been how to build bureaucratic barriers to deter refugees. Rather, we should have asked our people, our cities, our provinces, objectively and rationally, how the levels of population growth could be increased. We should have asked: How can we ensure that the absorption of these new, industrious people develops in a more orderly fashion across Canada? How do we take the skills brought to us—these language skills and cultural skills—and transform them into national wealth that can only benefit and enlarge the common wealth of our nation? But, no, these were not the questions we debated. Sadly, this past year the debate was not on population absorption rates, innovative catalysts, economic spin-offs or technological change. It was not the voice and vision of Luke Skywalker and the forces of good and growth; it was the voice and the vision of Darth Vader and the forces of darkness and despair that preoccupied the public dialogue.

Yet, to be fair, the Senate rationally demonstrated, without partisan rancour and out of the spotlight of a national "emergency", that governments can and will listen—will listen and change their course. So, honourable senators, we are here not to condemn the folly of the government but to congratulate the minister for finally understanding that the opposition in the Senate was propelled by voices and visions of growth and long-term national gain. Sadly, opposition was not rooted so much in partisan politics—I do not think this was a partisan issue; opposition was rooted within the minister's own cabinet and voices in her caucus and, most regrettably, in the bureaucracy. Over and over again our politicians are exhorted to learn from the lessons of history. Yet our bureaucrats remain immune to change. The Chief Justice of England, Lord Hewart, first drew this to modern attention when, in 1929, he wrote a startling book entitled "The New Despotism". His book was an enquiry into the power that had accumulated in the bureaucracy and what steps could be taken to make the bureaucratic action and administered law more accountable to public policy. The contest of voices and visions between minister and ministry was most evident in the confusing legislative journey of these two bills.

Essentially, honourable senators, our duty is to ensure that the laws we pass conform both to the principles of pragmatism and to the principles of the Charter, because the Charter tends to make bureaucratic decisions, after the law passes, much more accountable to the rights of the individual. Now, with the Charter, pragmatism and principle can march together. Honourable senators will recall that we have been told overwhelmingly by the more than 1,000 briefs from every part of the country, from every group from every region in the country from coast to coast, that the administration of the refugee laws is wanting. Jonathan Swift, in his remarkable fable, "Gulliver's Travels", put it even better when he wrote about criteria that the Lilliputians adopted in choosing persons for public employment. He wrote:

They have more regard for good morals than great abilities . . . for, since government is necessary to mankind, they believe . . . that providence never intended to make management of publick affairs (to be) a mystery, to be comprehended by only a few persons of sublime genius of which there are seldom three born in an age. They suppose truth, justice, temperance, and the like to be in every man's power; the practice of which virtues assisted by experience and a good intention, can qualify any man for service of his country . . .

The refugee process under Bill C-55 continues to be cumbersome, complex and a mystery to most. There is much yet to reform. Our bureaucrats must heed the other voices demanding a more equitable solution.

So, honourable senators, we come to the end of a saga of legislative history. I predict, honourable senators, with the passage of Bills C-84 and C-55, that this is not the end. This is the beginning of a deeper reformation of our immigration and refugee policies. The laws remain imperfect, unfair and complex. Suddenly there is a new vibrant and confident Canada. The government changed course because it caught glimpses of this new Canada.

The history of refugees is the history of Canada. Look at the modern history of Toronto. Close to 40 per cent of the heads of the households in my city speak a first language other than French or English. The food we eat, the sports we watch and play, the days we celebrate as holidays and the music we dance to are now different. Metro Toronto's dynamic growth and diversity is directly attributable to migrant waves of new people now living and working in our city. Toronto is a different and better place to live in because of the rainbow of refugees who chose to settle there. It is my hope, honourable senators, that next time round the government will start by asking good questions: What kind of Canada do we want? What kind of Canada do we need? How do we get there fairly and quickly?

The legislative history of Bills C-84 and C-55 is not a "March of Folly" but a march—a meandering, perambulating, slow march, but a march nevertheless—towards the future. Now we await different drummers! A different, dynamic Canada awaits us! It is not too late to learn from the lessons of history.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, my understanding is that Senator Hébert wishes to speak tomorrow.

Senator Hébert: Yes.

Senator Nurgitz: In that case, I should like to follow Senator Grafstein today. I, too, pay tribute to the committee and to Senator Neiman in the handling of these complicated bills that affect matters which, as Senator Grafstein attempted to demonstrate, are of deep concern to all of us. I should like to correct Senator Grafstein on several items, but there is one in particular that I think, as a matter of record, should be corrected, which is that the reports of the committee at all stages were majority reports. They were never unanimous reports, as Senator Grafstein indicated, and that includes the report which Senator Neiman tabled today. Without going too far, I suspect that Senator Hébert wishes to be free tomorrow, as is his right, to say some things that may separate his views from some of the findings in the report. Therefore, while it is, indeed, a fact that all of the reports were majority reports, different members of the committee have differing views on some of the matters under discussion. Not one of the reports was unanimous.

Senator Grafstein: If honourable senators will allow me to respond, the point I was trying to make was not that the reports were unanimous but that I believe that the issues and principles in the reports achieved wide consensus on both sides. That is the point I was trying to make.

Senator Nurgitz: If that was the point Senator Grafstein was trying to make, I agree with it. The only point I am trying to make is that the reports were not unanimous.

Honourable senators, I trust that in making these comments I am now dealing with the two items, the report on the motion on Bill C-84 and the report on Bill C-55.

In our report on Bill C-84 the committee recommended that the Senate insist on our amendment that would eliminate the authority to turn ships away. That recommendation was based, in part, on the expectation of the government that the new determination system in Bill C-55 would result in fast decisions and on our view that, therefore, bringing ships to shore would not cause irreparable harm to the system.

In its response the government, through the House of Commons, has taken us at our word. Once Bill C-55 has been proclaimed and the system has had time to prove itself, section 91.1 of the act will cease to be in force. Without either Bill C-55 or Bill C-84, this country has no defence whatsoever against bogus refugee claimants and no meaningful power to attack those who profit from organizing illegal migration, which endangers the lives of desperate people in the process.

We have sought words that could better focus the offense and penalty provisions of Bill C-84. We have been concerned that humanitarian efforts might be at risk.

● (1450)

I have not been confident that the words proposed by the committee would resolve the concerns and ensure that the real exploiters of human misery could be successfully prosecuted. The government, with its access to expertise on criminal prosecutions, has indicated to us that these words could not achieve the goals we were looking for. I am prepared to accept that the discretion of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, or his deputy, will ensure that legitimate and dedicated humanitarians will not be harassed and will not be prosecuted. That is an amendment that came about as a result of our concerns for the various humanitarian groups. Honourable senators, if a minister of the Crown must make an assessment of that evidence and must put a personal signature on that before a prosecution can start, that is a measure of protection.

In our report on Bill C-55 we recognized that the refugee-determination system needed a complete overhaul. We concluded, with reservations, that the structure chosen by the government should be left intact.

We did propose changes in a number of areas. I am of the view that the government has responded openly to our proposals. The committee proposed 18 amendments. The government has accepted two; it has offered alternative wordings for six; and it has proposed four additional amendments to the bill.

With respect to the "safe" third country concept, the government response accepts that such countries should provide determinations on the merits of the claim, that there should be an advisory committee to provide information and insight to cabinet, and that cabinet must consider the human rights record when deciding whether to include a country on the list of those which protect refugees and claimants as well as Canada does.

The government response accepts our proposal that only the minister, personally, can exclude security risks from the refugee-determination system.

Under these latest changes the process of granting permanent residence to Convention refugees will be quicker, simpler and easier than that originally proposed, a tremendous improvement over the status quo, where even the opportunity to apply needs the discretionary authority of officials.

When she spoke to us in April, the minister, the Honourable Barbara McDougall, stated her view that these two bills are linked, a view that we have always held. In that light we have to look at the bills, and the many changes that have been made to them, as a package.

Bill C-84 provides interim controls, pending implementation of the new determination process. They are urgently needed. Implementation, I understand, is at least four to six months away, and as that time passed I am certain that, without Bill C-84, the situation would worsen.

Bill C-84 also has longer-term purposes, since the problems of illegal migration and profiteering are not going to disappear with the passage of these bills. Immigration officials will need these tools to do their jobs in the future.

Honourable senators, Bill C-55 will provide a vastly improved determination system, one that will be more fair and more efficient than that currently in force. The amendments that have been made, both those proposed in the Senate and those proposed in the other place, have improved the new system further. The risks of error and the potential consequences of error have been reduced. Procedural safeguards have been improved. Potential constitutional problems have been addressed and, we hope, resolved.

The committee has taken the time and the care to investigate closely these bills. We have provided the opportunity for public input, not only from national organizations situated here in Ottawa but by travelling across the country.

The changes we have achieved are, I think, a victory for the process. All senators can be proud of what we have achieved. Now we have to face the reality of a refugee-determination system in chaos and recognize that we cannot take more time. We must act, and act quickly. We can act now, confident that we have a fair and pragmatic solution to the concerns raised by the witnesses who appeared before us.

Honourable senators, with respect to these two bills, the committee has received editorial and newspaper comments from across the country—some fair and some otherwise. Many of these comments have been complimentary. The Ottawa Citizen, not always a great fan of this institution, has indicated that the Senate has done good work. In its editorial on July 14 it indicated that we had made useful improvements, but that we should now let the government's two immigration bills proceed. It went on to say:

To delay longer would be unfair to legitimate refugees and to groups like the Turks who, because of the slowness of the refugee process, are allowed to establish roots in Canada only to be turned away.

We do have an emergency in immigration, even if it isn't the one foreseen by the government last summer: a system that is so inefficient, so overloaded, that it too often excludes the deserving, punishes the innocent, and rewards the unscrupulous.

Honourable senators, I recommend and urge acceptance of the messages received from the House of Commons.

On motion of Senator Hébert, debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE
ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twenty-sixth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (motion respecting Bill C-84) presented earlier this day.

Hon. Joan Neiman moved the adoption of the report.

She said: Honourable senators, I believe this order is in the process of being debated.

On motion of Senator Hébert, debate adjourned.

CHILD CARE

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE ON FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE ENTITLED "SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY"—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Eighteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology (Sub-Committee on Child Care), tabled in the Senate on 12th July, 1988.—
(Honourable Senator Bonnell).

Hon. William J. Patten: Honourable senators, this order is standing in Senator Bonnell's name. Senator Bonnell is attending a committee meeting at the present time and will deal with this order tomorrow, Thursday, July 21.

Order stands.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILLS C-110 AND C-121—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-110, An Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, and the subject-matter of the Bill C-121, An Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, in advance of the said Bills coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, with regard to this order, because Senator Frith responded to my first request for a pre-study, one is left to assume that he finds it might be an unnecessary duplication to respond to my second request of June 14, 1988. I suppose that would be a correct assumption.

I note that in his first remarks in responding to and rejecting my request for a pre-study Senator Frith indicated that the new policy of this place is to deal with these bills consecutively. To my knowledge, there are three bills that have passed the House of Commons and are now awaiting a reference to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Do not assume anything.

Senator MacDonald: I think that is a safe assumption, Senator Sinclair.

Senator Sinclair: I do not think so.

Senator MacDonald: I am referring to the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

Senator Sinclair, I notice that the Banking Committee is sitting tomorrow and is dealing with Bill S-15, because it has nothing else to do. This was the idle committee to which I referred when I first brought the matter up.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, what goes on in the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is unknown to people on the other side because they have not been there for two weeks.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, one does not have to be there to take note of the nonsense which has been going on in that committee for the last couple of weeks.

I can make my point very succinctly. Senator Frith does not feel that he should respond to my request for a pre-study. Now that the bills have passed the other place, may I ask him if I may have leave to give second reading to one of these bills, the bill involving the merger and the privatization of Eldorado Nuclear Limited?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you asking?

Senator MacDonald: I am asking.

Senator Frith: No.

Senator MacDonald: So we cannot get pre-study and we cannot get the bill after it has passed the other place. Are you saying that this is not dilly-dallying?

Senator Frith: Was Senator MacDonald in attendance yesterday?

Senator MacDonald: Yes, I was present.

Senator Frith: Apparently not completely. Perhaps he should read the Debates of the Senate of yesterday and he will understand the position that was taken with regard to those bills.

Senator MacDonald: If you are referring to that fit of pique yesterday, I was present and heard it.

● (1500)

Senator Frith: To quote Senator MacDonald of yesterday, a simple request for leave to withdraw this motion would probably get a favourable response.

Senator MacDonald: Well, it obviously should be done.

Senator Frith: Agreed.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, excuse me. On a point of order, I thought I heard Senator Frith say that a simple request for such a motion—

Senator Phillips: For leave.

Senator Barootes: —would be acceptable or would be done. I thought that that had been made, honourable senators. Am I to assume that Senator Frith is in acquiescence with the request from my friend?

Senator Frith: I always forget that I have to speak more slowly for Senator Barootes.

Senator Sinclair: He is hard of hearing!

Senator Frith: I said that a request by the mover of the motion for leave to withdraw the motion would get a favourable response. Senator MacDonald, having heard what I had said earlier—not accepting it willingly but having heard it—said, “Obviously, that should happen.” I agree with him that, since the bills are here in the Senate, we should have the motion for pre-study withdrawn.

Senator Barootes: That is good. Thank you very much. I am sorry that I did not hear what you were braying earlier.

Senator Frith: What uncharitable talk about “pique” and “braying”!

Order stands.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

PROSPECTS OF CANADIAN ECONOMY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, July 14, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the prospects of the Canadian economy under the Free Trade Agreement as forecast by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister, and his Cabinet.

He said: Honourable senators, this is on free trade. You have all been given a text, which you have on your desks.

One of my betters in this chamber—and I am glad to say elder, though he does not look it—said that he is not impressed by passion or sentiment in speeches; he wants facts. I have been doing research for the past four months and this speech contains these facts.

I have read the 315-page text of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement several times; studied the documents to which it refers; pored over articles and testimony both for and against the agreement. I have kept 112 of these extensively cross-referenced in my computer. I have had the facts I shall give below checked by the learned researchers of the Library of Parliament, whose job it is, if asked, to make sure I have my facts straight, whether they share my economic views or not. And I am about to prove that:

Mr. Mulroney, in his trade deal with the U.S., did not obtain his main “vital condition”: exemption for Canadian exporters from “unfair”, protectionist U.S. trade laws. I shall prove that, even though we paid a huge price for it, we now have no more protection than we had before the deal. I shall also prove that economic forecasts used by Mr. Brian Mulroney to sell his deal predict not prosperity but a $1,200 yearly loss in income per person by 1998. These are in 1981 dollars. It may sound unbelievable, but it is true.

I shall show there was a better way than Mr. Mulroney’s deal to preserve our trade with the U.S. I shall show that we chose the worst course, for ideological reasons. I shall prove that politicians and business people misled us, not all of them intentionally. Some business people misled us into choosing the worse course because they believed it to be better: I shall give evidence that it is not better.

I know that by this stage some of you will be tempted to listen no longer, arguing that I am another protectionist who opposes free trade and dreams improbably of weakening or even cutting our links with the U.S. I do not dream that dream.

For now and far into the future, whether we have a bilateral trade agreement with them or not, we shall never be able to dodge the issue of trade with the Americans and the issue of their protectionism and our protectionism. We are their puny Siamese twin, inseparably joined, our belly to their back, so that they are never out of our sight and we are never in theirs. Our trading links are too strong to be broken; for evermore our two countries shall be in negotiations over trade.

But trade should be good for both partners. Not all trade is good simply because it bears the label "free". The words "free" and "trade" conjure up warm feelings in most people; combined, these two words are a powerful slogan. I do not oppose free trade; I am arguing against a "bad" trade. Surely no one wants a bad trade, in the sense of paying an exorbitant price. I shall demonstrate that in Mr. Mulroney's trade deal with the United States we have paid an exorbitant price for what we got. Because this deal so vitally affects us, I beg you to keep listening. It is our duty as citizens to be informed.

The clearest way of explaining a complex issue is to say: "Here is the proposition I intend to prove; here are the facts that prove it in detail. Therefore, I have proven my case." This destroys suspense, but when the author has done the research and knows the answer he should not play coy with his readers for the sake of suspense. So I shall demonstrate that Mr. Mulroney's trade deal with Ronald Reagan was a bad choice for Canada, and I shall do so by proving the following propositions, in order:

(1) Before Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Reagan signed their "Free Trade Agreement", the FTA, our international trade was not broken and did not need fixing. With the U.S. and the rest of the world, our trade was healthy and had been growing fast. Our partners benefited more from trade with us than we did.

(2) Through GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the multinational treaty to promote freer trade, Canada is well protected against efforts by other countries to keep out our exports unfairly.

● (1510)

(3) Mr. Mulroney promised that a trade treaty with the Americans would give our exporters better protection than the GATT gives them. He also promised that we would sign a trade deal with the Americans only if such a deal gave us this better protection for our exporters than the GATT gives them and, thus, a better investment climate and many more jobs.

(4) Prime Minister Mulroney, in his deal with the U.S., did not obtain his main "vital condition": exemption for Canadian exporters from "unfair", protectionist U.S. trade laws. We now have no more protection than we had before the deal.

(5) Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal predict not prosperity but substantial loss of income—$1,200 per year—for every Canadian man, woman and child in 1998 after the Free Trade Agreement is fully in effect. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal, which was not "better". Yet, according to the selfsame forecasts, the risks of not signing it were minimal, a loss of 8.6 cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years.

(6) We paid far too much for what we got in this deal.

(7) There was a better alternative.

(8) We were misled, every step of the way.

Unless otherwise stated, the figures that follow are in 1987 Canadian dollars, which means that the inflation that has occurred over the years has been taken into account and figures are comparable: no apples and oranges confusion here.

[Senator Gigantès.]

The proofs that support propositions (1) through (8), above, will be numbered as (1.1) then (1.2) and eventually (8.1), and so on. This might be formal, but the numbering will help senators find the relevant proofs. Each section will be headed by the text of the proposition to be proved, in bold characters in the text before you. The proofs supporting each proposition will be headed by brief numbered summaries, in italics in the text before you.

The next few pages are a summary and table of contents of the whole demonstration. Because the examination of the trade deal is inevitably complex, the summary that follows is a sort of guide to which the reader can refer back and find where any particular paragraph in the text fits into the scheme of the whole argument.

The proofs below give the relevant texts and figures so that the readers can judge for themselves whether the various propositions have, indeed, been proven. If the readers agree, then they might keep this text, which is designed to be an easy reference tool, as the national debate on this vital issue continues through the years—because it will never be over. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, if it passes, is our new country: This is the map of how we got there.

Honourable senators, I will dispense with reading the Summary and Table of Contents, since you have it before you, and I will come now to the body of the agreement.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Senator Gigantès, several of us who came into the chamber at noon hour today were apprised by the media that there had been a meeting of the Liberal caucus at which a decision had been taken by the party with respect to matters involving free trade, in which area you are obviously a knowledgeable person.

For those of us who have not seen or read what transpired at that meeting, could you please tell us? The media knows; some of us do not.

Senator Gigantès: Are you asking me, sir, to tell you what went on in our caucus?

Senator MacDonald: I am asking you to tell us what statement was made and published by your caucus, for those of us who do not know.

Senator Gigantès: Are you asking me to tell you what we said inside the caucus or what we said outside the caucus afterwards?

Senator MacDonald: I am asking for what was said publicly.

Senator Gigantès: You will have that on the screen from Mr. Turner himself. The statements of my honourable leader, Senator MacEachen, are also on the record. If you do not mind, sir, I will let you read their great eloquence in their own words in the press tomorrow morning or see it on television later today, while I proceed with my modest efforts at handling the English language, if you will allow me.

Senator MacDonald: Senator Gigantès, it is not a matter of allowing you; it is a matter of courtesy to your colleagues. You will not advise us of what transpired and you ask us to—

Senator Gigantès: I would hate to try to emulate the eloquence of either Senator MacEachen or Mr. Turner and repeat what they said. I will let you enjoy to the full what it was they said.

Honourable senators, the title of my next section is: "The Propositions and their Proofs".

(1) Proposition to be proved: Before Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Reagan signed their Free Trade Agreement, the FTA, our international trade was not broken and did not need fixing. With the U.S. and with the rest of the world, our trade was healthy and had been growing fast. Our partners benefited more from our mutual trade than we did.

Proof (1.1) Though we are America's largest trading partner, we are an infinitesimal part of America's trade problems. That is the heading of this proof. Here is the proof:

Our two countries pay one another enormous amounts for goods, services and in dividends, a two-way total of $220 billion in 1987—and these figures are in 1987 dollars and they are Canadian. According to the "U.S. Survey of Current Business", an official Washington publication, in 1987 the Americans paid us $825 million more than we paid them under the so-called current account, which includes goods, services, interest and dividends—that $825 million is the current account deficit of the U.S. in its 1987 transactions with Canada. This $825 million equals four tenths of 1 per cent of America's current account deficit with the rest of the world—four tenths of 1 per cent!

Proof (1.2) The Americans' current account deficit with Japan is 96 times larger than their deficit with us.

The 1987 transactions in goods, services, dividends and interest between the U.S. and Japan totalled $196 billion; America paid $79 billion more to Japan than Japan paid the U.S.: that $79 billion is the U.S. current account deficit with Japan—96 times larger than the U.S. deficit with us.

Proof (1.3) The Americans' current account deficit with Europe is 50 times larger than with us.

Total two-way transactions in goods, services, interest and dividends between the U.S. and the 12 nations of the European Community was $368 billion in 1987; and the U.S. deficit in that trading relationship was $41 billion, or 50 times larger than the Americans' deficit in their transactions with us.

So, not only are we the Americans' largest trading partner, we also cause them the fewest problems, if any. We account for only four tenths of 1 per cent of the Americans' problems in their current account balance; Japan accounts for 40 per cent and Europe for 21 per cent.

Proof (1.4) On average, the U.S. has had a considerable surplus in its transactions with us.

In 35 of the past 40 years the U.S. has had a current account surplus in its commerce with us. The usual situation between our two countries is that we pay them more than they pay us. In the past 20 years alone the U.S. surplus in transactions with us has totalled $61 billion at 1987 prices—after accounting for inflation, that is.

Proof (1.5) Trade between Canada, the rest of the world and the U.S. has been increasing steadily and fast.

Between 1973 and 1984, a period that encompasses the two oil shocks and the deepest recession since the 1930s, world trade, after inflation, grew 50 per cent; so did our trade with the world grow 50 per cent. These are much faster rates of growth than that of our economy, which grew 30 per cent, after inflation, in that period; and even faster than our employed population, which grew 25 per cent from 1973 to 1984.

In the past 20 years, after accounting for inflation, total two-way trade in goods and services between us and the Americans has increased 180 per cent; in the same period U.S. exports of goods and services to Canada have increased 160 per cent, after inflation. One could hardly say that Canada has been against more trade.

Proof (1.6) Tariffs have come down spectacularly in trade between Canada and the U.S.

Between 1965 and 1987 Canadian tariffs on imports from the U.S. were cut to one third, from 8.1 per cent to 2.7 per cent, on average. In 1986—the 1987 figures were not ready at the time I prepared my speech—73.2 per cent of what we bought from the U.S. entered Canada duty free, against only 51.0 per cent in 1965. And even without the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, the continued reduction of the remaining tariffs was being negotiated in the current or Uruguay Round of the GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the multinational free trade agreement. This latest round of GATT negotiations to liberalize world trade is a victory for the U.S. advocacy of global free trade. Actually, if one is to believe the U.S. administration, the Free Trade Agreement with Canada was part of, and never a substitute for, the traditional American policy of global free trade.

So Canada has shown by its actions over the years that it is for more and freer trade and certainly for what the Americans call "fair" trade, meaning that we are prepared to buy as much from the Americans as we sell to them, thus keeping the transactions balanced. From the U.S. point of view, we are the best of good guys as a trading partner.

Proof (1.7) Canada-U.S. trade means better jobs and more technology for Americans than for us.

In 1987, for instance, we sold to the U.S. $9.5 billion worth of unprocessed, inedible materials; they sold us only $3.4 billion worth of such materials. Seventy-three per cent of their exports to us, worth $68.2 billion, were in the better-job-content categories of travel services, business services, electronic products, motor vehicles, parts for motor vehicles and other manufactured goods. In those categories we sold only $54.2 billion to the Americans.

They sold us fully finished goods worth $57 billion and we sold them $46.8 billion worth of such goods. Technology and the better jobs are more likely to be in fully finished rather than in unprocessed goods. However, there are no reliable economic studies that give the precise number of jobs involved.

Honourable senators, in my text I have a small table that takes up about 12 lines. It describes in tabulated form the figures I have just read to you. I hope that no one objects to this table appearing in the record. If anyone objects, will he please say so?

Senator Flynn: It does not mean that we accept its veracity.

Senator Gigantès: Then, let it be noted that the Senate does not object to the publishing of the table on page 10 of my text.

TABLE I: CANADA-U.S. TRADE IN 1987

	Sold to America		Bought from America
	%	$ bil.	%	$ bil.
Travel services	3.9	4.15	5.5	5.12
Business services	3.1	3.30	6.6	6.20
Electronic products	4.0	4.30	9.3	8.62
Motor vehicles	19.4	20.74	13.6	12.72
Auto parts	10.4	11.16	16.6	15.53
Other manuf. products	9.8	10.51	21.3	19.98
TOTAL	50.6	54.16	72.9	68.17

NOTE: Percentages are of total Canada-U.S. trade for 1987. The data come from Statistics Canada.

Proof (1.8) Our trade with Japan and Europe also means better jobs and more technology for them than for us.

In 1987 the Japanese sold us $6.8 billion worth of fully finished products, 20 times the $343 million we sold them. We sold only $1.8 billion worth of fully finished products to the EEC, the European Economic Community, and bought $7.1 billion of such products from them.

Proof (1.9) In view of the above, our principal trading partners have no objective interest to keep out our exports.

Commerce with us is good for our major trading partners. They have little reason for turning protectionist against us. Protectionism stems partly from the need to preserve employment by making things at home rather than importing them. The "things" that represent the better jobs and the most technology are fully finished products.

A foreign client, like Canada, that buys many more fully finished products than it sells is not the kind of client whose exports one rationally excludes; because, if our exports are excluded by our foreign clients, then we shall not be earning enough of their money and shall not be able to afford what they export to us in fully finished products.

Proof (1.10) We are the glacis of the United States—an important point.

The glacis, in medieval times, was the area closest to your fortress, an area where you wanted absolutely no trouble. The U.S. could not have a less troublesome glacis: in our Northwest Passage, we bomb their trespassing ships with small Canadian flags. The Russians should have had such luck in Afghanistan. Nice neighbours like us, so strategically essential, deserve fairness: more on this later.

Therefore, proposition (1) has been proven, that:

[Senator Gigantès.]

Before Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Reagan signed their "Free Trade Agreement", the FTA, our international trade was not broken and did not need fixing. With the U.S. and the rest of the world, our trade was healthy and had been growing fast. Our partners benefited more from our mutual trade than we did.

But what if our trading partners irrationally decided to treat us unfairly? What protection did we have before the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal against unfair trading practices? Was the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the GATT, the multinational free trade organization, security enough for us against foreign protectionism?

I come now to proposition (2), to be proved: Through GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the multinational treaty to promote freer trade, Canada is well protected against efforts by other countries to keep out our exports unfairly.

The settlement of trade disputes is a terribly important aspect of any international trade system like the GATT. Such a system stands or falls by its performance on settling disputes among members, given that international trade is intensely political—if only because it is politically easier to blame foreigners for one's trade woes.

Disputes often arise because the trade benefits to one trading partner or the other, when graphed, do not appear as a straight line but zigzag, up and down, as is inevitable between free enterprise economies. It is when they think their sector should have zigged up rather than zagged down that special interest groups launch their lobbyists. This occurs on both sides of commercial borders with the same degree of fairness or unfairness. American business people are not invariably satanic nor Canadian entrepreneurs invariably angelic. When it comes to ethics they are interchangeable, and their malcontents for hire—their lobbyists, that is—are equally prevaricatory.

"We are losing sales because of unfair competition from imported widgets," they clamour. The bigger picture might show that our losses to imported widgets are compensated by gains in exporting our country's computers. But we domestic widget makers are not personally compensated. We want protection for our home-made widgets and the jobs they represent.

• (1530)

There generally is a legislator, facing election, who feels he must protect his widget-making voters. Sometimes this leads to actions that other countries consider to be unfair international trading practices under the GATT.

Proof (2.1) GATT aims to ban protectionist practices, generally. It believes that untrammelled trade is best for all nations.

After World War Two, GATT was promoted by successive U.S. administrations to make sure nations would not sink again into the extreme protectionism of the Great Depression, thereby causing another great depression. The economic theory on which the GATT is based holds that untrammelled global commerce is best for everyone. Under conditions of free trade, each nation exports those things for the production of which it has a comparative advantage. Certain countries, for instance, have better climate and better soil than others for making wine. To interfere with this "natural" allocation of advantages means producing things in the wrong places and, hence, more expensively, thereby reducing consumption, hence production and, thus, wealth.

The 96 members of GATT have developed agreed rules about what is fair trade. GATT regulates tariffs and has codes of behaviour on non-tariff barriers, subsidies and dumping. GATT goes so far as to decree that certain laws passed by its member countries are against the spirit of GATT itself.

GATT deems it "unfair", and in the long run economically harmful, to sell exports for less than they cost to produce—a practice called dumping—if this injures the producers of similar products in the importing country. Governments must not subsidize their exporters so that these can sell at less than they could without subsidy, but only if this injures producers of comparable goods in other nations. I want to stress that GATT does not have an ideological aversion to subsidies; it objects to them only if subsidized goods injure producers of comparable goods in other nations. Nor must other peoples' exports be kept out through discriminatory tariffs, which are taxes on specific imports from one nation but not from another; or by non-tariff barriers, such as customs procedures that are deliberately discriminatory, or patently nationalistic quality standards, or "buy our own" campaigns.

The GATT has not been successful so far in developing workable, accepted rules for trading agricultural products. And the GATT does not cover trade in services. But the current GATT negotiations are addressing these issues. The GATT has not been successful so far in developing workable accepted rules for agricultural products, because the main agricultural producers have refused to deal with GATT, but they are discussing it now.

Be that as it may, over the decades GATT has cut tariffs deeply and much increased world trade. I would suggest that you see point (1.5) above.

Proof (2.2) GATT fights cheating that foils free trade. GATT member country A can claim that member country B is breaking the agreed general rules of GATT or one of its specific codes—the code on dumping, for instance. GATT panels of experts from countries not involved in the dispute issue a ruling which is only applicable if it is accepted by the GATT members, including both A and B.

If the ruling is in favour of A, B can appeal to the 96-member GATT council; or country B may accept that it has broken the rules but may refuse to stop its offending practices. Country A may then ask for and obtain from GATT the right to retaliate proportionately. Obviously, if A is a much smaller economy than B, retaliation is ineffective.

In an actual example, Holland won a case against the U.S. The U.S. admitted that its trading practices were an infraction of GATT's code but refused to change them. Holland was allowed to retaliate proportionately against the U.S. The mouse was allowed to kick the elephant. The elephant did not notice.

Proof (2.3) With one exception—see (2.4) below—a wronged GATT member can only act against wrongdoers, not the innocent.

Under GATT, country A may charge that country B is breaking a GATT rule or code. Country A must prove that the measures of country B are inconsistent with the GATT or are causing or threatening injury to A. A GATT panel, if it agrees with A, may ask B to withdraw its offensive measures, and, if not, to compensate A.

If compensation is not paid, the panel may allow A to retaliate proportionately. Redress is only applicable to the offending country. The U.S. cannot win a GATT case against Japan and apply the findings against an innocent Canada. If we are not breaking the rules of GATT, the U.S. or the EEC cannot block our exports under GATT. If they tried, we could then appeal to GATT for redress.

Proof (2.4) Under Article XIX of the GATT, a country may restrict imports if these grow suddenly and are causing or threatening serious injury to domestic producers of similar goods, but the exporting countries are entitled to compensation or retaliation.

Under this procedure, for example, a sudden surge of steel imports from Korea may so threaten U.S. steel producers that Washington restricts imports of steel from all countries, even from Canada, whose steel producers might not have been engaged in over-exporting to the U.S.

However, the country instituting an Article XIX action must consult with countries affected, either before or immediately after it imposes restrictions. These countries may compensate themselves by proportionately restricting imports from the country that launched the Article XIX action.

Proof (2.5) GATT has worked reasonably fast. Disputes are resolved by GATT in about ten months, generally—which is the amount of time allowed under the Free Trade Agreement—though two instances of defiant U.S. protectionism took so many years that they pushed up the average time GATT has taken to settle cases. Reforms begun in 1979 have been speeding up the dispute-settlement process in GATT.

Proof (2.6) GATT arbitration has worked well in nearly all fields, except agriculture. Most often, it is the U.S. and the EEC who try to defy GATT rulings.

Seventy-five dispute-settlement cases were completed by GATT between its beginning in 1948 and 1987, according to a study by the U.S. International Trade Commission. Of these, 62 were settled either because GATT found that the complaint was not justified or the offending party made amends. In seven other cases, mainly dealing with agricultural issues, GATT could not get the parties to agree. The outcome of six cases was not yet known at the time of writing this yesterday.

The U.S. and the EEC or its member states have been parties to nearly all the disputes brought before the GATT in the past 40 years, the U.S. most often as the complainant with the EEC as the defendant; and most often agricultural issues were the bone of contention. The U.S. and the EEC defy GATT rulings most often. Even so, over 90 per cent of GATT dispute settlements have been accepted by the countries concerned.

Nevertheless, increased GATT disputes and increased defiance are part of an alarming new trend. However, the current GATT negotiations aim at better agreement on trade in agricultural products, in services, as well as improved definitions of what are unacceptable non-tariff barriers and subsidies.

We Canadians have won more often than we have lost in GATT, and it is fair to say that, when we lost, we lost because we broke the GATT rules. If we were tempted to defy the GATT decisions that went against us, we resisted the temptation. Generally, we won when we complained against others: For the most part, GATT members complain when they have a good case.

For example, GATT ruled in our favour when we complained that the EEC was unfairly keeping out our wheat and barley. We have yet to collect compensation. We won when the U.S. put an embargo on our tuna and tuna products over a fishing rights dispute. We won again when the EEC would only import U.S. "high quality" beef, and we were given the right to compete on the European market against the Americans.

We won, in large part, when the U.S. complained that the Trudeau government's Foreign Investment Review Agency, FIRA, asked Americans investing in Canada to buy Canadian goods rather than imports; to manufacture certain goods in Canada rather than import them, and to export a certain share of their Canadian production. GATT never questioned that Canada had the right to screen foreign investment and to seek export commitments from foreign investors, but GATT ruled that we did not have the right to ask that American investors buy Canadian goods, regardless of price or quality. We dropped that last requirement and complied with GATT.

Incidentally, that GATT victory was reversed in the Free Trade Agreement.

In sum, to quote the Honourable Pat Carney: "For the first 40 years since the post-war world first adopted the international rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Canada's exports have multiplied 10 times over..." (Commons Debates, page 4177, March 16, 1987.)

Therefore, proposition (2) has been proven, that: Through GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the multinational treaty to promote freer trade, Canada is well protected against efforts by other countries to keep out our exports unfairly.

(3) Proposition to be proved: Mr. Mulroney promised that a trade treaty with the U.S. would give our exporters better protection than under the GATT; he also promised that we would sign a trade deal with the U.S. only if such a deal gave us better protection than the GATT for our exporters; and, thus, a better investment climate and many more jobs.

I am now going to list all these various promises that were made in response to a situation presented to us as follows:

The U.S. has serious problems competing with other nations and is psychologically troubled by this. Developing countries, with very low wages, but with the latest equipment, produce better high school graduates and technicians, better and cheaper ships, cars, computers, cameras, television sets, clothes, shoes, steel and stereos than the Americans can, for the time being. U.S. consumers buy the cheaper, better products made in other countries. Many Americans, who used to build cars or ships at home, are no longer members of a rich labour élite, like the steel workers of yesteryear, but are now low-wage salespeople in straitened circumstances.

Americans buy more from the rest of the world than they sell—$195 billion more in 1987. Because they earn less than they spend in their trade relations, Americans are forced to borrow from the rest of the world. They feel like the embarrassed, formerly rich person with no cash to pay for the children's milk, who has to ask the corner store for credit.

This image of having come down in the world is very powerful and has a great psychological impact on Americans, whether they be newly impoverished workers, who have lost their jobs to imports, or rich and influential Wall Street high flyers. We are bound to be threatened by these American feelings.

It is best to let the Honourable Pat Carney tell in her own words why she thought we needed more than GATT. She was Minister for International Trade when she made the comments that follow. Numbered passages in italics precede, summarize and headline each theme of Ms. Carney's in the text before you.

Proof (3.1) Though it wants more protection for our exporters, the Mulroney government is committed to the GATT trade system.

"There should be no mistaking (the Mulroney) government's commitment to the GATT. We are an active, dynamic and leading player in the GATT. We are absolutely committed to the General Agreement (on Tariffs and Trade) and to the Uruguay Round (of current negotiations to reform the GATT). However, in reaffirming our commitment to the GATT we must realize that it alone cannot protect all our interests." (Commons Debates, page 253, October 9, 1986.)

Proof (3.2) The Americans threaten to leave GATT if it is not reformed to include trade in services.

"... the Americans can no longer dominate traditional markets such as steel and automobiles, and they threatened to walk away from GATT if trade in services was not included." (Commons Debates, page 4179, March 16, 1987.)

Proof (3.3) Washington wants a trade deal with us to prove to the rest of the world that an agreement is possible to reform the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

"The feeling in America is very strong that if they cannot make a deal with Canada in these new areas... they are unlikely to do it in the GATT. They have a... fundamental interest, even an historic interest, in trying to come to terms with us. So, the conditions for these negotiations are far more balanced than the Opposition would lead us to believe." (Commons Debates, page 4179, March 16, 1987.)

Proof (3.4) Existing American trade remedy laws used against Canadian exporters in U.S. courts are unfair.

"Trade laws in the U.S. (are) at the disposal of any interest group that wants to bring an action against Canada." (Commons Debates, page 254, October 9, 1986.) "In the last seven years, Americans have launched some 40 (cases in U.S. courts) against Canadian goods. Many have failed but those that have succeeded penalized Canadian exports worth over $6.5 billion... no one knows better than I about the effect American trade remedy laws have had on our exports. We have seen it in shakes and shingles, fish, lumber, and farm products... (their) unilateral decisions on what they call unfair practices are the problem between us... (The) Americans call them fair trade laws but they are not." (Commons Debates, page 4178, March 16, 1987.)

I include all these quotations because sometimes people like me are accused of being anti-American.

Senator Doody: Never!

Senator Gigantès: Listen to the rhetoric of Ms. Carney.

Proof (3.5) If they lose against us with their existing trade remedy laws, Americans may enact harsher protectionist laws.

"However, what is equally important is a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case. We see that in the softwood lumber case. We won the case in 1983. We then faced a number of legislative initiatives seeking in one way or other to limit our exports to the U.S. We then faced a fact-finding investigation and yet another countervail action this year. (If)... U.S. industry does not get what it wants, there will be the likelihood of more Congressional action." (Commons Debates, pages 253-254, October 9, 1986.)

Proof (3.6) American trade remedy laws are applied unpredictably, cause uncertainty and thereby reduce investment in Canada.

"(U.S. court) cases (against Canadian exporters, based on American trade remedy laws) complicate investment decisions because, to be successful, Canadian producers need security of access to foreign markets... If the rules keep changing, then that security is jeopardized and diminished." (Commons Debates, pages 253-254, Oct. 9, 1986.)

"All of my discussions with Japanese investors... encourage me to believe that should we have security of our access to the U.S. market and give the U.S. equal access to our market,... access secured by a long-term binding treaty,... investment from Japan and other places would flow in increasing quantities to Canada and create jobs." (Ms. Carney, Commons Debates, pages 4178 to 4181, March 16, 1987.)

"As long as we have the present countervail system and the same (U.S.) trade remedy laws, as long as there is great uncertainty about what we can or cannot do in order to access (the U.S.) market, it will be a drag on investment." (Ms. Carney, Commons Debates, pages 4178-4181, March 16, 1987.)

Proof (3.7) If we do not get a better deal with the U.S., we could lose 500,000 jobs. Please remember these figures. If we do get a better deal, we shall gain 370,000 new jobs.

"We could lose half a million (jobs)" without a better trade deal with the U.S., the Honourable Pat Carney said. "Trade is where the jobs are... One per cent of American government procurement could create 75,000 jobs in Canada." A better trade deal with the U.S. provides "the best opportunity to create hundreds of thousands of new jobs and economic studies support this. I can cite studies done by the Economic Council of Canada which show that 370,000 jobs could be created in the next five years." (Commons Debates, pages 4178 to 4181, March 16, 1987.)

Remember that economic study by the Economic Council.

Proof (3.8) A "better deal for Canada", Ottawa says, must be a comprehensive agreement, binding the Americans with fair and predictable new rules; these would replace the current U.S. trade laws, which are unpredictable and unfair.

"We want to secure... our access to U.S. markets... (We want to) deal with (U.S.) dispute settlement mechanisms that are used to harass" Canadian exporters. (Commons Debates, pages 4178-4179, March 16, 1987.) "That is why we seek new rules (on) subsidies and related measures... We want better rules on what we can and cannot do." (Commons Debates, pages 253-254, Oct. 9, 1986.) "We want to lock those rules and that security of access into... a long term binding treaty between both countries." (Commons Debates, pages 4178-4181, March 16, 1987.)

Or, as Prime Minister Mulroney told the New York Times on April 3, 1987, and the quotation is from the article, "there were several vital conditions the (trade agreement) would have to meet. Most important among these, Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the United States' fair-trading laws."

Proof (3.9) If we do not get a better deal, as defined in (3.8), there will be no deal.

"If our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal," the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister, quoted by the Honourable Pat Carney, (Commons Debates, page 255, Oct. 9, 1986.)

Therefore, proposition (3) has been proven, that:

Mr. Mulroney promised that a trade treaty with the U.S. would give our exporters better protection than under the GATT; he also promised that we would sign a deal with the U.S. only if it gave us better protection than the GATT for our exporters; and, thus, a better investment climate and many more jobs.

(4) Proposition to be proved: Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, in his trade deal with the U.S., did not obtain his "most important vital condition": exemption for Canadian exporters from "unfair", protectionist U.S. trade laws. We now have no more protection than we had before the FTA. We do not have a better deal.

This section starts with the text of dispute-settlement mechanisms in the Free Trade Agreement, FTA, and the corresponding GATT provisions, so that you may compare.

Proof (4.1) Both the FTA and the GATT have appeals procedures.

(4.1 FTA) "The Parties hereby establish the Canada-United States Trade Commission (the Commission) to supervise the implementation of this agreement, to resolve disputes that may arise over its interpretation and application, to oversee its further elaboration and to consider any other matter that may affect its operation." (Free Trade Agreement, Article 1802, Chapter 18, page 261.)

(4.1 GATT) The comparable text: There shall be established... a Committee... composed of representatives from each of the signatories of this agreement... The Committee... shall afford signatories the opportunity of consulting on any matters relating to the operation of the Agreement or the furtherance of its objectives." (GATT, special agreements on interpretation and application of Articles VI, XVI, and XXIII.)

Proof (4.2) In both the FTA and the GATT, if a wrongdoer doesn't offer redress, the wronged party may apply equal retaliation.

(4.2 FTA) "The Commission... may refer any... dispute to binding arbitration... If a Party fails to implement in a timely fashion the findings of a binding arbitration panel and the Parties are unable to agree on appropriate compensation or remedial action, then the other Party shall have the right to suspend the application of equivalent benefits of this agreement to the non-complying Party." (Free Trade Agreement, Chapter 18, page 263.)

(4.2 GATT) The corresponding one: "In cases where the parties have failed to come to a satisfactory solution... the Committee may make recommendations... with a view to resolving the dispute. If the Committee's recommendations are not followed within a reasonable period, the Committee may authorize appropriate countermeasures, including withdrawal of GATT concessions." (GATT, Article XVIII, paragraphs 1 through 9.)

Technical note: Some argue that the Commission, established under Article 1802 of Chapter 18 of the FTA—see point (4.1 FTA)—does not have authority over all disputes because of the preceding Article 1801, which states that "Except for the matters covered in Chapter 17 (Financial Services) and Chapter 19 (Binational Dispute Settlement in Antidumping and Countervailing Duty Cases), the provisions of this part (Chapter 18) shall apply with respect to the avoidance or settlement of all disputes regarding the interpretation or application of this agreement..."

[Senator Gigantès.]

If words mean anything, however, the words of Article 1802 make it clear that this article is not affected by the exceptions mentioned in Article 1801, above. Here again is what Article 1802 says: "The Parties hereby establish the Canada-United States Trade Commission (The Commission) to supervise the implementation of this agreement, to resolve disputes that may arise over its interpretation and application, to oversee its further elaboration and to consider any other matter that may affect its operation. If there are differences of opinion between Canada and the U.S. on how to interpret and apply Chapters 17 and 19 of the FTA, the only authority to which these differences can be submitted is the Commission, which may deal with "any other matter that affects (the) operation (of the Agreement)."

● (1600)

Proof (4.3) Under both the FTA and the GATT, an importing country can act to limit a sudden surge of imports which threaten or cause damage to its domestic producers.

(4.3 FTA) "If a good originating in the territory of one Party is... being imported into the territory of the other Party in such increased quantities and... under such conditions so that the imports of such good... constitute a substantial cause of serious injury to a domestic industry producing a like or directly competitive good, the importing Party may, to the extent necessary to remedy the injury... increase the rate of duty on such good... or suspend the further reduction of any rate of duty provided for under this Agreement on such good." (Free Trade Agreement, page 169.)

(4.3 GATT) "If (a) product is being imported into the territory of (one) party in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to the domestic producers in that territory of like or directly competitive products... (the importing) party... to the extent... necessary to remedy such injury... (may) suspend... or modify... tariff concessions... under this agreement." (GATT, Article XIX, paragraph 1.)

Proof (4.4) But import blocking must be announced and discussed in advance with the exporting countries.

(4.4 GATT) "Before any... party shall take (such) action... it shall give notice in writing... and shall afford... an opportunity to consult..." (GATT, Article XIX, paragraph 2.)

Proponents of the the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, FTA, maintain that the provisions of the FTA in such "emergency" actions against a sudden surge of imports are a great improvement on the protection we had under the GATT. Under the FTA, the U.S., taking such emergency import-blocking action, must exclude Canada from such action unless imports from Canada are substantial and contribute "importantly" to injury for U.S. producers. Five to 10 per cent would not normally be considered substantial. This, say the proponents of FTA, eliminates the problem of Canada getting caught up in a global action taken by the U.S. against other countries under GATT—the sideswipe effect.

Further, say the supporters of the trade agreement, the U.S. can no longer reduce Canadian imports below a reasonable trend for the previous 36 months or maintain the blocking of imports longer than three years. In other words, under the FTA, Canada and the U.S. will be fair and reasonable towards one another, say the advocates of the trade deal.

However, what if the United States decides to treat Canada unfairly? But does anyone seriously think the Americans are capable of being unfair? Well, when she was Canada's Minister for International Trade, Ms. Carney certainly thought so. She thought the Americans are capable of being unfair: "What is equally important is a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case . . . (If a) U.S. industry does not get what it wants, there will be the likelihood of more Congressional action." (Commons Debates, pages 253-254, October 9, 1986.) In other words, if they lose under the rules, they change the rules. If that is not unfair, what is?

Proof (4.5) Affected exporters are allowed equal retaliation.

(4.5 FTA) "If the Parties are unable to agree . . . the exporting party may take tariff action having trade effects substantially similar to the action taken by the importing Party . . .", whether this is a case of the U.S. blocking imports from Canada alone or from all countries. (Free Trade Agreement, pages 170 and 171.)

(4.5 GATT) "If agreement is not reached . . . the parties (exporting the blocked goods) shall be free . . . to suspend substantially equivalent concessions . . . (to the importing) party . . ." (GATT, Article XIX, paragraph 3).

Notice the similarity every time. Essentially, there is great similarity between all the provisions dealing with dispute settlement in both the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, GATT, and in the trade deal signed by Prime Minister Mulroney and President Reagan, FTA: all other issues are also almost identical in the two texts—the steps to be taken, the time allowed for each step, the way experts are selected and listed so they can be called upon to sit on panels adjudicating disputes, and so on.

At the end of the day, after the final appeal in both the GATT and the FTA, it all comes down to the same thing: If country A has wronged country B; if, nevertheless, A will not cease and desist, then B has the right to equal retaliation, in the FTA as in the GATT. And this makes sense, self-evident sense, when we deal not with laws within one country that can be enforced but with relations between sovereign nations. If sovereign country A is unfair to sovereign country B, nothing can be done other than to agree that B has the right to get even. The FTA and the GATT have the same last resort. It could not be otherwise.

Proof (4.6) In his trade deal, Mr. Mulroney did not get a "better" deal; nor did he obtain his "most important vital condition", which he had stated to be exemption for Canadian exporters from unfair U.S. "fair trading" laws.

Why should one object to the free trade deal signed by Mr. Mulroney if it is so similar to the GATT? Because not only did Mr. Mulroney say he was seeking a "better" deal and not just a similar deal; he also did not obtain his most important "vital" condition, which he defined for the New York Times on April 3, 1987, "... that Canada must be permanently exempt from the United States' fair-trading laws." (See point (3.8) above.)

Under the FTA, the trade deal Mr. Mulroney signed, these American "fair-trading" laws still apply. Here is what the text of the Free Trade Agreement says: "Each Party reserves the right to apply its antidumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the . . . other Party . . . Either Party may request that a panel review . . . a final antidumping or countervailing duty determination (by) a competent investigating authority of either Party to (judge) whether such determination was in accordance with the antidumping or countervailing duty law of the importing party." (Free Trade Agreement, pages 271-273.)

Advocates of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement point out that this state of affairs is only going to last at most seven years, after which period a new regime will prevail: "... pending the development of a substitute system of rules in both countries for antidumping and countervailing duties as applied to their bilateral trade . . . Failure to agree to implement a new regime at the end of the (seven year period) shall allow either party to terminate the agreement on six months notice." (Free Trade Agreement, page 279).

However, under the Baucus-Danforth amendment accepted by appropriate committees of the U.S. Congress in July 1988, American industries will retain the right to file trade actions alleging unfair subsidized trading by their Canadian competitors. This amendment makes sure that, even if Canada and the U.S. agree on a set of common rules, Canadian exporters will never be exempt permanently from harassment under the American "fair-trading laws". And such exemption was Mr. Mulroney's "most important vital condition", without which he would not consider he had achieved a better deal; and he said he would sign only if he did get a better deal.

It is worth repeating the relevant quotations—we must not forget these things: Prime Minister Mulroney talking to the New York Times on April 3, 1987: "There were several vital conditions the trade agreement would have to meet. Most important among these, Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the United States' fair-trading laws"; and Ms. Carney quoted him: "If our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal." This is Ms. Carney quoting Mr. Mulroney. (Commons Debates, page 255, October 9, 1986.)

Here it should also be noted that the Mulroney government treats the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the FTA, as a treaty. To implement this treaty, Mr. Mulroney introduced Bill C-130, legislation which gives the FTA pre-eminence over all other Canadian laws: "No person shall, in the purported performance of duties or functions under any law of Canada, do any act, exercise any power or carry on any practice that is inconsistent with or contravenes this Act or any regulation made under this Act or the Agreement." We can do nothing that goes against this agreement.

In contrast, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is not a binding treaty for Washington. Congress there has the power over all commerce. The Free Trade Agreement in Washington is just another piece of legislation that the Congress can amend, and it already has amended it to say that the Free Trade Agreement can never overrule the authority of the U.S. legislature to make trade laws. The converse is true here. They kept the power; we gave it away.

Proof (4.7) Under the FTA, the U.S. can still erect new legislative hurdles for our exports if existing hurdles are not enough.

Before the FTA, if the Americans lost a case against a Canadian exporter in their own courts on the basis of U.S. trade laws, they sought to change the law, as Ms. Pat Carney told us when she was Minister for International Trade. This quotation has to be repeated. We have to remember: "What is equally important is a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case . . . (If a) . . . U.S. industry does not get what it wants, there will be the likelihood of more Congressional action." (Commons Debates, pages 253-254, October 9, 1986.)

The trade agreement signed by Mr. Mulroney allows "more Congressional action" to continue changing U.S. laws if Americans lose their cases on the basis of existing laws. Where is predictability? Here is what the FTA says: "Each Party reserves the right to change or modify its antidumping or countervailing duty laws provided . . . the amending Party notifies the other Party in writing of the amending statute as far in advance as possible . . . A Party may request in writing that an amendment to the other Party's antidumping or countervailing duty statute be referred to a panel . . . (If) the panel recommends modifications to the amending statute (and) remedial legislation is not enacted within nine months . . . the (wronged) Party may take comparable . . . or equivalent executive action . . ." (Free Trade Agreement, pages 272-273.)

In other words, we are back again to the elephant kicking the mouse or the mouse kicking the elephant.

As we already saw, even at the final appeal level, that of the Commission which supervises the whole Free Trade Agreement, it all comes down to equal retaliation. Here, again, is the text: "... The Commission . . . may refer any . . . dispute . . . to binding arbitration . . . If a Party fails to implement in a timely fashion the findings of a binding arbitration panel . . . then the other Party shall have the right to suspend the application of equivalent benefits of this agreement to the non-complying party." (Free Trade Agreement, pages 261-263.)

Proof (4.8) Mr. Mulroney's trade deal provides no means for "binding" the U.S. It provides means for binding Canada.

"Binding" the U.S. in the trade deal Mr. Mulroney signed means that we Canadians shall have the right to cut American exports to us by the same amount in dollars as the U.S. cuts our exports to them. Our trade with them represents 24 per cent of our GNP; their trade with us represents only 2 per cent of their GNP. Why should they feel bound?

Proponents of the trade deal concede that retaliation of equivalent value is likely to be felt more acutely in Canada than in the U.S. However, this sanction is irrelevant, writes one of the proponents, Professor Robert E. Hudec, because "the real sanction behind legally binding decisions is national tradition against violating international legal obligations . . . In a political relationship as close as the Canada-U.S. relationship, it should be even more effective than usual." To which one can only reply by citing the Honourable Pat Carney again, when she was Canada's Minister for International Trade: "What is equally important is a disturbing reluctance in the U.S. to accept the verdict when U.S. interests do not win a case . . . (If a) United States industry does not get what it wants, there will be the likelihood of more Congressional action." (Robert E. Hudec, comments in the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement: The global Impact, Institute for Research and Public Policy 1988, page 93; and Ms. Carney, Commons Debates, pages 253-254, October 9, 1986.)

Proof (4.9) The one "new safeguard"—we have been told a lot about that—of the FTA is meaningless: the agreement's binational panels will not give us fairer judgments than U.S. courts did before the FTA.

As always, under U.S. trade laws which continue to apply even after the FTA, the American government or any of its citizens, including corporations, can complain to Washington that a Canadian exporter is guilty of unfair trade practices. As was the case before the FTA, so also after the FTA, U.S. agencies like the International Trade Commission or their Department of Commerce can find the Canadian exporter guilty and impose countervailing or antidumping duties.

The one difference is that after this initial stage the Canadian government can ask that the appeal not be heard in a U.S. court but before one of the binational panels established by the Free Trade Agreement Mr. Mulroney signed.

But this will not give Canada any advantages it did not have before, write Hogan and Hartson, the U.S. law firm hired by Mr. Mulroney's cabinet to study the agreement:

"The documents made clear that the purpose of a binational review of U.S. administrative decisions is to determine if the decisions are in accordance with U.S. law. In addressing this issue, the binational panel will apply the same standards of judicial review that would be applied by the U.S. courts. It is difficult to conclude that the two systems are likely to lead to different results. Indeed, one can reach such a conclusion only if one is prepared to assume that the binational composition of the panel will significantly affect the panel's decisions."

● (1620)

"However, it is reasonable to assume that the (binational) panel will render impartial decisions; and we are not aware of instances in which it has been widely alleged that the U.S. courts have failed fairly to construe U.S. law or to apply the appropriate standard of judicial review. Accordingly, we can find no reason to assume that the panel is likely to render judgments markedly different from those that would be rendered by the United States courts."

"While the (U.S.) Commerce Department has been believed by some of occasionally construing the anti-dumping and countervailing laws in response to political pressures as well as legal principle, the binational panel mechanism does not eliminate that possibility... (for), it appears designed to ensure impartiality at the appellate level, a level at which impartiality has never seriously been questioned." ("Venturing Forth, An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement", The Economic Council of Canada, 1988, pages 35-36).

Further, the appeal through the binational dispute-settlement mechanism as an alternative to an appeal through the GATT may be to our disadvantage. A Library of Parliament research paper says: "An appeal to and ruling by the binational panel forecloses any subsequent appeal by the losing party to the GATT panel process. Since U.S. trade legislation is in general more protectionist than the GATT rules, it is at least conceivable that in some cases Canada's GATT rights could be overridden by a bilateral disputes procedure that, in effect, confers legitimacy on U.S. trade-remedy laws as they apply to Canada."

Finally, the members of GATT panels are picked among citizens of all the 96 member countries, save those that are involved in the dispute. When one is small, as Canada is, there may well be safety in numbers. Under the FTA, on our binational dispute-settlement panels, it will be the Canadian mice alone facing the U.S. elephants. Under GATT, there would be an awful lot of other mice along with us. Or to borrow from Jonathan Swift, within GATT there are a lot of other small Lilliputians like us anxious to bind the giant.

Thus, our problem has not been solved. It never was the process of dispute settlement but the U.S. trade remedy laws themselves, as the Honourable Pat Carney pointed out: "(Their) unilateral decisions on what they call unfair practices are the problem between us... (The) Americans call them fair trade laws, but they are not." (Commons Debates, page 4178, March 16, 1987.) As we have just seen, these laws our ministers call unfair will continue to govern our exports to the U.S.

Such U.S. laws would still apply to us for at least five to seven years (even without the recent Baucus-Danforth Amendment re-affirming the pre-eminence of congressional legislation over the FTA forever): "... pending the development of a substitute system of rules in both countries for antidumping and countervailing duties as applied to their bilateral trade... Failure to agree to implement a new regime at the end of the (seven year period) shall allow either party to terminate the agreement on six month's notice." (Free Trade Agreement, page 279).

On this issue, Raymond Koskie, Toronto lawyer, member of the Economic Council, writes: "Canada has, however, committed itself to reviewing its own and U.S. trade laws with a view to harmonizing trade legislation within the next five to seven years. These negotiations will take place after Canada has already made its major concessions outside the social policy, culture and natural resources conservation area... (This leaves Canada) in a weak position to obtain substantial progress on U.S. trade legislation without making important concessions on social policy and other matters of essential national interests." Mr. Koskie's opinion is quoted in "Venturing Forth", the publication by the Economic Council of Canada.

Therefore, proposition (4) has been proven, that:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, in his trade deal with the U.S., did not obtain his "most important vital condition": exemption for Canadian exporters from "unfair", protectionist U.S. trade laws. We now have no more protection than we had before the FTA. We do not have a better deal.

(5) Proposition to be proved: Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal predict not prosperity but a loss—$1,200 in income for every Canadian by 1998, after the FTA. I shall prove this with figures. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal which was not "better". Yet, according to these self-same forecasts, the risks of not signing were minimal, a loss of 8.6 cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years. These are the government's figures, as I shall prove in a moment.

The facts that follow all deal with the economic benefits the Mulroney government said would flow from the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the "dire" consequences of not signing this agreement. In making these predictions, members of the Mulroney cabinet were citing two studies by the Economic Council of Canada: Discussion Paper 331, "Impact of Canada-U.S. Free Trade on the Canadian Economy", August 1987, and, eight months later, Discussion Paper 344, "An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement". The first was based on what the government hoped the agreement would say. The second, No. 344, was a revision of the first and was based on the actual text of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement.

These two studies have been combined in a 40-page booklet by the Economic Council, entitled "Venturing Forth, An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement". In a foreword, Ms. Judith Maxwell, Chairman of the Economic Council, writes: "This Statement assesses the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the U.S. on 2 January, 1988. The Statement reflects the views of the Council members and is based upon an in-depth analysis of the agreement by a team of Council researchers."

In its conclusion, "Venturing Forth", the Economic Council's assessment of the FTA, states: "Canadians in general have learned about themselves and about the United States in the past two and a half years, through months of negotiations and millions of hours of study..." This is serious-sounding stuff and the Mulroney government has practically papered the land with "Venturing Forth".

"Venturing Forth" and studies 331 and 344, which it explicitly recognizes as its source, (page ix), try to predict where our economy will go with the trade deal ("the most likely outcome") and without ("the base case"). The "base case" does not assume that the Americans will become more protectionist against us if we do not implement the trade agreement. However, the researchers of the Economic Council have studied the possibility that the Americans might turn more protectionist if we did not sign the agreement, and they call this their "Simulation 5".

Such projections use the past to predict the future, but the future seldom fails to surprise us. Nevertheless, computers and armies of equations, representing the past relationships among existing aspects of the economy, turn out studies full of such projections, which are widely used by the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance as well as the Economic Council. They have limitations, but they do provide some sort of starting point for thinking about the future.

The Mulroney government takes these studies by the Economic Council very seriously and quotes them at every opportunity as evidence of the good the free trade deal will do Canada.

Notably, on Monday, July 11, 1988, the Honourable John Crosbie, P.C., M.P., Minister for International Trade, said: "Let us look at what the Economic Council of Canada has to say . . . The council identifies scenario 2"—the Council calls it "simulation" and the minister calls it "scenario"—"as the most likely outcome which shows real output up by 2.5 per cent and employment higher by 251,000 . . . a net increase in jobs of 251,000." (Minutes of the Proceedings of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and The United States, Issue 2, page 2-46.)

Here, then, is what the Economic Council studies used by the Mulroney government say about our future, after the FTA has come into full effect in our two countries, by December 31, 1998. Figures are given, hereunder, in 1981 dollars, which are the constant dollars the Economic Council uses to factor out inflation.

Proof (5.1) Without the free trade deal, we could lose 22,000 jobs, not 500,000 as the Mulroney government predicted.

Ms. Carney predicted that if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. "... we could lose half a million jobs." (Commons Debates, pages 4178 to 4181, March 16, 1987.) The Economic Council's study 344 has done a calculation of how many fewer jobs the Canadian economy would create between now and December 1998 if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement and the U.S. took the protectionist measures we fear. The figure is 22,000 jobs—23 times less than the half a million job loss Ms. Carney threatened us with.

Proof (5.2) Without the free trade deal, each Canadian would have 8.6 cents less per day, 11 years from now.

[Senator Gigantès.]

"Venturing Forth", page 18, shows that, if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement and the U.S. took protectionist measures against us, (Simulation 5), by 1998 our economy would be smaller by two thousandths—that is, by two tenths of 1 per cent—than it would be with the Free Trade Agreement. Study 344, page 69, shows that in 1998 the GDP, our gross domestic product—that is, the size of our economy—will be some $448.089 billion in 1981 dollars. Two thousandths or two tenths of 1 per cent of that is $896.178 million. If we divide that sum by the 28.6 million Canadians Statistics Canada says will be our population in 1998, and by 365 to arrive at the loss per day, we see that in 1998 each Canadian woman, child and man will have 8.6 cents less per day, if we do not go ahead with the Mulroney trade deal and the Americans turn very protectionist against us.

Proof (5.3) The free trade deal, FTA, will give us only one third of the jobs the Mulroney government originally predicted.

The Honourable Pat Carney, as Minister for International Trade, forecast that, thanks to the FTA, "370,000 jobs could be created in the next five years." (Commons Debates, pages 4178 to 4181, March 16, 1987.) She was using the Economic Council's Study 331, based on Mr. Mulroney's wish list.

Senator Hastings: Is that "could" or "would"?

Senator Gigantes: "Could". C-o-u-l-d. Check it, you will see that I am right. But the Economic Council's Study 344, based on the actual text of the Free Trade Agreement, set the net, new jobs to be created by the FTA at 251,000 in 11 years. Of the 251,000 jobs in 11 years, more than half are for clerks, sales persons and the like and few are in high tech. This figure of 251,000 in 11 years means 114,000 in five years, or less than a third of the 370,000 Ms. Carney originally promised.

The authors of the Economic Council's two studies on the impact of the free trade deal say that the job figures changed from their first to their second study because the actual Free Trade Agreement contained far fewer goodies for Canada than had been on the Mulroney wish list. Here is what the Economic Council says about how tough the Yankee traders were in the FTA negotiations: "In the earlier study, a hypothetical, comprehensive, bilateral free trade agreement between Canada and the United States was simulated . . . It was assumed that all of the existing trade barriers (except subsidies) between the two countries would be removed. But under the agreement signed in January, most of the non-tariff barriers will remain intact . . . Our calculations indicate that only about 25 per cent of the existing non-tariff barriers are removed under the Free Trade Agreement. Similarly, the impact of the agreement on federal government procurement is substantially smaller in scope than the one assumed in Discussion Paper 331 . . . Under the Free Trade Agreement, Canada has been excluded from bidding for large U.S. government purchases in aircraft and components, ships, communications equipment and electrical and electronic equipment components." ("Venturing Forth", Economic Council, pages 39-40).

Proof (5.4) The rate of job creation under the Mulroney trade deal is slower than even during the 1974-1984 years of explosions in oil prices, hyper-inflation, sky-high interest rates, the deep recession that began in 1981 and massive unemployment.

On page 70 of the Economic Council's Study 344 we are told that the 251,193 net, new FTA jobs represent 1.8 per cent of the total jobs that will exist at the end of 1998.

Facing page 32 of my text you will see photostats of the tables of that study. With the permission of the Senate, I would move that these tables be printed as an appendix.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Gigantès: If the figure 251,193 is 1.8 per cent, we can obtain what 100 per cent is by multiplying 251,193 by 100 and dividing it by 1.8. A math whiz researcher at the Library of Parliament vouches for this. Thus, 100 per cent is 13,955,167, to which one must add 251,193 to obtain 14,206,360. I would draw the attention of honourable senators to a regrettable error. After the figure 251,193, I have in parentheses "plus 2.5 per cent", but, actually, it should be "plus 1.8 per cent", and 14,206,360 is plus 1.8 per cent. So, the number of people who will be employed in Canada in 1998, if the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal is in operation, will be 14,206,360.

We know from Statistics Canada, "Canadian Economic Observer", that 11,955,000 Canadians were employed on January 1, 1988. We can work out at what rate employment will have grown per year and on average between January 1, 1988, and December 31, 1998, by using the formula: $C = A \text{ time } (1 + i) \text{ to the eleventh power}$. The aforementioned math whiz also vouches for this.

So, $C = 14,206,360 = 11,955,000 \text{ times } (1 + i) \text{ to the eleventh power}$, where (i) stands for the yearly rate of growth. The result is that, thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, we shall have an average annual growth rate in jobs of 1.58 per cent over the 11 years ending December 31, 1998—1.58 per cent!

By the use of the same formula, and with Statistics Canada figures, we can find the average annual growth rate in jobs for the 11 years from 1974 to 1984 inclusive, years which, as I have said already, saw huge jumps in oil prices, hyper-inflation, sky-high interest rates and the worst business down-turn since the Great Depression, with massive unemployment. Without a free trade agreement, in those 11 years, 1974 to 1984, the average annual growth rate in jobs was 1.7 per cent—more than the free trade deal is expected to give us.

Those two 11-year periods, by the way, 1974 to 1984 and 1988 to 1998 inclusive, are comparable, because the population in the next 11 years is projected to grow at 1 per cent per year, the rate at which it grew between 1974 and 1984.

Proof (5.5) The Mulroney trade deal will see a decline in personal incomes by the time it is fully in place in 1998.

On page 69 of the Economic Council's Study 344, we are told that Canada's gross domestic product, the GDP, will be bigger in 1998 by $10.929 billion, or 2.5 per cent, than it would have been without the Mulroney trade deal.

To make these figures clearer for readers or for honourable senators who do not have economics as their hobby, the GDP is the sum total of all the goods and services we produce. If we divide the GDP by the population, we get the gross domestic product per capita or per person. This is often used as a measure of how citizens are faring relatively as between one country and another or one period and another.

It stands to reason that this is a key economic measure. If the GDP per capita is falling—after inflation—chances are that consumer spending is falling and that, consequently, investment in new plant is falling, government revenues are falling, and there is less money to pay for Medicare, pensions and child care. The reverse is likely if GDP per capita is rising. Here is what the Economic Council's projections about our 1998 gross domestic product mean:

If $10.929 billion is 2.5 per cent of the 1998 base case GDP, that is, the GDP without the Free Trade Agreement, then that GDP is projected to be $437.160 billion. The GDP with free trade will be $448.089 billion, that is, 437.160 plus 10.929. The figures given in the Economic Council's Study 344 are all in 1981 dollars, which means that inflation has been factored out.

Now, still in 1981 dollars, Statistics Canada tells us that our GDP on January 1, 1988, was \$431.596 billion. This is from the "Canadian Economic Observer", June 1988, table 1.3 Let us resort again to the formula $C = A \text{ times } (1 + i) \text{ to the eleventh power}$, where $C = 448.089$, $A = 431.596$, and (i) = the average annual rate of growth of the GDP. We find that our gross domestic product between now and the end of 1998 will have grown at an annual average rate of 3.4 tenths of 1 per cent, thanks to the FTA. These are the government figures. This is from the study that Mr. Crosbie waves in the air and that Ms. Carney used to wave before.

Our population is projected to grow not by 3.4 tenths of 1 per cent per year but by a whole 1 per cent per year between now and 1998. Hence, our GDP per capita will decline. In 1981 dollars, the projected GDP for 1998 is $448.089 billion. Divided by the 1998 projected population of 28.6 million Canadians, this gives us a GDP per person of $15,667 in 1998. These are 1981 dollars. Inflation has been factored out. This is nearly $1,200 less than our GDP per person on January 1, 1988, which Stats Can says was $16,843—1981 dollars in all cases.

I have a technical point to make. Lest anyone argue—and someone has tried—that the Economic Council is not talking of gross domestic product calculations that are "expenditure based", but are "factor cost" based, he can check the Council's publication "Venturing Forth", page 17, where the second paragraph makes it clear that their calculations were expenditure based and not factor cost based. This point is technically important, because, otherwise, the figures would be substantially different, both up and down. "Venturing Forth" says: "Our new Simulation 2, which we consider the most likely outcome (shows) that . . . in 1998 . . . real GNE (gross national expenditure) is about 2.5 per cent higher than its base case level . . ."

To put these figures in perspective, in the 11 years, 1974 to 1984, with the two price explosions in oil and the biggest economic down-turn since the Depression of the 1930s, Canada's GDP grew at an annual rate of 2.3 per cent, after allowing for inflation; 6.8 times faster, that is, than the Economic Council predicts the economy will grow under the trade deal signed by Messrs. Mulroney and Reagan.

From 1974 to 1984 our GDP per capita—per capita means per person—grew from $12,341 to $15,036 per year. The 1984 GDP of $15,036 is almost equal to the $15,667 our GDP per capita will be in 1998, 11 years after the signing of the Mulroney trade deal, all in 1981 dollars.

Proof (5.6) Mr. Mulroney did not get a "better deal". Yet he signed it even though he said he would only sign a "better deal".

Mr. Mulroney told the New York Times—this bears repeating all the time—on April 3, 1987, "There were several vital conditions the (trade agreement) would have to meet. Most important among these, Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the U.S.'s fair-trading laws." This permanent exemption was his most important vital condition and Mr. Mulroney did not get it.

What he got, according to projections he uses and publicizes, is a gross domestic product per capita, in 1981 dollars, that will decline from $16,843 today to $15,667 in 1998, and a rate of job creation slower than in our worst post-war decade. That is not a better deal, as Mr. Mulroney himself defines a better deal.

He said that "if our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal." (This is the Honourable Pat Carney quoting the Prime Minister, Commons Debates, page 255, October 9, 1986.)

Therefore, honourable senators, proposition (5) has been proven, that: Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal predict not prosperity but decline, with the loss of $1,200 in income for every Canadian by 1998, after the FTA is fully in place. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal, which was not "better". Yet, according to these self-same forecasts, the risks of not signing it were minimal: a loss of 8.6 cents per day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years.

In a subsequent speech I will give you proposition (6), "We paid far too much for what we got in this deal"; (7), "There was a better alternative"; and (8), "We were misled every step of the way."

Honourable senators, thank you for your patience.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Has the honourable senator completed his speech?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Is the honourable senator finished now?

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Will the honourable senator continue at the next sitting?

Senator Doody: The question was asked whether Senator Gigantès would be going on later.

Senator Molgat: Unless he adjourns the debate, he will be unable to speak again.

Senator Gigantès: I will proceed later.

Senator Molgat: On another debate?

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REVISED MESSAGE FROM COMMONS
 —MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS
 —REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE
 ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

WEDNESDAY, July 20, 1988

Dear Senator Murray:

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, dated June 28, 1988 relating to certain amendments to Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, July 14, 1988, examined the said motion and now reports as follows:

Your Committee recommends that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House of Commons to its amendments 1(b), 3, 4, 9(a) and 11 to the Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof;

That the Senate do not insist on its amendments 1(a), 2, 5, 6(a), 7, 8, 9(b) and (c), 10, 12(a) and (b);

That the Senate agree to the further amendments made by the House of Commons to clauses 14, 18 and 29; and

That the Senate agree to the further amendment made by that House, adding a new clause after line 31 on page 56.

Although the Committee is recommending to the Senate that the motion be adopted, we continue to be concerned that the protections afforded to claimants who are to be returned under the safe country provisions are inadequate. Consequently, we communicated our concerns once more to the Minister, who has responded that she understands the significance of the protections required and wishes to allay the fears that have been expressed.

Our dialogue has resulted in a letter from the Minister to the Leader of the Government in the Senate which reads as follows:

Senator the Honourable Lowell Murray, P.C.
 The Senate
 Ottawa, Ontario
 K1A 0A4

There continues to be some concern that the recent amendment, in the House of Commons, of the proposed section 48.01(1)(b) [Bill C-55] of the Immigration Act, 1976, would not provide the refugee claimant with adequate protection against "going into orbit". Some observers doubt that the language of the Bill makes it clear enough that a person who is returned to a third country could go into and remain in the country to which he or she would be sent from Canada. The proposed subparagraph (ii) of that section requires that the claimant would be ineligible to pursue a claim in Canada if he or she were of a class of persons who, inter alia, "would be allowed to return to that country".

The Department of Justice has given an opinion that that phrase would provide for the person being allowed in, under whatever status the country may choose to give. Nonetheless, I have considered a means of alleviating the concern without jeopardizing the Bill. I am prepared to propose a Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment that would amend the words I quoted above, by substituting "would be given lawful authority to be in that country".

Since these words would not change the substance of the provision and since we could expect that the change would be acceptable to all parties in both Houses of Parliament, I am confident that such a change could be made quickly, either later in this session, or in the fall. Implementation of Bill C-55 is not likely to occur before four to six months after Royal assent. Therefore it would not be difficult to have this change assented to and ready for proclamation concurrently with Bill C-55.

Should the Parliamentary schedule not accommodate passage of a Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act by the date of proclamation of Bill C-55, or if objections are raised in the consideration of such a Bill, case presenting officers will be instructed to argue that persons who would not be given lawful authority to be in a third country can not be returned there. Further, adjudicators and Refugee Division members will be informed of the legal opinion of the Department of Justice. This policy will ensure that no claimant is put at risk in the interim.

I am advised that no further work on the implementation of Bill C-55 can be done until the Bill is passed by Parliament and receives Royal assent. I can see no reason to delay approval of Bill C-55, or of Bill C-84.

Yours sincerely,

Barbara McDougall

The Committee welcomes the Minister's commitment and accepts the proposed amendment, which we believe will offer the increased protection that is necessary in order to avoid putting refugee claimants at risk. With this amendment, the Committee understands that the possibility of claimants being returned (for example, to the transit lounge of an airport) to a "safe country", from where they might be quickly sent elsewhere, is greatly diminished. The Minister also promised that, if difficulties arise in the amendment of the law, she would instruct case presenting officers to argue that persons who would not be given lawful authority to be in a third country can not be returned there. As she has stated in the above-quoted letter, "This policy will ensure that no claimant is put at risk in the interim".

The Committee is pleased that the Minister is equally concerned that the provision be clarified so that refugee claimants are not put into "orbit". As she stated in the House of Commons on 3 June 1988:

"this provision will not be used to put people in orbit between countries, as we want assurances that the people we send to third countries will be accepted there or will have access to that country's refugee determination system."

It is with this understanding that the Committee recommends adoption of the motion.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 21, 1988

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL C-72

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Dalia Wood, chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-72, presented the following report:

Thursday, July 21, 1988

The Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-72 has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-72, An Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, July 14, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

DALIA WOOD
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that Royal Assent is planned for this afternoon, I would ask leave to give the bill third reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, honourable senators. I want to make a speech on third reading of this bill and I am not ready to do so today; I intend to do so on Tuesday. Therefore, I would suggest that this be adjourned until Tuesday next, when I expect it will get third reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Argue, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Frith, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading on Tuesday next, July 26, 1988.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is my hope that, as we proceed today with second reading of various bills and third reading of at least one bill, we will be in a position to have Royal Assent later this afternoon and then adjourn until Tuesday next.

With that in mind, I ask leave to revert to Notices of Motions later this afternoon.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, earlier today the Deputy Leader of the Government and I discussed what legislation on our order paper could receive Royal Assent today. I believe we are agreed on the legislation that should get Royal Assent today and we have settled on a procedure for doing so. We have agreed that second reading debate on some bills will be completed today and that they will be referred to committee. We have also agreed that some other matters will go over until Tuesday.

Senator Doody's request that we follow that plan is quite reasonable.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

TIBET

DALAI LAMA'S FIVE-POINT PEACE PLAN AND NEW INITIATIVE—GOVERNMENT POSITION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I asked a question in June about Tibet.

Senator Flynn: This year?

Senator Frith: Yes, this year. The Leader of the Government gave me quite a prompt answer. I then asked a supplementary question arising from a declaration made by the Dalai Lama. The leader took that as notice. I wonder if he will put a tracer on that. It is not something I need for a speech today, but if he could give me an answer next week I would appreciate it, for reasons I will not go into now.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I thank the honourable senator for reminding me of this and I shall make inquiries.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to three questions: one from June 14, by Senator Bonnell, regarding Veterans Affairs—Eligibility and Criteria for War Veterans Allowance; a question of the same date by Senator John Stewart and also by Senator Fernand Leblanc, regarding The Government—Legislative Provision for Expenditures, which I believe also relates to Veterans Affairs; and from July 21, a question asked by Senator Olson regarding Economic Summit, 1988—Agricultural Subsidies—Request for Progress Report.

If honourable senators agree, I will ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Did you say July 21?

Senator Doody: It says July 21 here. If you think that is too prompt, senator, you are probably right. I will have to check this. There is a slight error in the transposition. It is June 21. Thank you, senator. You had me worried for a minute. I thought we were getting efficient!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ELIGIBILITY AND CRITERIA FOR WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 14 last by the Honourable M. Lorne Bonnell, regarding Veterans Affairs—Eligibility and Criteria for War Veterans Allowance

(The answer follows:)

The means test for determining eligibility for War Veterans Allowance is, in fact, a "modified income test". In this test a person's assets (for example the value of real assets such as a house or automobile and liquid assets, such as cash and bonds) do not affect the rate of Allowance, although income derived from assets may have an effect. After taking into account certain exemptions, the War Veterans Allowance is decreased dollar for dollar by income from other sources. The exemptions include any income received by dependent children, interest income up to $140 per year and earnings income of up to $2,900 annually for single recipients and $4,200 for married recipients. Present single and married War Veterans Allowance ceilings are shown below.

Category	Ceiling
Single rate	$ 755.25 monthly
Married rate	$1146.71 monthly

THE GOVERNMENT

LEGISLATIVE PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators I have a delayed answer in response to questions asked in the Senate on June 14 last by the Honourable John B. Stewart and the Honourable Fernand-E. Leblanc, regarding The Government—Legislative Provision for Expenditures.

(The answer follows:)

Authority for the Veterans Independence Program and Treatment benefits is currently found in the Veterans Care Regulations and Veterans Treatment Regulations, both under the Department of Veterans Affairs Act.

Extending eligibility to Canada Service Veterans (Canada Service Only) would require a change to these Regulations and not a Bill in Parliament. While the Government has approved the extension of eligibility to Canada Service Veterans the specific regulatory amendments will be presented to the Governor-in-Council for approval shortly, once a practical effective date has been decided upon and other essential administrative details worked out.

The table below shows the estimated caseload and program costs of the extension for the next five years. It is based on the assumption that January 1, 1989 is the effective date and is shown in current (indexed) dollars. Financial resource allocation, once initially approved, is subject to Appropriations through the normal Main Estimates process in the same way as other continuing programs.

ECONOMIC SUMMIT, 1988

AGRICULTURAL SUBSIDIES—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on June 21 last by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding Economic Summit, 1988—Agricultural Subsidies—Request for Progress Report.

(The answer follows:)

The Toronto Summit Economic Declaration indicates how the Leaders view the problems of agriculture; their actual discussions on the subject are confidential and there is therefore no official record of them.

Some parts of the Economic Declaration should be highlighted. The Leaders reaffirmed their commitment to implement more market-oriented agricultural policies to encourage structural reform. They insisted that negotiations must develop a framework approach, which includes short-term and long-term elements, in order to advance the negotiations on agriculture which are presently being conducted in the Uruguay Round of the GATT. They noted that use of a device to measure support and protection would facilitate progress in the Multilateral Trade Negotiations (MTN). They underlined the importance of the Montreal Mid-Term Review meeting in December 1988 as an occasion to give further impetus to these negotiations and noted that it is vital to ensure the momentum of the negotiations. With respect to the trade negotiations in general, and this obviously relates to agriculture, leaders urged that "the greatest possible advance must be made in all areas of the negotiations, including, where appropriate, decisions, so as to reach before the end of the year the stage where tangible progress can be registered". Leaders added a reiteration of their commitment to ensure that the Mid-Term Review establishes a solid base for the conclusion of the Uruguay Round negotiations.

Summit leaders also emphasized the OECD's increased emphasis on structural adjustment and development in the rural economy. They suggested that more market-oriented agricultural policies should assist in the achievement of important objectives such as preserving rural areas and family farming, raising quality standards and protecting the environment.

This Summit statement advances the commitments taken at the May 1988 OECD Ministerial Meeting, with respect to the reform of agricultural policies, to the need to register progress in the MTN by year-end in agriculture and to the need to consider how best to ensure the development of the overall rural economy.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have been asked by Senator van Roggen, who has been ill and unable to be here for the last few weeks, to propose the following motion.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday and Wednesday next, 26th and 27th July, 1988, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I just wanted to say that, because of the ongoing quorum problem, it may not be possible for all of our members to be there at all of these meetings all of the time. I am sure that Senator van Roggen will understand if some of the people on this side do not attend all of the meetings all of the time. At this point the only reason is the difficulty in keeping a quorum while the Senate is sitting.

Senator Frith: I agree, honourable senators. We might have problems on both sides if we are very busy here in the chamber. I should also say that there is a possibility that Senator van Roggen will not be able to be here next week. They are still discussing the possibility of changing the committee meetings, in any event.

Senator Flynn: Might as well cancel them.

Senator Frith: The reason he asked me to put this motion forward is that he wants us to have the possibility—in fact, the probability—of going on.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we were all aware that the hard-working chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and his hard-working colleagues had planned a series of meetings in the weeks ahead.

Senator Frith: And witnesses.

Senator Murray: I am told some 30 witnesses were due to appear, all in the interests of studying, if not the Free Trade Bill, which honourable senators refuse to send to the committee for pre-study, then at least the Free Trade Agreement.

• (1410)

My honourable friend, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, tells us now that it is possible that the chairman, Senator van Roggen, will not be here next week and that consideration is being given to rescheduling some of the meetings.

Does he know whether Senator van Roggen and his colleagues on the committee have given any thought to the utility or futility of this whole committee exercise? I say that on behalf of the 30 witnesses who have been invited to appear, supposedly to give their best wisdom and advice on the Free Trade Agreement. We have had, as of yesterday, an instruction to Liberal senators from the Right Honourable John Turner that they are to block the Free Trade Bill in this place, and the apparent statement of compliance on behalf of Liberal senators by the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

BILL TO AMEND—REVISED MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—
MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL
C-55—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator

Molgat, for the adoption of the Twenty-Fifth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (motion relating to amendments to Bill C-55, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof), presented in the Senate on 20th July, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Hébert).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, just so we can follow, is it correct that the Honourable Senator Hébert will be speaking to both Orders No. 1 and No. 2—that is, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84—as the previous speakers did?

Hon. Jacques Hébert: That is correct.

Senator Frith: Then, Order No. 2 should also be called.

BILL TO AMEND—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS AND FOR NON-INSISTENCE UPON SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-84—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, for the adoption of the Twenty-Sixth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (motion relating to amendments to Bill C-84, An Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof), presented in the Senate on 20th July, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Hébert).

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, for several days now, I have been grappling with a serious problem of conscience. How could I accept the decision of the Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs—of which I am proud to be a member—if I am still convinced that Bill C-55 could imperil the life of even a single refugee? I realize that we fought a good fight over the past few months, a fight of whose various stages we were reminded yesterday by the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator Neiman, and by my colleague the Honourable Senator Grafstein, when they addressed us. I also realize that non-elected legislators must sooner or later bow to the stubborn determination of the elected legislators, leaving it up to the people to elect different ones the next chance they get.

Nonetheless, I belong to a house whose legitimacy cannot be questioned, since it was confirmed by the 1982 Constitution and more recently by the Meech Lake Accord, which would surely have been the ideal opportunity to curtail the Senate's all-too-extensive powers. It seems to me that on June 3, 1987, in the dampness of the Langevin Block, at 5:42 in the morning, Prime Minister Mulroney could easily have served up another round of dreadful coffee to the ten provincial premiers, already in a complete daze, and convinced them, for example, to limit the Senate's powers to a six-month suspensive veto and to make the Senate an elected body. I can mention this idea without a qualm because it happens to be my party's official policy.

But since nothing was done in 1982, or in 1987, the Senate remains until further notice a legitimate parliamentary institution whose members have enormous powers, tempered only by the respect we all share for the fundamental principles of democracy, which prevent us from abusing those powers.

I sometimes think that in order to provoke the reforms that everybody claims to want, but are forever postponed, we should perhaps one day bring matters to a head by exerting our powers to the full, in other words, by blocking a government bill for good and all.

Some of my colleagues believed for a while that Bill C-22 would have been a good one to try this on. I did not agree with them, for one thing because the opinions of the witnesses we heard were divided, and for another because it was simply a question of money. My Liberal colleagues predicted that the price of drugs would increase, and events have proved them correct: certain pharmaceutical products cost 150 percent more today than they did before Bill C-22. So much the worse for us all!

Be that as it may, Bill C-22 was not a matter of life and death. Bill C-55 is quite another story. According to the most reliable of the many witnesses we heard, including the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees which represents practically all churches in Canada, there can be no doubt that human beings in peril of their lives, genuine refugees within the meaning of the Geneva Convention which Canada has signed, will be the victims of this infamous piece of legislation. That they will be turned back to what are claimed, by the oracles in the Cabinet, to be "safe" third countries. That they will end up in abominable prisons, where they will be tortured and where some will lose their lives.

What is the point of having an all-powerful Senate if, after what I concede was a noble fight, it resigns itself to not exercising the powers that would enable it to prevent our country from being an accomplice in such abominations?

What is the point of having listened to the most competent people Canada has in this field describe to us the grave dangers of this bill—not to mention its unconstitutionality—if in the end we wash our hands of it like Pontius Pilate?

What is the point of having applauded Rabbi Plaut and come out with endless denunciations of the stupidities of Bill C-55 if today we agree to make those stupidities the law of the land?

There is no doubt that if we had had the audacity to kick Bill C-55 out into the darkness where it belongs, we would have provoked what is, erroneously, called a "constitutional crisis". The great democrats in our editorial offices would have fallen on us with loud cries, that great democrat Brian Mulroney would have bleated like an affronted virgin, and the Senate might perhaps have risked its own abolition. And so what? The death of the Senate does not seem to me more important than the death of a single innocent person somewhere in some small totalitarian country of the Third World.

But the hour is late, and I am not naive enough to think that this last-minute appeal will stop Royal Assent being given before the end of the day to a bill that is in my view the most odious piece of legislation submitted to the Senate in all my time here. The government leader may sleep in peace: he has carried the day! But I venture to believe that some of us, on both sides of this chamber, will sleep less well, tonight, and certainly the night after they hear that a Guatemalan peasant who had been turned back from Dorval to a "safe" third country has finally been returned to Quetzaltenango and butchered like a beast.

This long preamble was inspired by one of the innumerable letters I have received about Bill C-55, the most recent of them in fact. It is signed by a man I don't know, a Mr. Max Wolfe who is a lawyer in Jemseg, New Brunswick. I am going to read parts of it to you, in the hope that perhaps one of my colleagues will help me find the words to answer him:

● (1420)

[English]

Dear Senator:

It may already be too late but, if it is not, I urge you and your colleagues to do everything possible to delay the passage into law of Bill C-55, the Immigration Act amendment act.

We have heard much about abuses in the refugee determination system, shiploads of well-healed Sikhs on Nova Scotia shores and scams in Turkey. I do not attempt to deny any of this and I do not for one minute say that the system of refugee determination does not need a drastic overhaul. 50,000 cases awaiting the decision of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee says it all. But C-55 does not do this. Instead it uses the method of curing the headache by prescribing decapitation.

The record of the United States in dealing with Central American refugees is nothing short of disgraceful. Something in excess of 97 per cent of those that formally seek political asylum are rejected. Like us, the Americans are signatories to the 1951 Convention on Refugees. Our record has been good but this legislation will ensure that virtually all Central American refugees are kept out of the country. Their American masters must be very happy with the performance of the Mulroney government.

I have helped and will continue to help many Central American refugees come into this country. I have spoken with many of them, for the most part country people wanting nothing more than to live without the constant fear of torture and murder. These people are bona fide refugees. Our government regrettably is trying to repeat the history of the Mackenzie King government during the Second World War in shutting its eyes deliberately to oppression and genocide beyond our shores. You can help ensure that this does not happen.

Yours very truly,
Max M. Wolfe

[Senator Hébert.]

[Translation]

You will have to help me, friends and colleagues! Personally I do not have the faintest idea what to say to this man . . .

This is the first time I have had to take this tone in addressing my honourable colleagues, and I am not enjoying it. I sincerely regret having to disassociate myself from the decision reached by my own committee, and to oppose colleagues whom I have over the past five years learned to respect and admire. But I know their spirit of tolerance, and I am sure they will accept the fact that I disagree absolutely with their interpretation of what we have accomplished as a result of this battle that "raged so loud and long." The truth is that we have lost the battle: we would be very wrong to console ourselves with the pretence that the minister made an important concession on the issue of turning ships back on the high seas (C-84), a stupid idea of former Minister Benoit Bouchard's which current Minister Barbara MacDougall must have been delighted to jettison. Like a duchess annoyed by the yappings of a little dog, she casually tossed us a bone. "Comme c'est gentil!"

But everyone knows that despite its notoriety, Bill C-84 is not really important. What matters, what is going to put Canada into the ranks of the rich, the selfish and the mean, is Bill C-55. And the minister was very careful not to accept even the slightest amendment of consequence, even though the members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee had reduced the number and scope of their amendments to the barest minimum. If the Senate amendments had been accepted, C-55 would still have been a very bad law. Without those amendments, it is an iniquitous law, of which Canadians should be ashamed.

[English]

My feelings about Bill C-55 are most aptly summed up in the letter I quoted earlier, by Mr. Wolfe, wherein he states that the bill "uses the method of curing the headache by prescribing decapitation." The headache is a refugee system badly in need of overhaul; the decapitation results from the draconian measures I am about to describe—measures for which the Senate proposed medicine that we believed would have cured the patient without too many negative side effects. The minister, however, disagreed and the bill before us today is the disgraceful result.

Let me now turn in detail to some of the major defects of the bill which I feel remain because of the intransigence of the government.

The first is a claimant's right to counsel. In this country I should have thought that the ability of people to choose their own legal counsel to assist and represent them would be recognized as so fundamental that the government would not take it away lightly or quickly. That is what the Senate proposed. We said: "Give claimants a reasonable period of time to arrange for their own counsel." The government said no. Instead, duty counsel will be given "an adequate time to prepare"—something that, by the way, is part of the principles of fundamental justice in any case and hardly needs to be spelled out. What if the claimant is assigned a duty counsel he or she does not trust? What if the claimant does not feel that the counsel is truly interested in the case? The claimant will be out of luck.

Let's assume next that a Salvadorian refugee makes his way to Canada, perhaps with the help of some of the very witnesses who testified before the committee. He may be assigned counsel, as I described. He may distrust his "government" lawyer because of his experiences with his own government officials. He may be afraid that if he admits he is a refugee he will be immediately sent back to the United States or Mexico, and eventually to his own country. He may also be afraid that if word gets back to El Salvador of his flight his wife and children will be the target of reprisals. Perhaps he just does not understand the question.

Now, Bill C-55 requires that, at the very beginning of his inquiry, the adjudicator ask if the Salvadorian intends to make a claim to be a refugee. Responding to the feelings I have just listed, the man is frightened and says, "No." That simple answer—made in fear—means that he loses his right to make a claim to be a refugee. In committee we looked at that provision and thought it was not right. How can it be right that such serious consequences could follow from fear? We recommended simply that a person in that situation should be given another chance. This, too, the minister rejected. It would be an "opportunity for abuse", we were told. I wonder where the abuse will be when we return this person to El Salvador.

Next, I want to talk about appeals. There is no doubt that the new Refugee Division will rule that some claimants are not Convention refugees. They would not be doing their job if they rubber-stamped all applications. But is there any person in this chamber who is confident that he or she could make that negative decision and never make a mistake? Surely, in no other area do we pretend that decision-makers are never going to get it wrong. When we looked at Bill C-55 we found that the drafters had not paid sufficient attention to this simple fact of life. We suggested that the Federal Court of Appeal should have the power to examine the merits of the decision—to ask the question: "Did they get it right?"

Again, the government said no. It was a "fundamental principle", we were told, that there be "one high-quality hearing on the merits of the claim." I should like to know the source of this "principle".

Finally, I turn to the most controversial area of all—the safe third country. I have spoken at length about this part of the bill. In fact, the last time I spoke it was with pleasure and positive feelings about the work we had accomplished in committee. I truly felt that we had "got it right" and that the government would see that our changes were reasonable and appropriate. In retrospect, I suppose that I was merely naive. Nothing so simple and straightforward as a safe country being "willing to receive" the claimant was acceptable to the government. Instead, what we got was a hodge-podge of verbiage that is incomprehensible to lawyers and laymen alike.

"Where is the protection?" we asked the minister. In reply, we received a letter saying that one further amendment would be made to the section at a later date, if only we would hurry up and pass the bill. I realize that a number of my colleagues genuinely believe that the promised amendment improves the bill and allays their concern.

As for myself, I remain unconvinced. When I put the old version beside the new version I see little, if any, difference. And in French they are virtually identical. Indeed, a careful reading of the minister's letter shows that she, too, believes that there is no substantive difference, but is willing to propose the amendment if it will keep us happy. Well, I want it on the record that I am not happy.

I could go on longer, because there are other important changes that should have been made to this bill, but were not, yet I think my point is clear: This bill is nothing that I feel proud of. That is an understatement. Correction: I am ashamed of this bill! Yes, we made some changes to Bill C-55 that the government agreed to. But these changes were, in general, either minor or technical. Whenever it came to an amendment that could have had a real impact on how Canada will treat refugee claimants in the future, the government said "no."

[Translation]

The irony is that the minister knows, as do we all, that C-55 is going to be contested before the courts as soon as it has been proclaimed. Having tried to rectify some of the undeniable shortcomings of the bill as it stands, we are now going to vote in favour of a bill that, according to the highest authorities of several Canadian bar associations, will conflict with the Charter of Rights. We want to improve the immigration legislation, and instead we are going to paralyze the system still further and create an even worse chaos than the one we are floundering in at present.

There it is: starting this evening, we will be living in a different country from the one we were in this morning. A country where the Charter of Rights will no longer apply to people in distress who have come in all confidence to knock at the door of a Canada that until today was known throughout the world for its compassion to refugees.

I love my country, but this evening I will love it a little less.

I thought I belonged to a house with considerable, even excessive, powers. But at this moment I realize I am completely powerless. Dear Mr. Wolfe of Jemseg, New Brunswick, I truly do not know how to answer your letter. But believe me: if ever I am asked to vote, I shall vote against Bill C-55 with all my heart.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[English]

Senator Haidasz: Let us stand up and be counted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Molgat, that these reports on Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 be adopted.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

● (1440)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are opposed to the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

An Hon. Senator: The "nays" have it.

Senator Haidasz: Let's stand and be counted.

Senator Argue: You do not need to be counted if the "nays" have it.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I do not know whether we want to run through this again and have the best two out of three, but with my rather meagre mathematics I counted two "nays", and the rest either abstained or said "yea."

Senator Corbin: There were three.

Senator Doody: Three "nays"; I said I had rather meagre mathematics.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I said that the "yeas" have it.

Senator Doody: Then, please accept my apologies, sir.

Motion agreed to and report on Bill C-55 and report on Bill C-84 adopted, on division.

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE PETROLEUM RESOURCES ACCORD IMPLEMENTATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Ethel Cochrane moved the third reading of Bill C-75, to implement an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia on offshore petroleum resource management and revenue sharing and to make related and consequential amendments.

She said: Honourable senators, during the second reading debate on this bill, Senator MacEachen raised some questions. Those questions were answered in committee; copies of the blues were sent to him and I think he is quite satisfied.

Senator Frith: Well done!

Senator MacEachen: I wish everyone over there was as intelligent as you are.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the second reading of Bill C-126, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-126 amends the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act in order to allow the Government of Canada to contribute to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. This is a new initiative of the International Monetary Fund to assist the poorest of the developing countries, particularly those in sub-Saharan Africa.

At present the Minister of Finance has no legislative authority to lend to a facility of this type. Passage of this bill will allow him to lend and grant funds to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility Trust on behalf of the Government of Canada.

These resources will support policy reforms designed to restore balance of payments sustainability and enable these countries to maintain satisfactory economic growth.

The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility was initiated at the June 1987 Venice Summit. It was envisaged as a facility that would provide an additional $10 billion Canadian to eligible countries. The magnitude of the debt problem and the daunting balance of payments problems of the poorest countries make these additional resources necessary.

The Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility will operate on the basis of two accounts. The loan account is designed to mobilize resources from industrialized countries. It will pay contributors a market rate of interest, based on long-term rates for domestic financial instruments of five major world currencies. The subsidy account is composed of grants which allow loan account funds to be on-lent to poor countries at 0.5 per cent interest per annum for ten years, with five years' grace.

Since the loan component will be a well-secured asset earning a reasonable rate of return, it will be treated as a non-budgetary requirement. The interest subsidy will be counted as official development assistance and will come from the ODA budget.

The act will authorize a Canadian contribution, financed through the Consolidated Revenue Fund, of up to $550 million over three years. It will also allow a grant of up to $250 million over the 12-year life of the trust in order to bring the interest rate on Canada's contribution down to 0.5 per cent.

Other countries have also contributed to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. For instance, Japan has pledged some $3.7 billion to the loan account and $550 million to the subsidy account. West Germany has offered some $1.2 billion in loans and a subsidy contribution of $600 million. France is to contribute a $1.3 billion loan, $1.2 billion of which will be directly lent at 0.5 per cent per annum. Italy has committed some $600 million to the loan account and a subsidy sufficient to allow its contribution to be on-lent at 0.5 per cent per annum.

In light of the needs of the poorest debtor countries, Canada should join other major industrialized countries in supporting the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. Developing countries that are making difficult and necessary policy changes deserve our support as they work to put their economies on a substantive footing and promote improvements in the living standards of their people.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask whether the senator could provide us with the information on the United States. I did not hear whether he referred to any loan or grant from the United States. Perhaps he did and I missed it.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the United States is not contributing to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. Perhaps, when the matter is referred to committee, the honourable senator could pursue it further.

I inquired of the officials of the department and was advised that the United States does not contribute.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that it would be acceptable if I adjourned this debate and we had second reading and then proceeded to Committee of the Whole on this matter.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That is correct, honourable senators. If it is the wish of the Senate, we will try to establish a Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next to deal with this bill.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

INDIAN LANDS AGREEMENT (1986) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Mira Spivak moved the second reading of Bill C-73, to provide for the implementation of an agreement respecting Indian lands in Ontario.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to rise today to speak to a bill which, I believe, will help improve the situation of Indians in Ontario. I am referring to Bill C-73, a bill ratifying the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement.

Bill C-73 provides a framework for negotiation between the federal and provincial governments to implement the provisions of the 1986 Ontario-Canada Indian Lands Agreement.

After negotiations that have lasted over 25 years, Canada, Ontario and Indian associations have agreed to a new lands agreement. The significance of this agreement is that it will provide a means to resolve long-standing and deep-rooted problems that have plagued the Indian community over the years. I am referring to problems having to do with title to surrendered lands, and the minerals underlying them, situated in the province of Ontario.

Even prior to Confederation, the government had established a policy toward Indian lands and reserves. Well before the present Indian Act, legislation had been passed establishing the means by which Indians would sell or alienate their lands. This was to be done by means of a surrender to the Crown. Lands surrendered to the Crown would acquire the status of surrendered lands that the Crown could then sell, lease and so on to third parties.

At Confederation the federal government was given the authority to legislate on matters relating to "Indians and Lands Reserved for Indians". By virtue of section 91.24 of the British North America Act—now called the Constitution Act, 1867—the federal government assumed that it had proprietary rights over Indian reserve lands and, as a result, proceeded to make grants of surrendered lands to third parties.

However, in 1888 the Privy Council, in the St. Catherine's Milling case, upset federal policy in these matters. In that case the Privy Council decided that, although the federal government had administrative authority over Indian lands, title to these lands ultimately vested in the provincial Crown. As a result, once Indians surrendered reserve lands to the Crown, title to them reverted to the province. In 1983 the Supreme Court decision of Gilbert Smith confirmed the earlier 1888 Privy Council decision.

To correct this situation whereby title to lands granted by the federal government was open to challenge, the federal government entered into a series of agreements with the provinces.

In particular, the Province of Ontario recognized the anomalies created by the court decisions and willingly entered into various agreements with the federal government. The intention of the last and current agreement of 1924 was to resolve problems associated with the court cases.

• (1500)

Although the intent of the 1924 agreement was to clarify the status of land transactions prior to 1924, ambiguities in the wording of the agreement were later to create some doubt as to its applicability to land surrendered before that year. This weakness, coupled with the fact that the agreement allowed Ontario to retain 50 per cent of all revenues deriving from the minerals underlying surrendered lands—which were initially set apart for the use and benefit of the Indians—rendered the 1924 agreement unsatisfactory to all parties to the agreement.

In March 1986 the Ontario Tripartite Council, made up of federal and provincial ministers as well as Indian association leaders, agreed to a new agreement, the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement.

The 1986 agreement puts a mechanism in place to allow for negotiations involving Ontario, the federal government and individual bands. In this way, on a band-by-band basis, it is estimated that negotiations resulting in what are called specific agreements will take place over the next 10 to 20 years. Negotiations with individual bands will provide for the transfer of unsold surrendered lands to Canada for the benefit of Indians and will allow Ontario to waive its rights to royalties from the minerals on these lands. They will also provide for a separate agreement between Canada and Ontario to ratify Letters Patent issued to purchasers of surrendered lands. For Indian bands not wishing to enter into specific agreements, the 1924 agreement will continue to apply.

For many Indian bands, specific agreements will mean concrete results in terms of lands and revenues. In all, it is possible that 200,000 acres of land will be returned to Ontario Indians. It is also expected that, as part of these band-specific negotiations, the province will relinquish its interest in mineral royalties that are worth millions of dollars.

Some individual bands have already entered into negotiations with a view to arriving at specific agreements. Negotiations with the Nipissing Band concerning the return of 34,000 acres of unsold surrendered lands are nearing completion. The Sarnia Band is also anxious to conclude a specific agreement, since it is expected that the province will relinquish to the band its interest in about $5 million in royalties now being held for Ontario by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

It is, however, the overall implications of the agreement on the Indian community about which I am particularly happy. Although an increased land base and greater revenues are of considerable interest, the potential for greater economic development on Indian reserve lands, which would lead to greater economic self-sufficiency, is even more exciting. Given that the movement towards Indian self-government can only be strengthened by increased self-sufficiency, I can only label these measures as extremely positive.

The Ontario legislature will also have to ratify the Indian Lands Agreement. Although it introduced legislation in December 1986, the interruption of the legislature due to the elections in that province means that legislation will have to be reintroduced in the provincial legislature.

The House of Commons has passed this bill, and I hope that it will receive speedy passage through the Senate as well.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Spivak for her explanation of Bill C-73. In the strictly legislative sense, this bill does not really legislate anything. Through this bill, we are ratifying an agreement that has already been reached. The purpose of Bill C-73, as was so adequately pointed out by Senator Spivak, is to confirm and ratify a bilateral agreement between Canada and Ontario. This particular agreement is known as the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement, and the agreement was appended to Bill C-73.

Certain Indian bands that may benefit from this particular legislation are anxious that it go forward. Some of the other bands in Ontario and some of the organizations in Ontario may not be too anxious, but, nevertheless, I do not think we should unduly delay the passage of this bill. As Senator Spivak pointed out, the Legislature of Ontario must also pass similar legislation. If we could pass this legislation at this time as quickly as possible, we might encourage Ontario to pass equivalent legislation.

I do not want to take the time of the Senate now, but one day we should take a long, hard look at the events that have led to the necessity of passing Bill C-73. Behind all of the nice words we hear in relation to this bill there is a trail of broken promises and a trail of unfair dealing, but most of all a large trail of sadness and hardship left behind in many Indian communities in Ontario.

In 1924 large tracts of land were alienated from the Indian people of Ontario. I do not know all of the background, but I suppose it was decided that Indians had too much land and the government of the day had to take it away. When these lands were seized in 1924, they were turned over to the Province of Ontario.

Honourable senators, if we looked across the country, we would find in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba, in Alberta and in British Columbia a lot of broken treaty promises; we would find a lot of unfulfilled treaties. In British Columbia we would see the cut-off lands that were taken away from many bands in British Columbia in 1916. I am sure that in those provinces you would find the same trail of hardship among bands that lies behind this particular legislation in the province of Ontario.

I propose that we give this bill second reading and send it to committee for some further clarification by officials and perhaps by the minister. I believe that it should go to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

Honourable senators will recall that on one previous occasion Senator Watt proposed that there should be a special Senate committee established to deal with the many aboriginal issues present in Canada today. Later the Special Committee on Canadian Youth recommended that there should be a standing committee established to deal with the many aboriginal issues that are outstanding today. Honourable senators, that is the type of Senate committee that I would favour. I favour the establishment of a standing Senate committee to deal with aboriginal issues. I believe that the issues behind Bill C-73 are of the type that should be dealt with by a standing committee on aboriginal issues.

This is but one issue that could be dealt with by such a Senate committee. I hope that some time in the near future—as soon as possible—the Senate will see its way clear to establishing a standing committee on aboriginal issues so that we can get behind many of these issues and clarify them for the public and for the government so that it can set government policy on them.

Most honourable senators are well informed on political issues, but do not know very much about what is behind the issues that Bill C-73 addresses; and the Canadian public is even less informed on these issues. I suggest that the Senate can do the job, that the Senate has the talent, the time and the commitment to start dealing with some of these issues.

I see Senator Hastings across the way is listening intently. Senator Hastings is one of the foremost experts in the Senate on parole. There are many of my people in penal institutions—a number far out of proportion to the rest of the population in this country, and that is just another issue that has to be dealt with.

In any event, I am digressing. Honourable senators, if this bill is referred to committee, I will ensure that it is given speedy passage.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, in reference to the remarks of Senator Marchand, and since he has invoked my name with respect to natives in custody, I feel obliged to respond and to say that I am in general agreement with the bill and I support him on the issue he is bringing to our attention—that is, that there are far too many natives in custody and that that number is far out of proportion to the population of Canada.

It seems that we are totally incapable of facing the issue of a native in custody. I should like to say that, until we understand the native and until he can come to some understanding of our system of justice, he will simply continue to resign himself to whatever fate the Parole Board, the courts or the administration invoke upon him. It is most unfair and cries out for attention—not on his behalf but on our behalf.

In that respect I hasten to support Senator Marchand's proposal that a committee of the Senate on aboriginal rights be formed as quickly as possible. That is one of the first issues I hope the committee will address.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, if the bill is referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, then, given that the bill is the product of negotiations in a most unusual situation in Ontario where we have a federally and provincially-appointed Indian Commissioner, Roberta Jamieson, I wonder if honourable senators would consider inviting her to be a witness before the committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The chairman of the committee is not present, but I am certain he would be only too happy to accede to Senator Marsden's wishes. Certainly, the committee is master of its own affairs and can invite any witness it wishes.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William M. Kelly moved the second reading of Bill C-129, to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak on Bill C-129, an historic bill that, once passed, will authorize the government to privatize Air Canada.

As some of you may know, I was co-chairman of my party's task force on crown corporations and privatization prior to the 1984 election. As part of its mandate, the task force took a look at the privatization of Air Canada and came to certain conclusions. For this reason I am pleased to have been assigned to introduce Bill C-129 today.

I believe that the privatization of Air Canada is an idea whose time has come. I should like to explain why.

Air Canada is a mature corporation with an integrated domestic and international network encompassing 62 destinations. It has assets of over $3.1 billion and employs over 22,000 people. Air Canada is a competitive, stable and well-managed company.

At the same time, Air Canada requires capital: capital to modernize its fleet and equity capital to regear its leverage to a more conventional level.

Over the next five years the airline will require $2.5 billion or more for fleet replacement and other capital requirements. Substantially more capital will be required for fleet replacement thereafter. Some of these capital requirements, in my opinion, will obviously have to be equity financed.

Three generic choices face the government in this situation: either continue past practices and allow the corporation to load up even more on debt; have the government provide more equity capital; or give private investors the opportunity to provide at least some of the capital.

Forcing Air Canada to load up on debt would seriously disadvantage the corporation in modernizing its fleet, in responding to the new deregulated environment and would make Air Canada vulnerable to any economic downturns. In short, increasing Air Canada's debt load does not represent a prudent business decision.

Forcing Air Canada to continue to rely exclusively on the government for equity infusions would have meant that Air Canada would be subject to the vagaries of the government's macro fiscal and monetary policies and constraints, regardless of the requirements of the corporation. The past trend would have continued; Air Canada would have become starved for capital and would have run the risk of becoming a truncated corporation, unable to compete effectively or respond to the changing circumstances and requirements of a rapidly-changing domestic and international market.

Given that Air Canada is a mature and stable corporation, I think it only a natural evolution for Air Canada to be allowed to satisfy its capital requirements, at least in part, from the private equity markets.

The air transportation sector in Canada has reached a point of maturity and stability. We now have three "national" carriers—Air Canada, Canadian Airlines International, with Wardair emerging as a strong third airline. Furthermore, both Air Canada and Canadian Airlines have expanded their networks through affiliation with "connector" or "alliance" partners. Air Canada's connector network is composed of six feeder carriers that provide service to 96 Canadian communities. Canadian's partners include seven feeder carriers that provide service to 113 Canadian cities. Since 1984 there has been a 50 per cent increase in scheduled airline departures, from 6,200 to 9,300 on average per week. We have come a long way since the time when Air Canada could legitimately have been characterized as the only truly "national" airline. Competition in the industry is intense and the level and standards of service are good.

No longer do we need a government-owned carrier to fill the vacuum left by the private sector to provide a truly national service infrastructure. While all this was part of Air Canada's—or TCA's—original mandate, the objectives either have been achieved or are being achieved by other means.

[Senator Kelly]

• (1520)

It has been some time, for example, since it was part of Air Canada's sole role to provide service to remote areas. Such services are now provided by a range of small and medium-sized air carriers. The government needs no longer to own Air Canada as an instrument of public policy. Air Canada's unique public policy objectives have been achieved; and the government's wider public policy objectives for the sector can be achieved as well, or better, under private sector management and ownership.

I also believe that continued government ownership of Air Canada will dampen the impact of air transportation deregulation begun by the previous government in its May 1984 policy statement and brought to its current state by the new National Transportation Act passed by Parliament in 1987.

Who would take deregulation seriously when the dominant firm in the market continued to be government-owned and could always fall back on the government's deep pockets? Would the full beneficial impacts of competition be felt if Air Canada always had the safety net of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to fall back on? Air Canada persisting as a crown corporation would have inevitably skewed the forces of competition and deregulation which the government wishes to inject into this sector. Air Canada persisting as a crown corporation under deregulation would also have put Air Canada's competitors at a significant competitive disadvantage.

In addition, while domestic routes are now deregulated, basically, any air carrier who demonstrates willingness, insurability and operating fitness will be licensed to fly a domestic route. All applications for domestic licenses—except in the north, where there is still a need for economic regulation—are granted if the company has: 1) an operating certificate from Transport Canada; 2) insurance, and 3) is Canadian.

More competition is being encouraged on international routes as well. International licences are now much less restrictive and the policy is not to do so much "carving up the pie" as to let all qualified carriers apply for routes.

As we move away from the "carving up the pie" approach, it is important that Air Canada have no preferential treatment. But, as a crown corporation, it would be difficult for the government not to treat Air Canada "differently", or at least it would be difficult for other air carriers to believe that Air Canada was not receiving preferential treatment. Privatization will remove this real or apparent conflict from the government and Air Canada.

Finally, capital constraints aside, I do not believe that commercial crown corporations such as Air Canada can be truly commercial or can compete effectively under the policy and financial management and control regime operated by the government and embodied in Part XII of the Financial Administration Act. While it is entirely suitable for crown-owned monopolies, or for corporations dependent on the public purse, the regime of direction, control and accountability is too detailed, too inflexible, too bureaucratized and too dilatory for commercial enterprises.

For example, under Part XII, Air Canada is required to obtain cabinet approval of its five-year corporate plans and annual capital budgets. In the absence of cabinet approval, Air Canada cannot legally enter into capital expenditures and commitments. I would remind honourable senators that in many instances cabinet approval is not obtained until after the beginning of the year to which the budget applies. Furthermore, the budgets and plans are reviewed, in detail, by the Department of Transport, the Treasury Board, the Department of Finance, and sometimes even the PCO, prior to cabinet review. The interests and perspectives of these departments are not always synchronized, meaning that a corporation like Air Canada is often placed in the middle, arbitrating amongst competing and often conflicting objectives and perspectives.

Crown corporations such as Air Canada are accountable and responsible in some form and measure to a host of authorities in Ottawa, including the responsible minister and his or her department, a regulatory authority such as the CRTC, NTA, NEB or AECB, Parliament and the parliamentary committees, Finance, Treasury Board, the PMO, the PCO, the Auditor General, the Comptroller General, the Commissioner of Official Languages, the Human Rights Commission, and so forth. The government is anything but a unitary, homogeneous shareholder! One chief executive officer of a commercial crown corporation told me that he spent about 75 per cent of his time dealing with "Ottawa" and about 25 per cent of his time managing his corporation!

In order to respond effectively to a deregulated market place and to respond to intense competition, Air Canada must be cut loose from the government controls that bind it and from which Air Canada's competitors are immune.

That freedom will not be without a price. No longer will Air Canada be a "chosen instrument" of the Government of Canada; no longer will there be an implicit or explicit guarantee on its borrowings; no longer will the deep pockets of the Consolidated Revenue Fund be there as a safety net in times of need.

Honourable senators, there is some mythology attached to the privatization of Air Canada: that somehow Air Canada will be less a national symbol if it is no longer owned by the government; that somehow standards of safety and service will decline under private ownership. This mythology is easy to reject. Air Canada will persist as a national airline worthy of our pride whether it is owned by the Government of Canada or by a broad segment of individual Canadian investors.

Secondly, I reject the notion that government ownership is somehow intrinsically better than private sector ownership, the marketplace and the forces of competition in ensuring proper standards of service and safety. As honourable senators know, under the Aeronautics Act, the Department of Transport applies the same regulations and standards for air-worthiness and safety across the gamut of carriers regulated under that act. There are no distinctions drawn between government-owned, privately-owned and publically-owned carriers by MOT when it comes to safety. A privatized Air Canada will be no less safe or reliable than a government-owned Air Canada! A privatized Air Canada will be no less "national" or "Canadian" than a government-owned Air Canada!

As some of you may know, the Commonwealth of Australia is taking a very close look at the sale of its two government-owned airlines, Qantas and TAA. I was intrigued and encouraged by Labour Prime Minister Bob Hawke's statement that he saw nothing in social democratic theory that required continuing government ownership of airlines. Surely the same applies to Canada, where the air transportation sector is more developed, more mature, more competitive and less regulated than in Australia.

So, honourable senators, I am whole-heartedly in support of this privatization initiative by the government.

There may have been other ways to achieve the privatization, however. For example, it was possible for the government to recapitalize Air Canada—as was last done in 1977—commercialize it by continuing it under the Canada Business Corporations Act and allowing it to operate independently of government. With a two- or three-year track record of commercial performance, the government could then have sold its shares. This, in fact, was the way in which British Airways was privatized. The advantage in that approach is that the move to the private sector is less sudden and the stock less speculative when it finally comes to market.

Assuming that a 60-40 ratio is the standard to be achieved, a refinancing at this time—by the conversion of debt to equity—would have cost the Consolidated Revenue Fund something in the neighbourhood of $125 million—or slightly more than a third of the government's net proceeds from the sale of Telelobe Canada last year.

I can understand why, at this point, the government would have rejected that alternative, given the other, major demands on the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Furthermore, reflecting back to an earlier point, I do not think it would have been fair in a time of deregulation to give Air Canada, in effect, a two- or three-year "head start" or "leg-up" on its competitors by the government's recapitalizing Air Canada, based on what Air Canada needed and not on what the market thought Air Canada deserved.

I am told that in 1977 Air Canada's competitors, particularly CP, complained bitterly about the recapitalization of Air Canada and the competitive advantages that recapitalization were said to have given Air Canada. I suspect that the opposition from CAIL and Wardair to a further recapitalization would have been even more intense, and legitimately so, in this deregulated environment. What, after all, is more legitimate than to ask for a level playing field on which to compete?

Furthermore, I suspect it is impractical for the government to really allow a crown corporation to operate independently. Experience has shown that the government will be held to account regardless.

This brings me, honourable senators, to my third point, which is the partial privatization of Air Canada contemplated by the government. The bill before us today would authorize the government to divest itself of 100 per cent of the shares of Air Canada; to completely privatize it.

I understand, however, that it is the government's intention to divest itself of only 45 per cent for the time being. I also understand that Air Canada is currently working on an employee share ownership plan that would result in some portion of the shares being held for employees at a discount.

Within the 45 per cent public issue, therefore, some shares will be available to Air Canada employees, thereby diminishing the size of the truly "public" tranche.

In other words, for at least the time being the government will continue as the majority shareholder in Air Canada. I understand this decision has been made for reasons of capital market capacity and current market circumstances. In short, it is apparently the judgment of the government's advisors that a public tranche of up to 45 per cent is about right in current market circumstances.

Quite frankly, this concerns me. We know that as long as the government is the controlling shareholder—indeed, as long as the government is a significant shareholder—it will be held politically accountable for Air Canada's operations and any of Air Canada's failures and foibles.

In his public statement and in his and his officials' statements in the other place, the minister has stressed the government's plans to act only as an investor in Air Canada after the public issue, not to play a management role, and to adhere to its commitments to act in concert with the public shareholders of Air Canada in the commercial best interests of the corporation.

Even at that, the temptation for the government to intervene will be enormous. We need only look to the experiences with the Canada Development Corporation and Telesat for examples. What message will the government's controlling interest send to shareholders, employees, management and competitors of Air Canada? Will Air Canada really be free from government intervention?

For these reasons I sincerely hope that Air Canada is completely privatized quickly and is not "stuck" for long in a hybrid—part government, part private—position.

Honourable senators, allow me to turn to some of the specifics of this bill. Under clause 5 of the bill, Air Canada is to be continued under the Canada Business Corporations Act. By virtue of the Air Canada Act, 1977, Air Canada is currently a "special act corporation" in which only Her Majesty in right of Canada may hold shares. Continuance under the CBCA will put Air Canada on the same corporate law footing as its competitors, give it more flexibility and relieve its dependence on Parliament for any routine changes to its legal corporate structure.

Clause 6, however, entrenches certain requirements of public policy that will be reflected in Air Canada's charter indefinitely: that total foreign ownership in Air Canada will not exceed 25 per cent—this provision, incidentally, mirrors the provisions in the National Transportation Act whereby carriers licensed under that act must be at least 75 per cent Canadian-controlled; that Air Canada's head office will remain in Montreal and that the current operational and overhaul centres in Winnipeg, Montreal and Mississauga will be maintained.

Under clause 10, the Official Languages Act will apply to Air Canada in perpetuity, or at least as long as Bill C-129 is in force. I emphasize that the Official Languages Act will apply even after the government ceases to hold any shares in Air Canada.

Clause 11 relates to the board of directors of Air Canada. All directors are now appointed by the Governor in Council and serve "at pleasure" for three-year terms. Obviously, when shares are held by other than the government, the non-government shareholders will have the right to elect directors. Furthermore, since the government has committed itself to voting with the public shareholders, the public shareholders will have the power, in effect, to elect all directors of Air Canada, even while the government is the majority shareholder. Clause 11 provides for the continuation of current directors until the first annual general meeting of the new corporation and the immunity from damage claims by any director appointed by the Governor in Council whose tenure is cut short by virtue of not being elected to the board at the first annual general meeting of the continued corporation.

Clause 12 of the bill deems Air Canada's shares and debt instruments to be "legal for life"; in other words, qualified for routine "in the basket" investment under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act and the other federal statutes listed in clause 12.

In 1977, when Air Canada was last recapitalized and split off from CNR under the Air Canada Act, 1977, that act established Air Canada's debt obligations as being legal for life in order to allow Air Canada to borrow in the capital markets freely and at competitive rates. Clause 12 continues that precedent.

In the legislation to privatize Telelobe passed by Parliament last year, Telelobe's shares and debt instruments were also deemed to be "legal for life". In Telelobe's case, it would have satisfied the legislative criteria for "legal for life" on a national basis, but because it did not have a share structure prior to privatization it did not satisfy the letter of the legislation.

For those in this chamber and elsewhere who are concerned about the impact of this legislation on the rights of employees, I offer the following assurance: policies governing employee interests—such as salaries, benefits, pensions and the like—will not be affected at all by this bill. The management of Air Canada has been responsible for labour-management relations for decades; this responsibility will continue. At the same time, the Canada Labour Code ensures that the collective agreements will be continued. The Pension Benefits Standards Act ensures that the pension rights of current employees and Air Canada pensioners will be protected after public participation in Air Canada, just as they were before.

Air Canada is committed to meeting its pension obligations both under the act and in relation to the contractual obligations it has with employees, contrary to statements made during the legislative committee hearings in the other place. Air Canada's pension plan currently has an actuarial unfunded liability of approximately $127 million.

Honourable senators, in the late 1930s C.D. Howe and the Liberal government concluded that Canada needed a "national" air service. The government's clear preference at the time was that the service be provided by the private sector, or at least by a corporation with private sector and government ownership.

When Canadian Pacific refused to participate, however, C.D. Howe and Mackenzie King, in some pique, directed the CNR to establish an airline. Thus was created Trans Canada Airlines, which, until 1977, operated as a wholly-owned subsidiary of CNR.

In 1977, when Air Canada was recapitalized and separated from CNR, the Liberal government, as Senators Kirby, Pitfield and Kenny will recall, gave serious consideration to a partial privatization of Air Canada. In 1979 Air Canada was one of the crown corporations the Clark government and its advisors looked at closely as a candidate for privatization. My crown corporations task force reviewed Air Canada's privatization prospects in 1983-84. Now, with Bill C-129, the privatization of Air Canada seems close to fruition.

Rather than being seen as a break with the past or a new departure, I suggest we see this privatization as a natural evolution of Air Canada's development—one that will put Air Canada in a better position to meet the challenges and demands of the present and the future.

In that light, honourable senators, I commend this bill for your consideration.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to ask Senator Kelly if he knows whether the government gave Air Canada any assurances with respect to the passage of this bill by the Senate. I understand that Air Canada has purchased 34 Airbuses for a total of $1.8 billion on the strength of the passage of this bill. It has only been passed by the House of Commons.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the two things are not connected. If I remember correctly, the orders for the Airbuses were placed quite some time ago. However, I am not clear on that.

Senator Frith: I understand that that move came two days after the House of Commons approved the bill enabling Air Canada to sell 45 per cent of its stock. That is why I asked the question. The impression given is that Air Canada held up this order, while awaiting the passage of this legislation, and placed the order within two days of the adoption of the bill by the House of Commons. However, the bill has not been adopted by the Senate and is not law.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, all I can say is that, in my view, what we are hearing is conjecture on the part of journalists. It is clear, in my judgment and understanding, that Air Canada has no choice but to proceed with the continuation of modernizing its fleet. As I tried to outline in my remarks, the passage of this bill will make a difference to the way in which Air Canada's bills are paid. However, as I said, I do not believe that Air Canada has any choice but to move ahead with the Airbus purchase, even though, without the passage of this bill, the government would have to take a close look at how to go about paying the price.

Senator Frith: The way it was put to me by representatives of Air Canada was exactly as Senator Kelly just put it. They said that they had no choice; that, if they were to modernize, they had to make a purchase, but that the government really had either to privatize and get additional funds from the market or to take the funds out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. The government decided, for the reasons put forward by Senator Kelly in support of the bill, that it was preferable to privatize and to get the funds from the market. That is why I am surprised that the order was made before the passage of this legislation by the Senate.

Senator Kelly: I am not sure whether another question has been put, honourable senators, but I want to make one additional comment and express my own quite frank and honest surprise. It was clear and quite obvious that substantial amounts of capital were going to be needed to continue operating Air Canada successfully. My surprise stems from the fact that the government waited so long to move towards privatization.

● (1540)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of Senator Kelly.

Senator Kelly referred to the condition that Air Canada will maintain its bases in Winnipeg and Mississauga. Could he give us more detail on that? Over what period of years is that guaranteed, and what kind of guarantee is it as to numbers, for example? Will it maintain the Winnipeg overhaul base with three mechanics? Will that be considered to be maintaining the base?

Senator Kelly probably knows that we, in Manitoba, are very suspicious of Air Canada's actions. Manitoba is no longer the head office and the main overhaul base. The erosion has been constant, and we are very fearful as to what guarantees we are painting in this bill.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I would suggest that this sort of question perhaps would be better dealt with in committee, where there could be answers from the minister and others.

I should like to raise one concern that I know was expressed by Manitobans relating to the commitment to keep the Winnipeg base open in view of the pending order for Airbuses. The suggestion was that there was logic in the ongoing maintenance of the Airbuses being done in Montreal rather than Winnipeg, for a variety of reasons. I believe within the last day plans have been announced. I would preface this comment by saying that I am only 99 per cent sure that this comment is correct. Maintenance of the bodies of the current Aircraft—the 727s—is concentrated in Winnipeg; maintenance of the Airbus bodies would continue in Winnipeg. Engine maintenance would very probably be taken care of in Montreal. There is no anticipated loss of jobs in either place. That is my understanding.

However, I do suggest that the committee would be the place to examine matters of that sort very carefully.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I believe all of us would like to say that we appreciate the way Senator Kelly has presented this bill.

I was surprised that he reached back to the 1930s and brought forth that old myth about how TCA started. I hope that we will not get into straightening that out, because there is a very broad difference of opinion among certain people, which has nothing to do with this bill. I am happy to say that that situation does not need to concern us, although I would be concerned if people took Senator Kelly's remarks about the 1930s as gospel.

Senator Kelly has said that this is an historic bill, and that is true. Air Canada, for over 50 years, has been the chosen instrument in the aviation of Canada, both at home and abroad. Having been the chosen instrument, it has had undoubted advantages.

Senator Kelly said that Air Canada would be starved for capital. Until recent years there was never any question about the ability of Air Canada to meet its capital requirements. In the modern age and with the cost of aircraft escalating the way it has, the need to maintain proper debt-equity ratios is of growing importance to the organization. I am sure that is one of the reasons why Air Canada management are concerned about their debt-equity ratios in a volatile business, where capital requirements are great and where, in the short term, variable costs are high.

In view of the strong statements made by Senator Kelly, I do not understand why it has taken so long to come to this obvious conclusion. If it has taken this long, what is the reason for moving now? Why did they not take Senator Kelly's advice back in 1983-84, when his task force came forward with the very strong recommendation? These are questions that we could ask people other than Senator Kelly, because, while he is a very powerful man, I am sure he does not decide government policy completely. Perhaps that is the reason why it was slow in coming forward.

Senator Kelly made another statement that surprised me, and that was this: The reason why there was only partial privatization was because of capital market restraints. I wonder if he recognizes the amount of capital raised by other companies with partially paid shares and with other methods that are open to them. However, perhaps these questions would be better directed to the experts who advised the company and who, I take it, advised the government. I take it the government did have outside financial advisers, and I would hope that they, as well as the investment advisers of the company, would be available to come before the committee.

Honourable senators, the bill raises these questions of why now and why only part? Senator Kelly said that Air Canada is a mature and stable company and has been for a long time. That is not the reason this is being moved now. Perhaps he is trying to cover up the fact that once deregulation was in force the move to Air Canada should have been concomitant, and not some four or five years later.

In any event, the committee looks forward to dealing with various aspects of this bill, making sure that we do not rush it, as was done in the other place, where it was rammed through the committee in one day. That obviously bothered people. I can assure honourable senators that the committee will spend more than one day looking at this bill. We will not try to rush this. We will attempt to give people an opportunity to speak, and we will report back to the Senate in due course.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kelly, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-121, to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, Canada is the world's leading producer and exporter of uranium. There are five uranium producers in Canada. Three of these producers operate one production centre each in northern Saskatchewan. The other two producers are Denison Mines Limited and Rio Algom, which operate four production centres in the Elliot Lake area in Ontario.

The purpose of Bill C-121 is to give the federal government the authority it requires to proceed with the agreement made with the Government of Saskatchewan, which was announced on February 22, 1988. That agreement calls for, first, merging the assets of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and a provincial crown corporation, Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, which is hereinafter referred to as SMDC; and, second, after the merger, privatizing the new company.

There has been extensive debate on this initiative in the House and there has been full and open discussion in committee. What I intend to do this afternoon is briefly summarize the key features.

Bill C-121 provides for the transfer of the assets of Eldorado Nuclear Limited to a new company in return for securities. The articles of the new company, which will be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act, will specify certain conditions which the new company will be required to honour.

First, there will be ownership and voting conditions, which will provide an opportunity for a large number of investors to own shares while maintaining Canadian majority ownership and control.

No non-resident shareholder will be permitted to own more than 5 per cent of the total voting shares and, in total, non-resident participation will be limited to 20 per cent of total votes cast at any meeting of shareholders. Canadian residents will be permitted to own no more than 25 per cent of the shares and the new company will be restricted from issuing non-voting participation shares.

Another important feature of the bill is that the articles of the new company will require that the head office be located in Saskatoon. It is important, apparently, to place senior management close to the company's resource base. But more than that, we are expressing confidence in, and strengthening, Saskatchewan's world leadership in uranium production and technology.

The bill provides that the securities of the new company which will be owned by Eldorado will subsequently be sold, thus achieving the objective of privatization. The proceeds of the sale of these securities will be used by Eldorado to discharge its obligations, including the debt, which is an obligation of the Government of Canada.

Under the terms of the letters of intent signed by Canada and Saskatchewan last February 22, the new company will also acquire the assets of SMDC in return for securities. The combined entity will be privatized over a period of seven years.

This two-staged plan—the merger and the privatization of Eldorado and SMDC—was recommended by Eldorado's parent organization that Canada develop an investment corporation.

As a matter of fact, I remember reading in an old Hansard of 1982 questions by Senators Phillips, Roblin and Murray to, I believe, Senator Austin, who was at that particular time the Minister of State for Social Development, when he was describing what he referred to then as the imminent merger and privatization of these companies. This is not an idea initiated by this government.

The recommendation was not made lightly; it followed three years of detailed and complex negotiations and preparations.

The point I am making here is that, while it appeared to have the blessing of the previous government, it appears to be left for us to determine whether or not the terms are acceptable and appropriate.

Both CDIC and its financial advisers, Burns Fry Limited, have expressed the opinion that the transaction is equitable and provides fair value for Eldorado's assets. In addition, the merged and privatized entity will be taxable, which will increase the potential revenue for the federal government.

The legislative committee studying the bill in the other place has had the opportunity to discuss these important points with the chairman of CDIC, as well as with representatives of Burns Fry.

Quite apart from these commercial and financial considerations, the privatization of Eldorado, as contemplated in this bill, responds to many other considerations that are essential to a successful privatization process.

The process will offer employees an opportunity to share in the ownership of their new company. The share ownership program will benefit both employees and the new company, since it builds the kind of cooperative partnership between management and staff that leads to productivity and profitability.

The experience of Telelobe, as indicated by Senator Kelly, has demonstrated employee interest in share ownership, since 98 per cent of Telelobe employees bought shares and 96 per cent of employees bought the maximum amount available to them.

The Eldorado and SMDC amalgamation will result in a combined workforce of approximately 1,000 people. There will be no perceptible impact on job security for employees working at Eldorado operations—including mining, refining and conversion—which will be taken over by the new company. The rationalization of administrative functions may affect a small number of people, who will be treated in a fair and sensitive manner.

I am sure that all of us believe that the best guarantee of jobs and job security is a healthy, viable company, with financial stability, competitive advantages and a secure market for its products. All of these conditions apply with regard to this privatization effort. We have seen the positive benefits in terms of the better and more secure jobs that followed other privatization efforts initiated recently.

Let me turn to one issue that all of us accept as a serious and important responsibility: the protection of employees and the public at large. Last April 25 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced new uranium mining regulations. These regulations reflect the government's commitment to the health and safety of workers and the protection of the environment.

In testimony before the legislative committee, the Atomic Energy Control Board made it clear that the privatization of Eldorado would not affect the board's authority under the Atomic Energy Control Act. The new company will be subject to the same regulations concerning the health and safety of workers and the protection of the environment as any other private or public corporation.

So, honourable senators, it is abundantly clear that Canada has in place an appropriate regulatory framework to oversee properly the uranium industry. It is clear that the transaction that we are now proposing through this legislation will not at all affect the regulatory framework.

Exports of uranium and nuclear materials will continue to be controlled and monitored by the Atomic Energy Control Board and the Department of External Affairs in accordance with Canada's nuclear non-proliferation policy. Other acts and regulations, such as the Canada Labour Code, will also continue to apply to the new company. Maintaining these two organizations as crown corporations is not required to ensure public safety, employment safety or the continuation of the current regulatory environment.

The Government of Canada also recognizes its financial responsibilities with respect to the waste accumulated by Eldorado over the past decades. The government will contribute to the funding of a solution for the management of these wastes through a cost-sharing formula that forms part of the agreement establishing the new company. However, all costs associated with the management of future waste will be assumed by the new company.

Before I conclude, I want to make one more point about the role of communities in this process.

The government will ensure that all commitments entered into by Eldorado with local communities will be honoured, as will Eldorado's other obligations. Moreover, we anticipate that the new company will act in the same manner as Eldorado, as a good corporate citizen in all of the communities and regions in which it maintains an active involvement.

The legislation opens up new opportunities for Eldorado. The merger with SMDC will create a significantly stronger company, with the resources, technology and personnel to compete effectively in the global market. The amalgamation will also lead to a more rational development of the two companies' uranium mines. The new company will be able to use the combined resources of Eldorado and SMDC to focus upon low-cost projects. This will mean a more efficient allocation for capital and other resources, which, in turn, will mean increased financial and economic returns.

The wide distribution of shares and restrictions of the ownership of shares will give Canadians and employees a real and direct interest in the future of the company. These safeguards will also ensure that control remains firmly in Canadian hands and, at the same time, the operation of the current regulatory regimes will ensure that vital public interests, such as health, safety and environmental protection, will continue unabated.

Honourable senators, this agreement will benefit Canada and it will benefit Saskatchewan. It adds strength to Canada's uranium industry in a manner that will enable it to contribute more to the national economy and to Saskatchewan's economy. I trust that this house will move expeditiously through the next stage of debate.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator MacDonald: Yes.

Senator Sinclair: I wonder if the honourable senator can tell us why, when capital assets of approximately equal value are merged, one outfit finishes up receiving only 35 per cent and the other outfit ends up with 65 per cent?

Senator MacDonald: Yes, that point rather leaps out at you. As I understand it, the assets of both companies are somewhere in the area of slightly over $900 million, and this split in ownership is heavily in favour of Saskatchewan. I understand that the determination of share ownership or the worth of the companies, as recommended to CDIC by Burns Fry, was estimated on a discounted future cash-share basis.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, that is very interesting. The honourable senator said that this deal was good for Saskatchewan, and I can well understand that point. I am wondering whether it is as good for Canada as the honourable senator indicated it was, given that there is such a disparity in the values. Discounted cashflows, of course, are based on assumptions. There is solid value in assets though they have different earning potentials at various times. Eldorado has asset values on the refining side, which obviously begs the question about the value of those assets, given that this is not a good time for refining uranium.

Senator MacDonald: It will be very interesting to hear what CDIC's financial advisers from Burns Fry have to say before the committee to which this bill will be referred. They have outlined their evaluation process and they have indicated that it was totally in accordance with the normal methods of evaluation for mining companies.

Senator Sinclair: I wonder if the honourable senator could answer this question: Will the membership of the committee consist of the Honourable Senators Balfour, Steuart, Sparrow, Buckwold and Barootes, people who seem to have a certain geographical advantage or disadvantage, or can I be assured that there will be a broader aspect, including the honourable senator who will bring a maritime approach, when it comes to looking at this deal?

Senator MacDonald: I am sorry, but I missed the first part of the honourable senator's comments. Is he suggesting that we should all be directors of this new company? If so, I think we should wait until the lobbying bill comes in to make sure.

Senator Sinclair: We are going to have to be careful, because Senator Barootes is the chairman of one of the outfits. What I should like to know is whether the committee that reviews this bill will have a broad regional composition or will be loaded with these fair people from the west.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, it is my privilege to speak on behalf of this side of the chamber, albeit in a completely different vein from that raised by my colleague, Senator Sinclair. I am sure that Senator Sinclair and most honourable senators will be rather interested in what I say in due course. I think that this is a bum deal for Saskatchewan. I shall be referring to my colleague, Senator Barootes, who, you may be interested to know, is the chairman of the board of the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation.

Senator Sinclair: He is not here today.

Senator Buckwold: No, he is not here today and I am sorry, because I would like to compliment him on his acumen in the way he is running that very successful company as chairman of the board. Eldorado Nuclear Limited, on the other hand, has been a money-loser for many years, and I shall go into that in due course.

As a matter of fact, let me say to Senator Sinclair that I am amazed that Senator Barootes, canny Scot that he is, would be taken in by these big boys from Ottawa and Toronto by allowing them to unload Eldorado on an unsuspecting company in Saskatchewan—taking advantage, perhaps, of its agricultural roots, as these big city slickers come in and sell a bill of goods. Eldorado is not the world's greatest buy, and I will come to that point.

Senator MacDonald: But Saskatchewan is getting 61 per cent of it.

Senator Buckwold: I will come to that point in a moment, but I do not think it is a great deal. If people simply look at the figures, they may be misled.

Uranium and mining form a very important part of the economy of Saskatchewan. Most often senators from Saskatchewan, led by my friend Hazen Argue and others, talk about agriculture, drought, deficiency payments and so on; but in fact the agricultural industry is receding in its importance to the economy of Saskatchewan and is being replaced by mining. Let me read from an article in the Globe and Mail which talks about Saskatchewan. It reads in part:

Agriculture is responsible for only 17 per cent of total production in an average year, —the article is referring to wealth in Saskatchewan. It goes on:

Mining has become just as important as the farm sector today, because it accounts for roughly 17 per cent of provincial output by itself.

The economy of Saskatoon,

—my home city—

for example, was once based on agriculture. "But this is a mining town now," —and so on.

I once met a senior executive from a mining company at the airport in Saskatoon—and it may have been connected with the firm Senator Sinclair was formerly associated with. He said to me, "I love coming to Saskatoon; it's the cleanest mining town that I have ever visited." That was the first indication that I had that I lived in a mining town. We have five huge potash mines around the city and we have this immense uranium and gold industry located in northern Saskatchewan. Saskatoon is the headquarters for the gold and uranium industries in northern Saskatchewan and it is also a key centre for the potash industry. The gold and uranium industry employs 3,000 people directly and creates a further 7,500 jobs indirectly. I give honourable senators that information to give them some background on why mining is so important and why this deal is of interest to the people of Saskatchewan as well as to the people of Canada.

The history of uranium mining in Saskatchewan is quite interesting. Our friends in the NDP, hypocrites that they are, are always, at their conventions and in their statements, protesting the mining of uranium because of its nuclear energy potential. They march on city hall and the legislature. Even to this day it is the same people who are trying to get Saskatoon to declare itself a nuclear-free area. This has been going on for a long time. However, some years ago the Government of Saskatchewan, under an NDP administration, discovered that we had the finest uranium ore in the world, that it had a very high concentration of uranium and that, therefore, it had real potential. They appointed a little commission headed by someone they knew. Although, ostensibly, by party platform they are very much opposed to uranium mining, they, nevertheless, recommended that the Government of Saskatchewan—because it was a good investment and they are not really that dumb—should, in fact, proceed to invest, along with partners, in this very profitable mining endeavour, based mainly on uranium.

Honourable senators, that concludes my background comments. The Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation is a very profitable organization. Would you believe that last year, according to Senator Barootes' report—I am sorry he is not here to hear my compliment—that company had earnings of $60 million? It has been profitable year after year. It has had a 20 per cent return on equity.

In contrast, let us look at Eldorado. In evidence he gave to the committee of the House of Commons, Dr. Douglas McArthur, professor of economics at the University of Regina, said that Eldorado is just not a profitable concern and that only in one year have its profits ever been higher than $5 million, although it has assets of almost $1 billion. He said that they had accumulated losses of $155.9 million by 1986. Of course, the previous government put it on the block. It was a good asset to dispose of, but they did not have any buyers, apart from one who wanted it at such a cheap price that the government could not even look at the offer.

Some of you may think that Saskatchewan got such a great deal because, as Senator MacDonald said, they have about the same amount of assets, namely, $950 million to $1 billion each. Although they have the same assets, Saskatchewan ends up with 61.5 per cent of the company and the Government of Canada with 38.5 per cent. Our poverty-stricken friends from Toronto in the big corporations are concerned that poor Saskatchewan got the best of the deal because it ends up with a bunch of unproductive assets.

I have a Brooklyn Bridge that perhaps Senator Sinclair would like to buy. It is worth a lot of money, but it does not really earn very much.

My comment to the Government of Saskatchewan, which is anxious to get into the deal because it puts them into the big league, is that I am not quite sure they will end up with a profitable corporation. I would remind them that what they have is a very rich corporation indeed.

Honourable senators, having said that, we certainly think that it is a good idea—

Senator Sinclair: Ho, ho!

Senator Buckwold: I hear an uproar of laughter from my friend, which is all very well, but just because we think we did not get the best of the deal does not mean that some synergy is not possible between the two operations. Eldorado, which has its problems, does have some properties that will fit into the long-term objectives of the Saskatchewan Mining Corporation.

As has been pointed out, there are, of course, problems with the environment, waste disposal and all kinds of things that mining uranium basically creates. Those will have to be properly addressed.

Thirty per cent of the ownership by both governments will be disposed of within two years; a further 30 per cent will be disposed of within four years; and the balance in seven years. That is fine. Then we get into what Senator MacDonald carefully pointed out, namely, that the government is anxious to ensure that this very important strategic mineral is Canadian controlled. Statement after statement is made on the importance of the legislation in terms of ensuring that Canadian interests are fully protected through ownership. The Honourable Barbara McDougall, in introducing this bill in the House of Commons, said:

Let me turn to the specifics of this legislation because this will show Canadians we are also meeting our third condition for successful privatization, maximizing the benefits to the Canadian public.

She goes on to indicate the various controls, such as the limit of 25 per cent of voting shares that can be owned by Canadian individuals, the limit of 5 per cent for individuals who are non-residents of Canada, and the maximum of 20 per cent voting shares at any given meeting. That may sound all very well. However, last week I saw in a newspaper published in my hometown, Saskatoon, an article reporting an interview with a gentleman by the name of William Gatenby, who is the newly-appointed chief executive officer of this new corporation. The headline was: "Foreign equity in uranium may rise". I am sure he was not authorized to say this, but let me read what he told the interviewer. The article starts out in the following manner:

A 20-per-cent restriction on foreign ownership could be lifted if there is too much difficulty in selling enough shares to Canadians in what will be the world's largest uranium producer, says its newly-appointed chairman.

The article goes on to state:

According to a letter of intent signed by the federal and provincial governments in February, no non-Canadian will be entitled to hold shares carrying more than five per cent of voting rights, and total foreign ownership is restricted to 20 per cent.

[Senator Buckwold.]

"This restriction can always be changed, and those levels will be looked at as we go into the future," says Saskatchewan-born Bill Gatenby, who at 62 was hand-picked by the federal and provincial governments to establish the new company.

"Looking at this in the long range, I am sure that if we were unsuccessful in selling shares in Canada, and could not raise the necessary equity, careful consideration would be given to increasing the 20-per-cent restriction currently in place on foreign investment," . . .

That does not speak very well for the assurances from the government and the minister that we are going to keep this under Canadian control. The first public statement from the chairman of the board is to the effect that, if we do not sell enough in Canada, we will go outside.

Committee members should ask a few questions about that type of thing. They must ensure that our environment will be protected, that the transfer of employees is fairly carried out, that pension rights, superannuation, severance pay and all the other types of benefits are fair and equitable and that, overall, this is the kind of bill that will retain the harmony that is essential to maintaining the very best of relations.

Honourable senators, I close my remarks with a plea for environmental controls, as suggested by Senator MacDonald. In our part of the world that is very important for the workers and for those who are actively involved.

Having given you this background, I certainly hope the bill receives careful consideration in committee. I would be prepared to answer any questions you may have on what may be, from your point of view, some startling remarks I presented this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Sinclair: Senator MacDonald has told us that it will be necessary to be fair to the employees in regard to pensions and other matters. I have been told that one company has a defined-benefit plan and the other a money-purchase plan, and those are very difficult to bring together. I take it that what the senator is saying is that the committee will consider that matter.

● (1620)

Senator Buckwold: I am not the government. Since I am not sponsoring this bill, Senator Sinclair might direct that question to Senator MacDonald.

Senator Sinclair: I will put the question to Senator MacDonald.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator MacDonald speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator MacDonald: I did not hear the question Senator Sinclair put.

Senator Sinclair: Would the committee be concerned with the melding of the two types of pension plan involved in these two companies? One, I understand, is a money-purchase plan and the other is a defined-benefit plan. Will the committee be looking into those?

Senator MacDonald: I know nothing of the pension plans—

Senator Frith: Please finish that sentence.

Senator MacDonald: —of either company. I do not think that is beyond the competence of Senator Hastings and his committee. I certainly hope that Senator Hastings will invite both Senator Sinclair and Senator Buckwold to sit in on that committee.

Senator Sinclair: I am not from Saskatchewan.

Senator Buckwold: He has taken everything there is from Saskatchewan.

Senator Frith: Take the money and run, right?

Senator MacDonald: Senator Buckwold has given us a very good explanation as to why Senator Barootes is not here today. Having listened to Senator Sinclair, I do not know whether Senator Barootes would be afraid to be here because of the uncontrollable drooling over the good deal he made or whether he would be afraid he would burst into tears. I notice that he has been complimented on his Scots sagacity. I have to remind you that, while Senator Barootes owns two kilts, he only owns those kilts because, as honourable senators know, he was the medical officer for the Canadian Scottish during World War II. However, I will pass on your kind remarks.

The other gentleman who was quoted with respect to the uncertainty with respect to future ownership, and so on, makes a very interesting point. I think there are other ways the government could have gone about arranging this; I should have thought the reason they chose the route of legislation was to ensure that these restrictions and constraints were made abundantly clear. However, that is all, honourable senators, I have to say at this time on this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator MacDonald, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gerald Ottenheimer moved the second reading of Bill C-110, to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, the two primary purposes of Bill C-110 are to amalgamate the three existing import institutions and to extend the right of direct access for safeguard inquiries to all Canadian industries.

The amalgamation exercise is part of the government's efforts to rationalize and streamline federal institutions and practices. At the present time there are three import institutions: the Canadian Import Tribunal; the Textile and Clothing Board; and the Tariff Board. Each of these institutions can carry out general economic inquiries and/or injury inquiries. This situation creates duplication and discourages consistency in the examination of import and trade-related issues.

By bringing together under one roof the inquiry functions of the three tribunals, expertise and knowledge regarding trade matters will be more efficiently focused. This will help to ensure harmonization in the treatment of import and other international trade issues. The new tribunal will provide a central focus for examining the trade-related concerns of Canadians. The government will have a sound and consistent base on which to make decisions. This is clearly an improvement over the existing institutional regime.

[Translation]

The tribunal will take over the main functions of existing organizations, but it will also have the task of examining the complaints of Canadian producers when an increase in imports is the principal cause of serious injury to domestic producers of like goods.

In fact, that role is not an entirely new one. At the present time, the textile and clothing industry can go directly to the Textile and Clothing Board to ask it to undertake an inquiry to determine injury. What is new is the application of that right to all industries. This broader application aims to make the process more equitable and more open. For Canadian producers, the new system will be more transparent and better defined.

Until now, with the exception of the textile and clothing industry, such inquiries could only be carried out at the request of the government. Industry representatives were sometimes totally confused, as they did not know where to turn. Such situations will no longer arise.

[English]

Although there is a new right of direct access, this does not mean that any complaint by a Canadian producer will automatically lead to an injury inquiry by the new tribunal. If that were the case, the system could well degenerate into one used for harassment rather than serving its primary purpose, which is the investigation of situations where an industry has well-founded problems in facing import competition. I want to stress that the essential purpose of safeguard actions, such as surtaxes or quotas, is to help an industry during a limited period to take the necessary steps to become more efficient in order to be in a position to face import competition once the measure is terminated.

It should also be noted that the taking of safeguard actions may have important trade and domestic implications. With respect to the former, the imposition of safeguard measures may have the effect of nullifying a concession granted to other countries in past trade negotiations. In such circumstances they have a right under the GATT to retaliate if compensation is not paid. Consequently, it is important that only legitimate concerns be investigated. The direct access system has been designed with a view to balancing the need for an independent hearing into import concerns while, at the same time, preventing abuses of the system.

For example, for a safeguard injury inquiry to be initiated by the tribunal, certain conditions will need to be met. The petition must be made by firms producing a major proportion of the Canadian production of the goods being investigated. A firm accounting for a small proportion of a healthy industry could not have its problem investigated by the tribunal. If the industry is generally healthy, the problems of the firm must have causes other than imports and the solution must be found elsewhere, perhaps within the firm itself. Furthermore, producers will have to provide adequate prima facie evidence that increased, fairly traded imports are causing the alleged injury.

[Translation]

During the inquiry, which should normally not last more than six months, the tribunal will determine if the goods are being imported in such increased quantities as to be a principal cause of serious injury. The term "principal" means that the increase constitutes a cause of injury which is at least as important as all the others. This concept was added to allow the tribunal to make a finding of serious injury only if such injury is really attributable to imports. When that is not the case, the taking of safeguard actions will not solve the problems of the firm.

The bill contains provisions pursuant to which the government may ask the tribunal, in an inquiry into a complaint, to examine other related matters, be it during or after an inquiry undertaken following a complaint filed by domestic producers. That is an important aspect of the provisions relating to direct access. As I said previously, the taking of safeguard actions could have important consequences. By taking into account the particular circumstances of the case being examined, the government will be able to ask the tribunal to assess those repercussions, in the course of its deliberations.

Honourable senators, this legislation streamlines and rationalizes Canadian import institutions and makes our import institutional regime more transparent. I believe that the extension of the right to directly request a safeguard inquiry will be important for Canadian producers. When they have a justified concern regarding imports, there will be no question about their having a "day in court" and a fair hearing. At the same time, the bill contains provisions aimed at ensuring that this extended right will not permit ill-founded, trade-harassing complaints to be proceeded with.

I am sure honourable senators will agree to this piece of legislation with habitual enthusiasm. I have endeavoured to introduce it without dillying and without dallying and without the even grosser abuses of dillying and dallying or dallying and dillying.

[Senator Ottenheimer]

I recommend this legislation to honourable senators for their enthusiastic endorsement.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall moved the second reading of Bill C-92, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise to address the proposed amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act under Bill C-92. Unfortunately, Senator Bielish could not be here today. She was prepared to introduce the bill. I am sure she is more knowledgeable about the Canadian Wheat Board than a fisherman from Newfoundland is.

As most members of this chamber realize, since its establishment as a crown agency in 1935, the Canadian Wheat Board's reputation as a marketing agency has grown to the point where Canada is relied upon by many foreign customers as a dependable supplier of high-quality grain. Indeed, preliminary figures indicate that the efforts of the sales force at the Canadian Wheat Board resulted in the Canadian grain industry's achieving record export sales of 30.2 million tonnes of bulk grains and oilseeds in the last crop year.

The board has a unique relationship with producers—a relationship that goes back to 1935, when the board was first established. Over the years, through amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act, that relationship has been strengthened and improved.

The board's responsibilities are to market the wheat, oats and barley delivered to it and do so to the best advantage of producers; to provide producers with initial payments established and guaranteed by the federal government; to pool selling prices for the same grain so that all producers get the same basic return for the same grain and grade delivered; to equalize deliveries through quotas so that each producer gets his fair share of available markets; and to organize grain shipments to meet sales commitments in order to make the best use of handling and transportation facilities.

To sum up the responsibilities of the Canadian Wheat Board into one primary objective, I would say that the board markets as much grain as possible at the best possible price and thereby maximizes returns to prairie grain producers.

The purpose of the amendments being discussed today is to enable the board to continue to carry out that primary objective. It is as simple as that.

There are five amendments being put forward for consideration. The first three relate to sections of the Canadian Wheat Board Act that have become outdated. The remaining amendments represent improvements to the act. All amendments reflect the valued input of both the board and the producers who market through the board.

Let me first list the amendments for this chamber. Then I will come back to explain each one in detail.

The first amendment would ensure that quota and other delivery provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board's marketing system clearly apply to deliveries of grains to railway cars.

The second amendment would enable the Canadian Wheat Board to take advantage of a broader range of financial markets for borrowing and investment purposes.

Amendment number three would add canola to the definition of grain for the purposes of this act.

The fourth amendment would permit the Canadian Wheat Board, subject to Governor in Council approval, to adjust payments to producers who deliver grain to a railway car instead of a primary elevator to reflect the reduced carrying costs incurred in the handling of this grain.

The final amendment would provide for enabling legislation permitting members of the advisory committee to recover costs for travel time to committee meetings and for service on subcommittees.

Now, let us look at these amendments one by one.

With respect to the first amendment, an essential aspect of the board's operations is the administration of orderly marketing through the use of the quota system. The quota system is a very fair and equitable marketing method. It is the hallmark of the board's dealings with producers.

The key element of this system is the producer's permit book. Grain may only be delivered with a permit book and all deliveries must be entered in that permit book.

Producers delivering grain to railway cars, if not required to deliver that grain within their quota, may have an unfair advantage in terms of delivery opportunities over producers who rely solely on deliveries to primary elevators.

The intent of this amendment is to ensure that quota provisions apply to deliveries to both railway cars and primary elevators. Producers' delivery opportunities should be spread evenly among all producers.

The second amendment I spoke of will expand the board's sources for borrowing and investments.

Up until now the bulk of the board's borrowing has been from Canadian chartered banks. An amendment to the act in 1984 allowed the board to tap credit unions and trust companies as well. The government is proposing an amendment to the act that would allow the board to broaden its sources of financing. This should result in significant reduction of borrowing costs.

Canadian Wheat Board borrowings are considerable and the resulting reduction in interest rates would provide significant scope for reducing costs and therefore improving returns to grain producers. It would be advantageous, while broadening access to sources for borrowing funds, at the same time to widen the range of investment possibilities for the board.

Producer funds from grain sales which accumulate in the board's pool accounts are traditionally invested in government securities until they are distributed among producers in the form of a final payment. Opening up investment possibilities to the board could improve returns to producers.

The third amendment being proposed is to apply the provisions of the Canadian Wheat Board quota system to canola. In 1980 the name "canola" was trade marked as a term for rapeseed with a low erucic acid content. However, some countries still lump canola in with the rest of rapeseed, not all of which is fit for human consumption, which canola clearly is. Legal recognition under the act of the name canola will facilitate international marketing and further enhance the image of a product that has come to be known as Canada's "Cinderella crop".

The success story surrounding canola has grown to the point where export sales of canola reached a record 2.1 million tonnes in the crop year 1986-87. This amendment would result in the Canadian Wheat Board Act being brought into line with other legislation in reflecting this change.

The fourth amendment to the act that we will be considering would allow the Canadian Wheat Board to make an adjustment in the payment made to producers selling grain to the board by delivery to rail cars.

At present storage and carrying charges are borne by producers via pool account funds paid to elevator operators, regardless of where they deliver—whether to primary elevators or to producer cars. It makes little sense to charge these producers in full for a service they do not use.

However, the primary elevator system benefits all producers. One example is its ability to provide a surge capacity which smooths out volumes shipped so that unforeseen interruptions or seasonal declines in delivery do not result in an inability to deliver when export markets are available. Because such primary elevator capacity is beneficial to all prairie producers, it is reasonable that all deliveries should incur some charge for this service.

● (1640)

The final amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act would allow the board, subject to Governor-in-Council approval, to pay a per diem to members of the advisory committee for travel time to committee meetings and for service on subcommittees.

The government believes these amendments will bring the act up to date, enhance the operations of the board and assist those the board serves—the producers.

The amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act form part of the government's ongoing review of grain institutions to improve the overall efficiency of the industry.

To date this review has included amendments to such legislation as the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act and the Western Grain Stabilization Act and has resulted in unprecedented support for the agricultural sector.

In the weeks and months ahead this government will table legislation to other acts affecting the grain industry with a view to enhancing further grain and oilseed producers' prospects in the years and decades to come.

These are tough times for many in the grain sector. This government is doing what it can to help. It understands the problems and it is working on solutions both at home and abroad. The time has passed for bandaied solutions. What is required is a vision of the future and a bridge to get there. The government is building that bridge now, and these amendments are part of that effort. I commend the bill to the chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Well done! Our Fisheries chairman is a man of surf and turf!

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I should like to speak to the proposed amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. First, I congratulate Senator Marshall on an excellent exposition of the proposed amendments. He has done well for a fisherman from Newfoundland. He shows extraordinary knowledge, which can be attributed to his time as chairman of the Agriculture Committee earlier in this Parliament.

Senator Frith: We do a lot of reading when the fish are not biting!

Senator Hays: I do not propose to speak at length. Senator Marshall has explained the bill very well. However, I want to make some comments on a controversial provision of the bill, namely, clause 8, which amends section 26 of the act. It is controversial in that it substantially changes the incentive that grain producers have to use producer cars, and there is some concern on the part of the wheat pools as to what effect that will have on the long-term viability of the methods that we have in Canada of marketing and selling grain, which Senator Marshall was so laudatory of in his comments.

The section in question deserves some attention. It is an amendment, as I said earlier, to section 26(2), and reads in part:

... the Board may fix and pay in respect of any pool period a sum per tonne to each producer who has sold and delivered wheat to the Board in a railway car during the pool period.

The effect of that is difficult to identify at this stage, and I hope that the Agriculture Committee will have an early opportunity to hear witnesses to clarify that issue. I quote, for instance, from the media report Agriweek to the effect that this amendment ... would provide for refunds of around $2.75 a tonne to shippers using producer cars to ship board grains, representing handling, storage and interest expenses ...

When I look at the proceedings before the Commons Agriculture Committee I see a response from a spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board, their solicitor, Mr. Anders Bruun. He says in part:

... clause 8, which does provide for that additional payment on producer cars—I can indicate that the provision is drafted sufficiently broadly to provide for a range of payments that could range from nothing to the full value of those charges,

He goes on later to say:

So the legislation itself has built right into it a great deal of flexibility as to amount and timing of payment and as to terms and conditions to be attached to the payment, and all of it is, as indicated in the initial wording of the amendment called for by clause 8, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

The potential problem is that with that much latitude we would be passing legislation of which we would not know the effect. As I say, it may be that that can be clarified in committee hearings on the bill.

That concern, I would point out to honourable senators, prompted an attempt in the House of Commons to amend the bill. So that you will have the benefit of knowing how the opposition proposed to deal with that problem, I will quote from the proceedings of the Commons, where it was moved by the Liberal critic, Mr. Foster, and supported by the New Democratic critic, that the portion of the amendment I have just read have added to it the words "railway car during the pool period", which ends the sentence. This is the sentence that is the operative part of the amendment:

The said sum shall reflect an equitable allocation of the costs incurred by the Board to maintain the country delivery points.

In other words, an attempt to narrow that broad discretion.

Honourable senators, as I said earlier, the rest of the legislation deals with changes which are necessary from time to time to keep an act current. They are well explained, and I do not think it is proper for me to say whether I am supportive of all of it. I would only question clause 8. I would have to await what is heard in our committee hearings, and, if there are good answers to the questions—some of which I have put here—then I will be supportive right down the line. If there are no good answers, then it may be that some criticisms will be directed to that particular clause of the bill.

Honourable senators, those are the only comments I have, other than, of course, to voice the hope that the mover will recommend that this be referred to the Agriculture Committee at the appropriate time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few comments in case I am not in attendance before the bill goes to the committee.

The explanation given by Senator Marshall was adequate for his position, but he failed to deal with one point that is probably more important than anything else in this bill, and that is that these producer cars give a grain producer an option. If he is a captive of any one of the grain companies, including the wheat pools, and he cannot make a satisfactory deal with the local operator or a local agent, he can order a car and ship it himself.

Sometimes that does not sound terribly important, but it becomes important when there is only one elevator or one company running all of the elevators at a delivery point. That, honourable senators, is the case in many places in Canada. You do not have any option. There is one company, and, in most cases, it is the wheat pools who own all of the elevators at a delivery point; so you have to deal with them. I happen to know that, because that is the case along the entire line where I live. If you do not make a satisfactory deal with the elevator for grain and other things, you are helpless, except that you can order a producer car and ship it to the Wheat Board without taking the unilateral decision of that elevator agent.

The wheat pools often attempt to indicate that they are there in the interests of their members. Most of the time, in my experience, their interest in the corporation of the wheat pool is far more important to them than is the welfare of their members. That is unfortunate, but it is true. Therefore, I support a great deal of this bill. I certainly support clause 8, which gives the government authority to make sure that there is an equitable distribution of costs.

Honourable senators, I know that many of these elevator companies—most of them the wheat pools—believe that, even if a producer uses a producer car, he somehow has an obligation to pay to the elevator companies some of the costs of maintaining the country's elevator system. Many of these companies make that argument and that is why they are so concerned about clause 8 of this bill.

Senator Marshall and Senator Hays, the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, have both indicated that they would like to send this bill to that committee so that witnesses can be heard. I want to say now that I would want from those witnesses some accounting of the actual costs to the railway companies and to the Wheat Board—costs that are involved in taking that producer car of grain from the railway siding on the prairies where it is loaded to the terminal elevator at the coast. I would like a clear accounting of those costs, not a bunch of inflated or complicated figures that take into account all the rest of the overhead costs of the elevator companies in maintaining their elevators and that sort of thing.

I want to say in conclusion, honourable senators, that, at the end of the day—an expression that seems to be quite popular these days—at the end of the consideration of this bill and at the end of the assignment of costs, let us make sure that there is an alternative for the producers, particularly at these one-company or one-cooperative delivery points, so that they are not captives of these companies and do not have to take what they dictate—and, believe me, they do that sometimes, and sometimes it is terribly unfair. This bill, if it is handled properly—and I am not sure that it will be—will go some distance towards doing justice in this area.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eileen Rossiter moved the second reading of Bill C-30, to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an act to amend the National Parks Act.

She said: Honourable senators, it is my pleasure to take this opportunity to speak in support of Bill C-30.

The national parks of this country are more than the sum of their trees and bears, picnic tables and wildflowers, the historic buildings, wilderness, and the visitors they attract. Our national parks express the unmistakable national heritage of Canada, our territorial reality as a people. They are the raw material from which we have shaped much of our national consciousness in the past, just as they enrich our lives today.

Our national parks impose difficult responsibilities—responsibilities for which Parliament is ultimately accountable. Each year some 19 million people visit our parks. Their perception of how their valued public possessions are managed and operated is of inestimable importance.

Our parks are a part of each Canadian's common heritage. As parliamentarians, we have an opportunity today to play an important role in deciding how the stewardship of this heritage can be most effectively enhanced.

The legislative mandate for this stewardship and protection of our national parks is the National Parks Act. With the exception of a few amendments in 1974, this legislation has not been significantly altered since it was enacted in 1930. During the past half century the attitude of Canadians towards their natural heritage has changed dramatically. The parks system is now widely recognized as a priceless national treasure that must be properly protected and carefully used.

The amendments proposed by the Minister of the Environment will strengthen the National Parks Act. They will provide the people responsible for the operation of our national heritage with the proper management tools for the job. The amendments will define appropriate limits to development within the parks, while providing mechanisms to ensure the preservation of those marvelous natural assets which attract many millions of visitors a year.

The legislation will get tough with poachers who prey upon the wildlife assets of the parks and who have been openly contemptuous of the current penalties. The theft of our wildlife heritage must be stopped. The current $500 maximum fine for poaching is one of the most glaring examples of why the National Parks Act must be brought into the 1980s.

The penalties now in force under the act amount to little more than licence fees for well-heeled trophy hunters. They spend thousands of dollars to bag animals we consider national treasures. Poachers find our national parks a highly tempting hunting ground. That temptation must be made untenable.

To do this, the Minister of the Environment is seeking to implement the stiffest poaching fine in the world. He has proposed—and I believe we should support him—a maximum fine of $150,000 and/or imprisonment for up to six months for the poaching of specific trophy and endangered species. He is further proposing to add stiff penalties for the poaching of other wildlife species to ensure that these national deterrents equate or exceed those of the provinces and territories.

Honourable senators, parks are more than pieces of land. They can play many roles. They may be an important element in our commitment to the integrity of Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. In that context, with the passage of this bill, Ellesmere Island National Park Reserve in the Northwest Territories will be established. The designation of Ellesmere as a national park reserve is primarily to protect this fragile area from environmental damage; yet it will reinforce Canada's sovereignty in the high Arctic.

Canada's national parks encompass more than 180,000 square kilometres. In considering the bill before us, we must take into account the fact that there is no such thing as a "typical park" in Canada.

What is the similarity between Nahanni's majestic canyons, the waterways of La Mauricie and the sand dunes of Prince Edward Island National Park? Canada's parks system offers everything from isolation to scenic parkways. What is right for one park could be and often is totally wrong for another. The challenge is to know the difference and regulate each according to its own special natural resources and priorities.

The government is asking for provisions within the National Parks Act to support the professional management of these lands, a professionalism developed through more than a century of experience and based on plans developed specifically for each park, with full public consultation.

Every park is different, so each requires its own approach. Some parks are and should remain almost inaccessible museums of our natural heritage. Others can and will have more visitors, without being damaged.

There are vast areas of national park lands that are extremely sensitive. Man's intrusion increases the potential for damage to this pristine natural heritage. To protect these areas, it has been park policy to zone them as "wilderness" and leave them in their natural state for the enjoyment of visitors. Development, except that needed for public safety and the protection of natural resources, is prohibited.

However, in this day and age, policy alone is not considered a strong enough protection. It is imperative that such policy be translated into legislation to ensure a stronger and continuing level of protection. In thinking about the range of our national parks, we are going to face difficult questions in the future. We must find ways to conserve the pristine beauty of these parks and, at the same time, to amuse, thrill and provide a sense of well-being for our people—especially our youth.

We must find new ways to keep up with increasing demands for service amidst the shrinkage of available funds. National parks are not a frill and not peripheral to Canadian experience—they are its very marrow.

The National Parks Act is the legislative umbrella under which Parliament exerts its control over these national treasures. The bill we are being asked to consider constitutes a complex package which has been several years in the making. Its recommendations have not been conceived in isolation. They are the result of years of dialogue and negotiation among federal ministers, provincial governments, special interest groups and, most importantly, the citizens of Canada. Among its key provisions is the authority to establish and manage yet a new category of national park, namely, the National Marine Parks.

Coming from an island province, I can particularly appreciate the need for this important step in preserving our marine heritage.

Honourable senators, the changes the government is seeking are essential if we are to continue to protect our national parks for present and future generations. Given the high level of interest across the country in the progress of these amendments, I ask your support in approving this bill as quickly as possible.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Kenny, debate adjourned.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray is not here today; he is in Newfoundland on government business. I shall be pleased to take any questions honourable senators wish to place with me.

FINANCE

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question could quite easily be handled, I am sure, by the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of his background in charge of finance in the outstanding province of Newfoundland, I wonder if he could inform honourable senators whether or not he is happy—in view of the exports to the United States from that province—with the relationship, as it now exists, between the Canadian dollar and the American dollar.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I certainly thank the honourable gentleman for his kind words. Whether I am happy or not is rather irrelevant, but I will certainly seek the information he has requested.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the new chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, but I suppose I will have to postpone it.

Senator Frith: The committee is now meeting.

Senator Flynn: They are meeting? Very good.

Senator Frith: You could ask him your question in the committee.

Senator Flynn: It would not have the same value, I am sure.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION TIBET

DALAI LAMA'S FIVE-POINT PEACE PLAN AND NEW INITIATIVE— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer. It is in reply to a question raised by Senator Frith on June 14 and 21, 1988, regarding Tibet—Dalai Lama's Five-Point Peace Plan.

Honourable senators, this is a rather lengthy reply. With the permission of the Senate, I ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The answer follows:)

As noted by Senator Murray on June 21 in setting out the government's position on Tibet, we regard the Dalai Lama as a senior world religious figure but do not recognize him as the temporal ruler of a Tibetan "state". In view of the government's position that Tibet is an autonomous region of the People's Republic of China, as established in the Chinese constitution, it would therefore be inappropriate for the government to take a position on proposals put forward by the Dalai Lama which impinge upon questions of Chinese sovereignty.

While it is true that a resolution expressing general support for the Dalai Lama's proposals was attached to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act passed by the U.S. Congress last year, the U.S. administration explicitly distanced itself from this action. In fact, the administration indicated it would veto the resolution if it were presented as a separate bill, as the sponsors originally intended. The U.S. government's stated position is similar to that of the Canadian government. Nevertheless, the Congressional action has become a substantive irritant in Sino-U.S.A. relations.

The government of the Federal Republic of Germany also distanced itself from a similar resolution voted by the German Bundestag. The vote taken by the European Parliament in Strasbourg has no constraining effect on institutions of the European Economic Community nor on any of the European partner countries.

The government remains concerned about the human rights situation in Tibet and as recently as July 3 once again drew these concerns to the attention of the Chinese authorities at a senior level during formal political consultation.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-132, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MESSAGE FROM COMMONS REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody:

That the Message from the House of Commons concerning the Bill C-103, An Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance for consideration.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before I move into the content of my speech I should like to say that we are prepared to pass this motion to send the message to the National Finance Committee today.

The message from the House of Commons to the Senate, on motion of Senator Murray and now to be sent to the National Finance Committee, cannot be accepted as a serious effort by the government to deal with the issues raised by Bill C-103. It shows all the hasty and ill-considered preparation that was obviously involved in putting it on the Commons notice paper within 24 hours of receiving the message from the Senate.

The message from the House of Commons can be attacked and questioned from two angles: first, the assertion that “grants of aid and supplies” are set out in Bill C-103; second, the assertion that the Senate has “altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications” of the yet to be identified “grants of aid and supplies”. What we have are assertions and assertions alone—no proof, no identification of the relevant clauses of Bill C-103 in which these grants of aid and supplies are allegedly found. The source of these assertions in the motion, the Minister of State (Treasury Board), has been either unwilling or unable—probably the latter—to back up the message by even citing the specific clauses of Bill C-103 containing grants of aid and supplies, let alone by listing the alterations made by the Senate to the “ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications” of these grants of aid.

The hearings of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, to which is being referred the message, will provide an opportunity to hear testimony from the Minister of State (Treasury Board) on the factual evidence on these points contained in the hitherto unsupported motion.

● (1410)

These Senate misdemeanours have all been committed “contrary to Standing Order 87”, we are further advised by the Minister of State and by the message.

I shall return to that point in some detail later, but it should be obvious to all that the Standing Orders of the House of Commons do not establish the powers of the Senate. The latter come from the Constitution and cannot be added to, or subtracted from, by the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Let me say at this point that I am not in any way attempting, in my speech, to limit or reduce the existing powers of the House of Commons; what I will be doing is underlining the necessity of asserting the traditional powers of the Canadian Senate.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the message from the House of Commons is not based on the ruling of the Speaker of the House of Commons, which was given three days after the message of Mr. Lewis was put on the notice paper. In fact, the Speaker of the House of Commons did not pronounce on the question raised in the motion and message of the government, namely, the financial privileges of the respective houses.

I quote from Mr. Speaker Fraser’s ruling:

The Speaker of the House of Commons by tradition does not rule on constitutional matters.

—and he explains this statement by saying:

It is not for me to decide whether the Senate has the constitutional power to do what it has done with Bill C-103.

I should note that the Speaker of the Senate, in his ruling of June 7, 1988, showed no such restraint, and found that splitting Bill C-103 in the Senate “would be in contravention of Section 53 of the Constitution Act, 1867”.

Mr. Speaker Fraser did find a breach of privilege in that the Senate message did not seek the concurrence of the House of Commons in dividing Bill C-103. We all know how the deletion of the request for concurrence in our message came about. We are all responsible for it. Senator Flynn moved that the part of the message requesting concurrence be deleted. He explained by saying:

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

We should inform the House of Commons that that is what we have done, but that we do not necessarily ask for concurrence.

Senator Frith replied:

I think we should ask for concurrence, but, if the government does not want us to, that is fine.

Of course, Senator Flynn, with Senator Doody's concurrence, with my concurrence and with the concurrence of all of us, deleted the request for concurrence which was contained in the original message. I do not think any of us can fail to accept our responsibility jointly for removing the request for concurrence which had been in the message to the House of Commons as originally read by our Speaker in his Chair.

Honourable senators, it is worth reading two paragraphs from Mr. Speaker Fraser's comments because two important conclusions flow from them. I quote his observations as follows:

A Canadian precedent does exist for a consolidation of two Commons Bills into a single legislative measure by the Senate. That took place on June 11, 1941, with a message from their Honours, from the Senate, asking for the concurrence of this House. The Commons agreed with the Senate proposal, that is, a proposal to take two Bills from this place and put them into one Bill. The Commons agreed with the Senate proposal waiving its traditional privilege, and a single Bill was eventually given Royal Assent. I underline that that was the act of this House in waiving its tradition of privilege and accepting the invitation of the Senate to put two Bills together.

Then Mr. Speaker Fraser went on to state:

If it is admitted that the Senate can consolidate two Bills, why then can it not divide one Bill into two or more legislative measures? The answer is at least in part in the message. In the 1941 case just alluded to the Senate specifically sought the concurrence of the House for its action. Apparently it was the disposition of this place to accept it. In the message received last Friday relating to Bill C-103, the Senate does not seek the Commons' concurrence in the division of the Bill, it simply informs this House that it has done so, and returns half of a Bill.

So we did sin in not seeking the concurrence of the House of Commons, but I would call that a venial sin.

Senator Flynn: You would rather have sinned a little than not have sinned at all!

Senator MacEachen: It seems to me, as I said earlier, two conclusions flow from Mr. Speaker Fraser's ruling which are of interest to us in examining the fall-out, procedurally and constitutionally, from a very simple, on its face, motion to divide a bill.

The first conclusion is that in the future the Senate need not be inhibited on those rare occasions where circumstances justify its dividing a Commons bill, provided the proper request for concurrence is made. In fact, that defect could be remedied in this case by a further message in correct form to the House of Commons. We know, of course, such an effort would be futile, because the objections of the government were not based on the form of the message.

The second conclusion that I draw is that the precedent of 1941, cited by the Speaker, whereby the Senate consolidated two House of Commons bills into one, did not encounter the objection that the consolidated bill had originated in the Senate, as was contained in the ruling of our Speaker in the case of dividing Bill C-103 into two bills.

Of course, in my view, that same reasoning should apply in both cases. In fact, the consolidated bill—which was not regarded as having originated in the Senate simply because it had been united in the Senate—was clearly a money bill, and that is a helpful illumination of procedure in the Canadian Senate.

Before dealing more generally with these issues I wish to refer to the tendency to accept, as it were, blindly by an act of faith, that once a financial recommendation of Her Excellency is attached to a bill, such attachment automatically transforms the bill into a money bill, regardless of its contents.

The attachment of a financial recommendation to a bill is not conclusive proof at all that it is a money bill. The test must be whether it is a bill "for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue". If it meets that test, it is a money bill and, accordingly, must, in conformity with section 54 of the British North America Act, be recommended by Her Excellency. But this test of content has not been applied to Bill C-103—no one, in adjudicating upon that bill, has applied it. The reverse test was applied.

Honourable senators, here are two examples of the performance of this act of faith. In reference to Bill C-103, Mr. Speaker Fraser said:

There is a requisite that in a Bill that is going to call upon the expenditure of funds, a financial recommendation of Her Excellency the Governor General is necessary. So this Bill is in a very real sense a financial Bill.

Mr. Speaker Charbonneau said:

Bill C-103 is a government bill and a money bill, having been recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General.

The assumption is that because it bears a royal recommendation it is, therefore, a money bill. That is not an entirely satisfactory approach.

Senator Flynn: It is beside the point, anyway.

Senator MacEachen: It is the point. If it were possible simply to produce a royal recommendation and, therefore, create a money bill, one would not even have to look at the contents of the bill. The contents of the bill dictate whether it is a financial bill. If it is a money or financial bill, then a royal recommendation is necessary—not the reverse.

The reasoning in this case has been to say, "Here is a royal recommendation; therefore, it is a money bill." Has anyone stopped to ask who affixes the royal recommendation? Who makes the judgment and what criteria are applied in deciding that a royal recommendation is to be affixed? Are the criteria generally understood or generally accepted? Maybe somebody could enlighten me. This is certainly not a public process. It is a very obscure decision-making process, conducted privately, and I think we are entitled to know from somebody, rather than to act on faith, the reasons why Bill C-103 is a money bill. We have not been told, as we should have been, which clauses of the bill appropriate public money. Please tell me, I ask those authorities that have made this decision, which clauses appropriate public funds?

Honourable senators, the situation becomes less clear if one puts side by side the ruling of Mr. Speaker Fraser and the ruling of Mr. Speaker Charbonneau. Mr. Speaker Fraser refused to make a constitutional judgment while Mr. Speaker Charbonneau did make such a judgment in the words I have read. Mr. Speaker Fraser did not say whether the financial privileges of the House of Commons had been breached, because such a conclusion would be a constitutional judgment, which, in his opinion, is not customary for the Speaker of the House of Commons to make. Mr. Speaker Charbonneau did rule, by implication, if not directly, that the motion made by Senator Graham breached the financial privileges of the House of Commons. We have a rather ironic situation here in that the Speaker of our chamber found that we had breached, in the motion, the financial privileges of the House of Commons—a finding the Speaker of the House of Commons did not wish to come to.

In its simplest form, the question comes down to this: Is Bill C-103 a money bill? If it is, the further question must be addressed: Does this fact render it immune from modification by the Senate? That is the import of the message which we have received from the House of Commons.

I have already argued that the presence of a royal recommendation or a financial recommendation does not necessarily a money bill make. It is not conclusive proof that it is a money bill.

There is another point that must be made. Bill C-103 does not provide general funding for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. That funding is provided for in the Estimates. Even Donald McPhail, the president of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, in the National Finance Committee, testified that there were no dollars for the agency in Bill C-103.

When one examines Bill C-103, one finds the following provisions that deal with the payment of moneys:

Clause 5(4): "reasonable travel and living expenses" for the members of the advisory boards that "may" be established. The advisory boards, I say parenthetically, have been established and, presumably, their expenses—travel and living—are being paid by funds provided through the Estimates.

Clause 11(4): remuneration for the president of ACOA. He is being paid now—he told us so—by funds provided for in the Estimates.

[Senator MacEachen.]

Clause 18(7): remuneration and expenses for the members of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency board.

Clause 31(1): a salary for the vice-president and fees for the board of directors of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

Clause 31(2): travel and living expenses for ECBC directors.

Clause 32(2): salaries for the employees of ECBC.

There is, of course, clause 57, which, under the Salaries Act, provides for the remuneration of the minister responsible.

In this bill we have authorization for salaries, remuneration and expenses of the president, vice-president, employees, directors and the minister. Apparently, for this reason the bill was introduced with a royal recommendation. In consequence, His Honour, the Speaker in the other place, referred to the bill as a "money bill" or a "financial bill". If this is a money bill, it is only because the loosest definition has been applied to the term, because the bill does not appropriate a single dollar of the public revenue.

Take a look at the Nova Scotia offshore bill; take a look at the Bretton Woods bill. In those bills the appropriations are distinctly listed. Not so here. I am quite puzzled that Bill C-103, if it is a money bill, has been treated so differently from the treatment given to the Nova Scotia offshore bill and the Bretton Woods bill, where the appropriations are identified in the columns.

If one were to accept the idea, upon proof, that Bill C-103 is a money bill, how have we, as I have already asked, "altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies" by dividing the bill?

We passed, without change, Part I of the bill and held over Part II for further consideration. As far as ACOA is concerned, the minister, president, advisory board members and ACOA directors will still get all their money. They will get it, of course, provided that Parliament has already supplied money to the Crown, or in the future supplies money for this purpose. We have not added any conditions, limitations or qualifications, and yet that is exactly what the motion accuses us of doing. The message claims that these conditions and limitations relate to "the grants of aid and supplies set out in the bill". Are we now to learn that, in addition to being a money bill and a financial bill, Bill C-103 is also a supply bill?

● (1430)

The recommendation contained in the first reading copy of Bill C-103 states:

Her Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons the appropriation of public revenue under the circumstances, in the manner and for the purposes set out . . .

We have not changed the circumstances, the manner or the purposes. That is a fact.

The message from the House of Commons, in the name of the Minister of State (Treasury Board), is not based on any fact. It has not been backed up in the speech made by the minister in the House of Commons saying, "These are the grants in aid and supplies that are in the bill, and here are the sections. This is where the Senate has changed them"—according to the minister, "contrary to Standing Order 87," which, not only by implication but also by direct assertion, is to govern the powers of the Canadian Senate.

Maybe at this point I should go a bit further into the question of money bills. It might be interesting to take a look at British parliamentary law and practice on money bills, although it cannot be taken as a complete guide for the Parliament of Canada. That is so because of two important reasons.

First, in 1867 it was understood that the new Dominion was to be a federal union and that one of the chief tasks of the Senate was to protect the smaller provinces against both unfair taxation and unfair spending by a government with a large majority in the House of Commons.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Second, in 1911 the United Kingdom Parliament introduced a suspensive veto for both money bills and other bills. This was to reduce the power of the peerage. The provisions of that act do not apply to Canada.

The constitutional powers of the House of Lords are smaller than those of the Senate of Canada. Nevertheless, we would find it highly instructive to examine British law and practice governing what are called "money bills", because what is now being claimed by the Canadian House of Commons goes far beyond what is claimed by the British House of Commons.

British parliamentarians use the term "money bills" in two ways: (a) for the purposes of the Parliament Act, and (b) in making historic claims of privilege relating to what are called "aids and supplies".

Let us look at the definition of a "money bill" for the purposes of the Parliament Act.

According to Erskine May's summary, the Parliament Act defines a money bill as a public bill which contains only provisions dealing with taxation, appropriation, loans and subordinate matters incidental to those subjects—only provisions dealing with taxation, appropriation and loans!

Using that definition, is Bill C-103 a money bill? Clearly, it does not deal with taxation. Does it, for any purpose, impose charges on the Consolidated Revenue Fund or on any money provided by Parliament? If so, does it deal only with such matters? The answer to all of these questions is "no." The Speaker of the British House of Commons would have had no problem. Clearly, Bill C-103 is not a money bill.

We now come to the restrictions on the House of Lords with regard to money bills arising from the privileges of the House of Commons respecting aids and supplies. This refers to bills that tax and bills that appropriate revenue from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

The British Commons claims that the House of Lords may not introduce or amend such bills. However, aids and supplies money bills must not contain provisions for other purposes. Erskine May, seventeenth edition, at page 836, states:

In former times, the Commons abused their right to grant supplies without interference from the Lords, by tacking to supply bills provisions which, in a bill that the Lords had no right to amend, must either have been accepted by them unconsidered, or have caused the rejection of a measure necessary for the public service. This practice infringed the privileges of the Lords, no less than their interference in matters of supply infringes the privileges of the Commons; it has been met by the Lords by standing order No. 45, embodying a resolution:

The annexing of any clause or clauses to a bill of aid or supply, the matter of which is foreign to and different from the matter of the said bill of aid or supply, is unparliamentary, and tends to the destruction of constitutional government.

Erskine May then goes on to say:

On no recent occasion have clauses been irregularly tacked to bills of supply:—

I submit, honourable senators, that Bill C-103 is not a taxation bill; neither is it an appropriation bill. However, if it were—if it did grant aid or supply, as claimed by the message of the House of Commons, it is a bill in respect of which the Commons cannot claim privilege, because the bill contains provisions which neither tax nor appropriate.

As I mentioned earlier, the Minister of State in his message claims that the Senate has contravened Standing Order 87 of the House of Commons.

In his ruling of July 11, 1988, Mr. Speaker Fraser properly emphasized the importance the House attaches to its Standing Order 87. This Standing Order reads:

All aids and supplies granted to the sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

The Senate has never, to my knowledge—at least not from my research—accepted this particular assertion of privilege by the House of Commons.

In his comments the Speaker of the House of Commons cited Standing Order 87 as authority for the proposition that "the Senate is somewhat limited in its review of money bills". It is indeed true that we are somewhat limited in our treatment of such bills, but so is the House of Commons limited. The question is: Where are the limits on the Senate? The Senate has never claimed that it could increase the amount to be given to the Crown for any specified purpose by an appropriation bill, but this does not mean that it has ever concurred in Standing Order 87.

I could refer to some Canadian authorities on this point, but I will confine myself to a quotation from the 1987 edition of "The Government of Canada" by R.M. Dawson and Norman Ward on the question of Standing Order 87, which has been referred to as the guiding principle in the message we have received from the House of Commons. The authors, who are well known and authoritative—and probably without any strong bias in favour of the Senate—state as follows:

● (1440)

It is a fair statement that almost the only attention the Senate has given to this grand assertion is to ignore it. On the theoretical side the Senate has argued that if the constitution was intended to limit the Senate's power over money bills once initiated, it would say so. The Senate has insisted further that it could not discharge its functions as a guardian of provincial or regional rights if it had no power over money bills. What is more important is that the Senate has repeatedly amended bills that contained money clauses, and also bills that dealt exclusively with finance, including income tax bills. The Commons has accepted Senate amendments to money bills, usually adding a futile claim —the words are the author's; not mine—

that its acquiescence must not be considered a precedent. The Senate could, if practice is any guide, amend a money bill out of all recognition, so that in effect the bill was rejected.

Honourable senators, that passage appears at page 165.

I then came upon a document which was produced by the Senate itself in 1918. It was given to me by Senator Stewart and I found it very interesting, because in 1918 the Senate appointed a special committee to determine "The Rights of the Senate in Matters of Financial Legislation". Its conclusions are quite in accordance with the quotation I have read. The appointment of the special committee was made in 1918; it reported the same year. It is a report known as the Ross Report, after its chairman, Senator W.B. Ross—no doubt a man of financial probity, bearing a name like that!

This committee concluded, and I quote:

That the Senate of Canada has and always had since it was created, the power to amend Bills originating in the Commons appropriating any part of the revenue or imposing a tax by reducing the amounts therein, but has not the right to increase the same without the consent of the Crown.

That is the conclusion of the Senate committee on the financial privileges of the Senate, which is supported by contemporary authors—all contrary to the message we have received from the House of Commons.

The same Ross Report goes on to explain "that rule 78 [now No. 87] of the House of Commons of Canada claiming for that body powers and privileges in connection with Money Bills identical with those of the Imperial House of Commons is unwarranted under the provisions of the British North America Act."

The report then goes on to say:

The House of Commons cannot by passing Rules add to its powers or diminish those of the Senate. Rule 78 of the House of Commons is quite outside of the powers of that House.

So it is not a new issue we are faced with, honourable senators. The question is whether we will be as resolute in asserting the privileges of the Senate as were our predecessors in earlier years. So though, in the words of the Speaker in the other place, "the House of Commons has always considered Standing Order 87 . . . as setting out the special relationship between the . . . House of Commons and the Sovereign," the inescapable fact of the matter is that the Senate consistently rejected this unilateral declaration.

Consequently, as a matter of principle, and as a member of this chamber interested in maintaining the privileges of the chamber, I cannot find favour with that part of the message from the House of Commons declaring:

The Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87 . . .

If we agreed to that portion of the message, we would appear to be recognizing the paramountcy of Standing Order 87 even over the Constitution of Canada.

I applaud the Speaker and members of the House of Commons for asserting whatever privileges they think they can assert. However, I cannot agree to the imposition of their perceived privileges on to the members of this chamber. They cannot, by a House of Commons motion, strip the Senate of its constitutional right to participate in the legislative process, which includes consideration of money bills, for the benefit of the people in the provinces. The Senate, honourable senators, has never accepted this motion; it has never accepted the limitations contained in this motion and has never accepted any limitations beyond those which I have already mentioned.

When concluding his remarks on our message to the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker Fraser placed great emphasis on the privileges of that chamber:

As Speaker of the House of Commons of Canada I must uphold the privileges of this place at all times, and I must also advocate them privately, publicly, and with vigor.

I say "amen" to that, because it is correct; let them uphold their privileges, but who is to uphold the privileges of the Senate? Who is to advocate at all times, privately, publicly and with vigor, the privileges of the Senate? The senators, I hope. I hope even Senator Baroote will join in supporting the traditional privileges and purposes of the Senate, and not for a momentary consideration accept the conclusions that are contained in the motion from the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, that is the situation as I see it. It is obviously a very important matter, because there have been procedural and constitutional issues flowing from the act we took in dividing the bill. The issues that have been raised present an opportunity to explore these matters further in the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, and probably for that committee to do what Senator Ross and his committee did in 1918: namely, to reassert the powers of the Senate accorded to it by the Constitution of Canada and exercised throughout the history of the Senate. This is an opportunity for the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to examine and to lay down just what are the criteria of money bills. In other words, is the simple act of tacking a royal recommendation on to a bill conclusive proof that it is a money bill? I do not think so. I had never expected, when we made this simple, clean-cut effort to divide the bill, that it would give rise to such a plethora of constitutional and procedural questions.

I think it is good that it prompted these questions, because it will give us an opportunity to address some of the fundamental aspects of the relationship between the House of Commons and the Senate at a time when the Senate is exhibiting new vigour in the legislative process.

● (1450)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Everett: Reviewing the Parliamentary Act of the United Kingdom, I gather that the word "only" is operative. That is, the bill must deal with appropriations or taxation only. Am I correct?

Senator MacEachen: That is my understanding of the summary of the Parliament Act given by Erskine May. It defines a money bill as one containing only appropriations and taxes and states that the practice of tacking-on is objectionable and that the purity of a money bill has to be maintained. That is my understanding.

Senator Everett: I have a supplementary question for the honourable senator. The honourable senator mentioned legislation involving the Hibernia offshore project. Whereas it might be considered a money bill under Canadian jurisprudence, it would not be considered a money bill under the Parliamentary Act of the United Kingdom because it, presumably, deals with matters other than just taxation and appropriation.

Senator MacEachen: If I have understood Erskine May's definition of a money bill, then, for a bill dealing with the Hibernia project to be a money bill under British terms, it would have to deal exclusively with appropriations. I have not pushed that argument beyond saying that, in the case of the bill with regard to the project offshore Nova Scotia, the drafters listed in columns the appropriations to demonstrate that there was an appropriation of public revenue.

Senator Everett: I was merely trying to get clear in my mind that, if that bill were a bill of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, it would fail because it is not a money bill under their definition.

Senator MacEachen: That is right.

Senator Everett: Thank you.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I think the Senate owes a word of thanks to Senator MacEachen for this very interesting lecture on the rights and privileges of the Senate with respect to money bills.

It is useful, from time to time, to recall certain principles that should guide us in this respect. Unfortunately, I cannot review today every single argument and comment made by Senator MacEachen.

I simply want to get down to the bare bones of the problem at issue. We are talking about referring the terms of the message received from the House of Commons to the Committee on National Finance. The Committee is not in any way bound by the Commons message. It has no obligation to agree with its reasons. It simply has to decide whether or not to agree with the opinion of the House of Commons that the Senate should not have split Bill C-103.

The questions to be answered are first, whether Bill C-103 is a money bill, and second, what the definition is of a money bill. Senator MacEachen referred to the situation in Great Britain. The problem as I studied it at the time was, if I am not mistaken, that the Lords objected to the addition to appropriation bills of provisions that were not of a financial nature, for the purpose of withdrawing such bills from their scrutiny.

We in this Chamber have discussed the same issue many times, not from the same perspective but, simply, the inclusion of ordinary legislation within an appropriation bill.

Honourable senators will remember the so-called dollar items that were often amendments to legislation that was not necessarily of a financial nature. In this way, the amendments could be put through as part of an appropriation bill.

It is against this background that British parliamentary procedure has evolved. In this country, I believe I can safely say we have always defined a money bill as a bill that has financial implications. A bill to levy taxes has always been considered a money bill. A bill that authorizes expenditures, even if those expenditures must be more specifically authorized in an appropriation bill, has always been considered a money bill.

Bill C-103 contains a number of financial provisions, and Senator MacEachen mentioned a few. I don't think it is necessary to repeat these in detail, but I would like to mention sections 35, 36 and 37 which are listed under the heading: Financial provisions. We see here everything that can be done under these provisions.

To deal with the problem, in Westminster it was decided that a money bill was a bill declared as such by the Speaker. The Speaker has the last word, but it is still a matter of opinion, and he may be wrong.

Similarly, the Speaker of the House of Commons in our Parliament decided that what we had before us as Bill C-103 was a money bill. Here, the decision is debatable. As he said, although he did not want to judge the issue from the constitutional point of view, he could still judge at the factual level. Are these financial provisions, yes or no? That was the basis on which Mr. Speaker Fraser made his decision.

Senator MacEachen referred to the amendment we made to the message addressed to the House of Commons, deleting our request to the House for concurrence. Personally, my interpretation of the remarks of the Speaker of the House of Commons is that if we want to split a money bill, we must ask the consent or concurrence of the House of Commons before doing so. In fact, it was Senator MacEachen who forced the Senate to do this, by ordering the committee to split the bill. It was an order. It was done, the committee did so. The committee referred only part of the bill back to the Senate. The committee said: Send a message to the House of Commons to the effect that we have split the bill and are sending only half of the bill, reserving the right to send the other half later on.

That is just what I did not agree with, that we ask the House of Commons to concur in this decision because we had not asked for its consent beforehand. If we had asked for its consent previously and the House had said, "Yes, all right, go ahead and divide it", that would have been fine. But it was a money bill and involved Her Excellency's recommendation to Parliament to do a certain thing as specified in the bill, which was in two parts. The condition was that both parts be there for the recommendation to receive Parliament's approval. Both parts had to be there. The Senate had to ask before acting as it did. If we had asked the House of Commons then, perhaps it would have agreed. But to do so afterwards may have been rather insolent, not impolite, as Senator Frith suggested.

In any event, I think that we have discussed some very interesting subjects. The specific problem that we have to solve now is whether we further delay passage of Bill C-103 as a whole or whether we continue to raise arguments on our authority in bills like this one. We can continue discussing it. But it is much more urgent to have the National Finance Committee decide to refer the bill as a whole to us so that it can receive Royal Assent as soon as possible.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question. Did I understand you correctly, Senator Flynn, as saying that in this case the Speaker of the House of Commons decided it could be considered a money bill?

Senator Flynn: That is what Senator MacEachen said too.

Senator Molgat: Do you agree that the Speaker of the House of Commons has this right in our Canadian system, according to our rules, practice or custom?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, no. I clearly stated that the Speaker in Westminster has this power. I admitted that here, he does not have this power.

Since I have the opportunity, I would like to mention Standing Order 87 of the House of Commons. In this regard, I agree with Senator MacEachen. The mere fact that the House of Commons says something does not change the Constitution.

The problem now is to settle the matter of Bill C-103 rather than see whether we really had the right to proceed as we did.

Motion agreed to and message from House of Commons referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

[Senator Flynn.]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL

THIRD READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-72, respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada.

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, as chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on Bill C-72, respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, it gives me pleasure to report Bill C-72 without amendment.

At a time when the press and the government are pointing to the number of bills piling up awaiting treatment by the Senate, I wish to point out that Bill C-72 has been before this house for less than a month whereas it took those in charge of the other place about a year to adopt it in its present form. So much for the relative dilatoriness of the Senate.

During the debate on second reading I outlined my reasons for supporting the basic principles and approach of this bill toward furthering the equality of the two official languages and the protection of linguistic minorities. I supported it because it will have a quasi-constitutional impact due to its primacy over other legislation, because of its executory nature, its incorporation of the parliamentary resolution of 1973, and because of its wording, which is more explicit than that of the 1969 act. It may even have the effect of counterbalancing any provincial legislation that affects the language rights of Canadians. I hope that is so. It also provides for parliamentary oversight by a committee to review the application of the act, its regulations and directives and the implementation of the reports of the Commissioner of Official Languages, the President of the Treasury Board and the Secretary of State.

Notwithstanding these and other safeguards, I still have a number of doubts about the determination of this government to apply the measures provided for by the bill as fully in the province of Quebec as in the rest of the country. Clauses 41 and 42 set out government policy and commitments. Clause 41 states:

The Government of Canada is committed to

(a) enhancing the vitality of the English and French linguistic minority communities in Canada and supporting and assisting their development; and

(b) fostering the full recognition and use of both English and French in Canadian society.

Clause 42 reads as follows:

The Secretary of State of Canada, in consultation with other Ministers of the Crown, shall encourage and promote a coordinated approach to the implementation by federal institutions of the commitments set out in section 41.

Clause 43 sets out in more specific terms the mandate of the Secretary of State to advance the equality of status and use of French and English in Canadian society. Among other things, he is empowered to take measures to do the following:

(a) enhance the vitality of the English and French linguistic minority communities in Canada and support and assist their development;

(d) encourage and assist provincial governments to support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities generally and, in particular, to offer provincial and municipal services in both English and French and to provide opportunities for members of English or French linguistic minority communities to be educated in their own language;

(f) encourage and cooperate with the business community, labour organizations, voluntary organizations and other organizations or institutions to provide services in both English and French and to foster the recognition and use of those languages;

and

(g) encourage and assist organizations and institutions to project the bilingual character of Canada in their activities in Canada or elsewhere;

Giving full effect to these commitments is of the utmost importance to the French language minorities outside Quebec as well as to the English-speaking minority of Quebec.

Since the enactment of Bill 101 in 1976 Canadians have been deprived of their fundamental rights as they relate to language of use. Indeed, the Official Languages Act of 1969 was even compromised at its outset by Bill C-22. You will recall the outrage of our former Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, with these attempts by Quebec to thwart the spirit and concept of the official languages in Canada.

It seems incredible that the recent bulwarks for the defence of the English language in Canada have surfaced in Parliament as they now sense the jeopardy in areas outside Quebec. These so-called "dinosaurs" are virtually unknown to us in the Joint Committee on Official Languages. Certainly, in my eight years on this project, their presence and participation would have served to avert many of the ill feelings now emerging from across the country.

Honourable senators, as an English-speaking senator from Quebec, I resent that, after all these years of combatting Bill 101 by myself, these "dinosaurs" now refer to it because it affects them in some way or another. I now ask: "Where have they been?"

In the meantime, honourable senators, this group from within the Tory caucus has attempted to use the Senate of Canada for the purposes of thwarting due legislative process by circulating a letter, dated July 19, in which we received suggested amendments that would serve to stall passage of this bill.

I am sure I have the agreement of all sides of this Senate to ignore the source and the substance of that request.

• (1510)

Much has been said by Senator Murray—and I wish he were here today—about the three institutions of higher learning with university status which were originally privately-founded and funded under a system alien to the education framework of Quebec. The Royal Society for the Advancement of Learning was conceived by James McGill in 1811, and it has served Quebec and the nation extremely well since then. Statesmen of both language groups have cherished its inheritance. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was one of its law graduates, named class valedictorian, and he freely delivered his speech in French. Currently the student body is 50.1 per cent English. It must be noted that the Chancellor is now Mr. Jean de Grandpré. McGill is but one example of the anglophone contribution to the life of all Canadians in Quebec.

Quebec was indeed well-served by these institutions. Large-scale subsidization began only in 1960 when Quebec created a Ministry of Education instead of the Council of 21 Bishops. The 800,000 or so non-francophones, thanks to their own initiatives and resources, have also been served very well. Why has this heritage created such a grudge when it was there for all to enjoy, including the world standard teaching hospitals which were sponsored by these universities and which served the entire community?

Fellow senators, was Senator Murray in his speech of April 21 suggesting that these universities and institutions be cut off from statutory grants, which, incidentally, are being constantly diminished? Perhaps the answer to that will come with his definition of who is included, or otherwise, in the "distinct society".

With the consistent support of all three political parties, the federal government has significantly improved the participation of francophones at all levels of the federal public service over the past 20 years. However, anglophone participation in the federal public service in Quebec has gone into a steep decline. In his most recent annual report, the Commissioner of Official Languages characterized the level of anglophone participation as "intolerable" and potentially "irreversible" unless energetic action is taken. Even though more than 10 per cent of the Quebec population had English as their mother tongue, anglophone participation had fallen from 12.6 per cent in 1976 to 5.5 per cent by mid-1987. In the administrative support and operational categories, representing more than half of the 31,000 federal public servants in Quebec, anglophones constitute only 3.2 per cent of staff. Anglophone participation rates in the provincial public service are even lower. They are less than 1 per cent.

Despite this, Mr. Gil Rémillard, Quebec's Minister of International Relations and minister responsible for Canadian Intergovernmental Affairs, seems to reject the federal commitment outlined above. Speaking in the Quebec National Assembly, he referred to a meeting he had recently with Mr. Bouchard, the Secretary of State. I quote:

I met yesterday with the Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard. I gave him a letter making two points. The first was that jurisdiction over language matters is in our hands and there is no question of our ceding that principle: if you, the federal government, use C-72 to meddle with provincial jurisdiction over language, we will quite simply take the issue to the courts. There is no sign that the federal government intends to use the bill for this purpose.

In his appearance before the special committee, Mr. Bouchard assured us that the legislation would apply as much to Quebec as it would across the country. He disagreed with Minister Rémillard on the subject of exclusive jurisdiction and agreed that the federal government is invested with national and general responsibility for protecting and promoting minorities in the two official languages.

Under subparagraphs (f) and (g), Mr. Bouchard would try to negotiate a framework agreement to put into perspective the kind of intervention the federal government will make. I quote Mr. Bouchard:

Yes, it will be a general policy of my department to try to negotiate with all provinces something that would be more specific to their needs before going blindly all over Canada. I said, "We have to faire preuve de discernement." I said yes, but if a provincial government proved to be unreasonable and intolerant in those discussions, then we would act alone.

At the same time there was no intention to modify radically what the federal government was already doing in these areas.

Mr. Bouchard told the committee that he had not yet answered the letter sent him by Gil Rémillard, which stated that Quebec had primacy over language matters. He agreed that when a reply is drafted copies of it will be available to the Joint Committee on Official Languages, which I am sure will do its best to hold him to his commitments.

While Mr. Bouchard's appearance before the special committee did not fully allay my fears about his willingness to stand up to Mr. Rémillard, those doubts deal more with the implementation of the legislation than with the legislation itself.

I should like to read clause 87(2) of Bill C-72, which states:

Where, within twenty-five sitting days after a proposed regulation is laid before either House of Parliament under subsection (1), a motion for the consideration of that House to the effect that the proposed regulation not be approved, signed by no fewer than fifteen Senators or thirty Members of the House of Commons, as the case may be, is filed with the Speaker of that House, the Speaker shall, within five sitting days after the filing of the motion, without debate or amendment, put every question necessary for the disposition of the motion.

The proposed regulation may not be made.

With that, we have some protection in Bill C-72, and we have the ongoing work of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, and we will be able to keep a close watch on the Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, and how he will implement Bill C-72 across the whole of Canada.

For that reason I can recommend that Bill C-72 be adopted.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer, seconded by the Honourable Senator Cochrane, for the second reading of the Bill C-110, An Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Bill C-110 gives effect to the decision in principle, announced in the budget of May 1985, to amalgamate the Canadian Import Tribunal, the Tariff Board and the Textile and Clothing Board. It is said to be part of an effort to rationalize and streamline federal institutions and practices. That sounds familiar.

Senator Flynn: You have heard that before!

Senator MacEachen: That objective is commendable. The time that has elapsed since the date of the announcement is not encouraging evidence of the government's streamlining efficiency, and we must therefore examine the result of the decision very carefully. That may be helped by comparing the structure and jurisdiction of the proposed tribunal with that of the existing agencies, which, for the many years of their existence, have served the trade needs of the country very well.

It has not been suggested by anyone that the total complement of 15 members of the present boards are underemployed or that the numbers of their staffs are surplus to their needs. Under this proposed legislation, the total number of members is reduced to nine, in spite of a projected increase in workload as a result of the new provision for direct access to the tribunal by domestic producers with complaints of injury from imported goods.

This reduction in manpower also overlooks the constant increase in the number of appeals from Revenue Canada decisions and the expected further increase resulting from the recent adoption of the harmonized system of Customs classification. It is my understanding that there is now a significant backlog of cases before the Tariff Board.

It may be argued that the proposed transfer of many of the functions of the Textile and Clothing Board to government departments will result in a decrease in the total workload. But is that either desirable or in the interest of the textile and apparel industries, which are such important components of the industrial base of several provinces, including my own? The apparel industry employs some 120,000 Canadians. It had shipments in 1986 amounting to about $6.2 billion.

The Textile and Clothing Board was established in 1971 to implement the textile policy announced in the previous year, which proposed the establishment of a board that, among other things, would make non-appealable injury determination through non-adversarial proceedings

and

recommend to the government, in the light of all circumstances, including manpower and regional factors, appropriate measures of special protection and their duration

The Canadian Apparel Manufacturers, when they appeared before the House of Commons legislative committee, stated that the Textile and Clothing Board works well, "... provides excellent and essential data, impartial and creative recommendations, and a significant knowledge of the industry and its concerns." The manufacturers went on to observe that, notwithstanding the excellent work of the board:

In recent years, our industry has noticed that the government has not been listening to the Board and has not heeded its advice on many occasions.

I suppose that was a prelude to what is now to be the board's fate under Bill C-110.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade establishes rules for the conduct of international trade in manufactured goods. Since 1961 there has been a special set of GATT rules governing trade in textiles and clothing, known as the Multifibre Arrangement, or MFA. It is under that special set of GATT rules that the Textile and Clothing Board makes its inquiries and recommendations. In Bill C-110, the government, under the pretext of extending to all industries the advantage of direct access to a tribunal of a kind that the textile and clothing industries have enjoyed for 17 years, is imposing on all industries the more stringent test of injury required by Article XIX of the GATT, but from which those industries are exempted by the Multifibre Arrangement.

Another serious omission from Bill C-110 is the failure to provide safeguard procedures to protect Canadian producers from injury resulting from the free entry of goods under the General Preferential Tariff.

When I had responsibilities as Minister of Finance in a previous government, I provided for the establishment of a standing reference in the Tariff Board whereby it receives petitions from Canadian producers who sustain that type of injury. The Tariff Board may recommend GPT withdrawal and the imposition of normal rates or an import quota if it is satisfied that the imports are causing injury and that the withdrawal of the GPT would confer significant benefit on the affected producers. The test is a less rigorous standard than the "serious injury" that must be shown under Bill C-110. The government may argue that a new and similar standing reference will be directed to the proposed tribunal, but it would be of doubtful validity where, as in C-110, a different standard for complaints is imposed by statute.

Honourable senators will recall that the Canadian Bar Association has protested against the dismissal of board members without adequate compensation, as provided for in this bill and in Bill C-55. Although the most offensive clauses have been withdrawn from both bills, the authorities suggest that they must be replaced by a positive requirement for the payment of compensation in order to avoid injustice.

Another feature of this bill that warrants attention is the absence of any capacity by the new board to initiate inquiries and any duty to make recommendations. The Textile and Clothing Board has this power and responsibility, but now the government proposes that any inquiries by the new Canadian International Trade Tribunal be undertaken only upon the recommendation of the Governor in Council. Surely this is not progress.

The government majority of members of the legislative committee of the other place attempted to report this bill without providing an opportunity for witnesses to be heard. Those efforts were thwarted by the demands of industry representatives to be heard and the protest of the opposition. I expect that honourable senators will wish to provide a full hearing in committee to those interested in appearing. In view of the long, drawn-out history of this legislation in the House of Commons, I trust I will hear no calls for the urgent and priority passage of this bill.

Another important characteristic of this bill is its relationship to the Canadian free trade bill. Even though Bill C-110 has passed the House of Commons and Bill C-130, the trade bill, has not yet received its study in committee, the trade bill amends, on at least ten occasions, Bill C-110. I think it is at least an oddity that both chambers are being asked to approve Bill C-110 even though the government, by introducing amendments to it in a bill yet to be passed by Parliament, has declared that there are defects in Bill C-110. Without prejudging the case, I should expect that the committee would want to consider the relationship of these two bills and the amendments that are being made via the trade bill to the bill that is now about to be given second reading in the Senate. This, then, is a matter that has undoubtedly been noted by members of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee and is one that will probably engage their attention.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I wish to move the adjournment of this debate, but before doing so I want to explain why. One of our colleagues, who cannot be with us this afternoon, wishes to speak on this bill tomorrow.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), for the second reading of the Bill C-92, An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand in the name of Senator Argue.

Order stands in name of Senator Argue.

ROYAL ASSENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill S-19, respecting the declaration of Royal Assent by the Governor General in the Queen's name to bills passed by the Houses of Parliament.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-19 is an attempt to deal with a problem we have had in this place for some time—presumably, before I came here, but certainly since that time—and that is the Royal Assent process that we go through in the Senate chamber in cooperation with our colleagues from the other place and with the Deputy of the Governor General.

The problem has been that it is difficult—indeed, sometimes impossible—to get all of the pieces to fit together to the convenience of all parties involved. We have to find a time that is convenient for the Deputy of the Governor General, even though the court may then be sitting. At times it is impossible to get someone at short notice and, consequently, we have to wait in the Senate for a deputy. More often, the Deputy of the Governor General has to wait in the Speaker's chambers while the business of the Senate or the business of the House of Commons arrives at a point where it can be broken off for the Royal Assent process.

Obviously there is a great deal of reluctance to abolish the traditional Royal Assent. It has been very much a part of the history of the Parliament of Canada. I for one—and I think most senators agree—believe that it would be improper, indeed wrong, to abolish the system.

This rather short bill is an attempt to present an alternative to the formal Royal Assent process. It offers the legislative process an opportunity to have Royal Assent without the formal process we have at present, but at the same time it retains the formal Royal Assent process for use when it is deemed necessary.

This bill offers a process by which a declaration of Royal Assent would be read in each of the two houses by the Speaker of that house, after it had been signed by the Governor General. The bill provides that this shall be done within 15 days of the declaration having been made. I should point out to honourable senators that there is nothing magic about 15 days. If it is felt that an alternative time should be used or that it should be done at the earliest convenient moment, certainly something to that effect could be substituted.

There is nothing complicated about this bill; it was kept simple deliberately in order to seek the concurrence of honourable senators and, assuming that it passes here, of our colleagues in the other place.

As a point of interest, I am told that the system suggested in this bill is currently in use in Australia and has been used in that country for some time. The Governor General's assent to bills there is usually made known by messages to the President of the House of Representatives and to the Speaker of the Senate, both of whom report the receipt of such messages to their respective houses. And that is precisely what we are suggesting here. In the United Kingdom, under the Royal Assent Act of 1967, an act of Parliament is duly enacted if Royal Assent is notified to each house of Parliament sitting separately by the Speakers of both houses. I am told that the Canadian Parliament is the only one that still uses the formal Royal Assent process on an ongoing basis.

Our Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders applied itself to this problem some time ago and came up with a series of suggestions, some of which are incorporated in this bill. Assuming this bill receives second reading, I will ask that it be referred to our Standing Rules and Orders Committee for study. Perhaps the results of the work done previously can be brought to bear on Bill S-19. For example, there was some discussion that Royal Assent could take effect after a bill had been gazetted. The consensus was that that would be an unnecessary complication; so that was not included in the bill. However, once again that is something that could be looked at.

The Rules Committee suggested that the present Royal Assent procedure in the Senate chamber be used for at least the first ordinary bill and the first supply bill. That is provided for in this bill. Our Rules Committee also suggested that the notification of Royal Assent by written message be made publicly by the Speaker in each house of Parliament. That is also provided for in the bill.

A number of suggestions made by the Rules Committee were not included in the bill. For instance, the committee recommended that the Royal Assent procedure should involve representation from both houses and be a public event. That was considered cumbersome and perhaps not the best way to proceed, so it is not in the bill.

With reference to delegation, some senators suggested that the bill should state explicitly that the Governor General may delegate to a deputy the function of giving Royal Assent. In the view of many experts, that is not necessary, because the Governor General already has that authority under section 14 of the Constitution Act and because paragraph 7 of the Letters Patent specifically gives that authority to the Governor General. Therefore, it is not necessary that it be included in the bill.

There was some thought that the procedures for a written declaration of Royal Assent should be outlined in the bill. However, rather than tying down at this point what the procedures should be, it has been suggested that a committee be set up, and the Clerk Assistant of Senate has been asked to head up a committee to draw up a series of recommendations for determining a process. If necessary at a later time, these could be brought into force of law by, for instance, a joint resolution of both houses. In other words, it might be found that they could be improved on after a few months' trial and at that time they could be brought into law.

Honourable senators, this is an attempt to make the process more convenient and practical. It is not an attempt to deprive us of the historical Royal Assent process that we have enjoyed for so many years in this country. It will still be there and available when necessary. But, in the ordinary course of events, it is felt that this declaration would be a simpler way to proceed.

I ask honourable senators to give this bill second reading and refer it to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I must say that—

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, is Senator MacEachen going to speak on the matter?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Molgat: I should like to ask a question, which is one of translation. I should like to refer to clause 2. In the English text the terminology indicates that the normal procedure will be used at least for the first appropriation bill or the first bill, if it is not an appropriation bill. In the French text it says "and". In the French text there would, by this law, be formal Royal Assent for the first appropriation bill and the first bill of another nature. The English text uses the word "or".

Senator Doody: I thank Senator Molgat for pointing that out. My own preference is for the French version. Both an ordinary bill and an appropriation bill should be given Royal Assent through a formal process. Once again, this is a matter that the committee can look at in greater depth and perhaps it will come up with a recommendation.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the notion of transforming the mode of the Royal Assent has been under discussion for some time. I must say I am decidedly negative on the proposal.

The matter was raised some months ago through the House of Commons, where it was proposed to introduce a bill altering the historic Royal Assent. I was consulted by my counterpart in the House of Commons on what I would recommend if such a bill came to the Senate. I replied by letter, indicating that I saw no merit in changing the present system of Royal Assent.

I take that view for a number of reasons, including the historical importance of continuing to emphasize the role of the Sovereign in our system of government. That procedure will disappear if we are to have a written declaration read by a Speaker. Except on two or three occasions in the course of a long session, at no time will the House of Commons, the Senate and the representative of Her Majesty come together to confirm in a public spectacle the three elements of the Parliament of Canada.

Why is it necessary, at this stage in our history, to adopt a bureaucratic method to confirm the passage into law of bills? I do not know.

I did not take any unilateral action on this matter. I consulted my colleagues on this side of the house, and the general view was that we did not want to alter the present Royal Assent unless—and I would add one qualification—it could be provided that, if one house of Parliament were not in Ottawa when Royal Assent was necessary, the written declaration could be utilized in such a case.

We have had circumstances in which the House of Commons adjourned and the Senate was required to continue with a bill. We would pass the bill and the Commons would have to be recalled for Royal Assent to take place. I can see, therefore, that considerable convenience would be had by permitting a written declaration in circumstances where both houses were not in session to conduct the Royal Assent ceremony; nevertheless, that ceremony is historic and has symbolic value, and I think that that is important.

The fact that the Royal Assent ceremony takes place in this chamber is also of some importance, because members of the House of Commons would never see the Senate if a written declaration were put forward.

I was not aware that this bill was to be proposed for second reading today—and I do not complain about that; but it probably would have been better if I had not been here, because then it might have been sent to committee. In the circumstances, I intend to adjourn the debate. I simply thought that I would signal how I feel and how I think my colleagues on this side of the house feel. I certainly do not like it, but, if there is a ground swell to alter the system, I certainly will not stand in the way. However, I have not perceived any ground swell. In my opinion, it is a bad move to wipe out this ceremony of such importance—

Senator Doody: It is not being wiped out.

Senator MacEachen: I thank Senator Doody for correcting me. It is not to be wiped out; it is to be reduced—

Senator Doody: That is right.

Senator MacEachen: —considerably—

Senator Doody: That is right.

Senator MacEachen: —to a number of occasions in the course of a year—maybe three—or of a long session.

We have been in session now for how long?

Senator Doody: Oh, 20 years! Or 30 years! At least it seems like that long!

Senator MacEachen: If this were put into effect, Royal Assent would occur very rarely.

Those are my views. I will talk further. I am glad that I have joined the monarchical side of the Conservative Party; it needs a voice in this chamber!

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND (PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN)—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) for the second reading of the Bill S-16, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (protection of the unborn).—(Honourable Senator Kelly).

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to Bill S-16, a bill, moved by Senator Haidasz, having to do with the protection of the unborn.

I know that I must tread carefully into this discussion, as I have been cautioned by my daughters, my female colleagues, associates and friends that my views are not expert. They point out that I have not experienced a pregnancy, a birth, single parenthood or poverty.

Honourable senators, all that is true. But, although I have not experienced motherhood, I have experience as a father, brother and grandfather. I am also experiencing a full life. As a consequence, I have many observations, thoughts and comments that may not be expert but are based on experience and personal conviction nonetheless.

I do not know any experts on living. I am told that abortion is an issue of choice, that abortion constitutes a collision of rights: the rights of the fetus and the rights of the mother. I am told that to deny the right of access to abortion is to deny the freedom of individual choice.

Honourable senators, I am fascinated and a bit curious about this issue of freedom of choice. It was George Bernard Shaw who said, "liberty means responsibility". Edmund Burke is quoted as saying that "true danger is when liberty is nibbled away for expediency and by parts". Both Shaw and Burke are relevant to this debate. I would add a modest observation that the law of liberty is anchored on the discharge of moral obligations.

I contend that the mother and society have a moral obligation, a responsibility, to safeguard the rights of the innocent, unborn child, and that to subordinate the rights of the infant to those of the mother establishes a dangerous precedent for the sanctity of individual human rights.

Honourable senators, the social contract between government and the governed requires the government to protect the weak from the strong, the minority from the majority, and so on. From that perspective, perhaps the government should wade into this emotionally charged and highly contentious matter, for nothing can be weaker or more fragile than the unborn fetus—especially in the face of an often disinterested society, armed with its vast array of intrusive medical technology.

Having said that, I sincerely regret that this issue has come to Parliament. Not because the issue is so difficult and divisive but because, to me, it demonstrates a breakdown in the moral fabric of our society; a failure by our schools, churches, families and ourselves; and a failure to instil an overarching commitment to, and respect for, the value of human life.

I also know that, if this Parliament does pass legislation along the lines of Bill S-16, abortions will continue in back alleys by unqualified quacks, sympathetic family practitioners and in abortion clinics across the border. But no Parliament can legislate morality, and abortion is essentially a moral issue.

Some say, therefore, that we, as parliamentarians, should resist the temptation to legislate. I say reluctantly that the state must take a position; that the state cannot, implicitly or explicitly, be a part of something that violates the rights of the innocent, defenceless and silent fetus. Some people point to the dangers of back-alley abortions, saying that the state should legalize and regulate abortion clinics for the safety and protection of mothers.

Honourable senators, that is a troubling proposition. If we take it to its logical conclusion, should prostitution be legalized and regulated by the government in order to keep out criminal elements and to ensure the health and safety of prostitutes and members of the public? Should the state legalize and regulate the sale of the drug "crack" on the streets of our cities to ensure that buyers get unadulterated doses and use properly sanitized equipment?

Some say that a Parliament composed largely of men has no right to legislate a woman's issue. This proposition strikes at the heart of our system of government. First, this is not a woman's issue but an issue that has broad implications for society at large. Second, this proposition, were the basic assumption correct, is akin to saying that only a Parliament of broadcasters would be in a position to review and approve a new broadcasting policy; only a Parliament consisting of experts in air transportation and privatization should decide how and when Air Canada is to be sold; that only criminals are in a position to judge our penal system, our parole system or our Criminal Code.

Fortunately, that is not the way our system works, and such propositions add nothing to the debate. I do not believe that abortion is an issue of choice, but, rather, is an issue of responsibility. Children, childhood and conception are shared responsibilities. Collectively, society has a responsibility to the living, whether they are inside or outside the womb. I believe churches, family and social institutions have more of a role to play and I believe that individuals have to accept more of the responsibility.

Honourable senators, some of my friends and associates counselled me not to speak in this debate. My conscience and my sense of what is right compelled me to state my views anyway. If you believe, as I do, that life begins at conception, then the solution is clear, straightforward and unambiguous. I am shocked at the statistics coming out of the United States showing that there are 1.5 million abortions in that country every year. I am particularly shocked to hear that a significant portion of these abortions are for the purpose of gender selection and birth control.

In this context, abortion is murder, purely and simply, and, even worse, murder for convenience sake. Medical evidence is inconclusive at best, so far as I know, as to when life begins. To terminate the existence of a fetus at any stage after conception, when it is possible or likely that it represents life, is an abhorrent act for an individual to perpetrate and for a society to condone. I point out that medical technology now allows babies born at three months to survive. In the absence of conclusive medical evidence as to when life begins, if such evidence is ever possible, surely the only possible ethical and reasonable solution is to ban abortion, except perhaps in those tragic conflicts of life with life that may justify an abortion in a very exceptional circumstance.

Honourable senators, I urge support of Bill C-16.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, for Senator Anderson, debate adjourned.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF CHAPLEAU—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved the second reading of Bill C-308, to change the name of the electoral district of Chapleau.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the kind of bill we used to receive quite regularly. The purpose of the bill is to change the name of an electoral district. The situation is somewhat different in this case because of the new electoral map which just became effective, I believe, on July 13.

The member for the present riding of Gatineau now has a new riding called Chapleau, which covers more or less the same territory.

Chapleau is a very attractive name, designating a former premier, ex-lieutenant-governor and former federal minister from Quebec, but this eminent figure has no direct connection with the riding of Gatineau. According to the present member, her constituents are very unhappy about the change.

The name Gatineau is also connected with an historic figure—I think his name was Nicolas Gatineau or something like that. In any case, he is identified with the area, since the city of Gatineau is in the riding. In fact, it is the biggest city in the riding.

In the circumstances, the member obtained the unanimous consent of her colleagues in the House of Commons to have all three stages of Bill C-308 adopted.

I remember that in the past, when we received bills of this nature, I always objected as a matter of principle to double names. In this case, the bill does not substitute the name Gatineau for Chapleau but Gatineau-La-Lièvre. I used to object to the use of more than one name. I felt that a riding should have a name that was short and sweet. In any case, the decision was made by the present member and by the House of Commons, and I think that, in the circumstances, we should abide by that decision.

Normally, such bills would not meet with any opposition in this Chamber and no one asks for referral to committee. However, if any honourable senators would prefer to see the bill considered in Committee of the Whole or in a Committee of this Chamber, I will move the requisite motion. Thank you, honourable senators.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I would like to ask the senator a question. I believe that according to law, after the Electoral Boundaries Commission has published its proposals for new electoral districts and new names, the Commission is supposed to hold hearings and invite anyone who has any objections or changes to suggest to express his views. Were there any objections at the time from constituents or other individuals? Did they appear before the Electoral Boundaries Commission to demand this change? And if so, what was the response of the Commission?

Senator Flynn: I must admit I am totally ignorant of the situation. If the senator prefers, I will ask Mrs. Mailly to give me a reply which I will transmit to the senator before the final stage of the bill is passed.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the second reading of Bill C-82, respecting the registration of lobbyists.

He said: Honourable senators, the need for legislation is often obvious long before an act is consummated. I speak today to support the passage of Bill C-82, an act respecting the registration of lobbyists, which, in all probability, would have well-served Sir John A. Macdonald in his dealings with the buggy-whip interests who looked upon Ottawa and knew a good thing when they saw it.

● (1600)

I do not come to you today without experience in the territory. For a 12-month time, beginning in the spring of 1947, I hired myself out as a public relations manager to the Canada and Dominion Sugar Company, and when I was not engaged in the business of establishing that our product was 99.9 per cent pure I was kept busy proving to the government of the day that our corporation was as wholesome as our lumps and deserving of help. I was, honourable senators, a lobbyist.

The target of the day was a powerful bureaucrat whom some of you may remember. His name was S.R. Noble and he was this country's sugar controller. Armed with regulations left over from the war years, he had jurisdiction over supply and prices in our industry and absolute power to determine the future of the Ontario beet-sugar industry, then centred in Wallaceburg and Chatham.

Our company visits to Ottawa were set up so that we might prostrate ourselves at Mr. Noble's feet and plead for his mercies. In truth, we were in town to impress a number of members of the Senate and the Commons—particularly one John Diefenbaker, friend of the western beet growers—with the wisdom of our case for higher prices and subsidies.

I dare say that what we were doing—we offered briefs, issued press releases, bought a few dinners and poured a few drinks—was not much different from what the buggy-whip people had done before us. Perhaps what we did was not as sophisticated, or for that matter as useful, as what is done today by the people who build pipelines, sell submarines or protest against the hanging of tobacco merchants.

The bill before us is offered on the assumption that the men and women who function in the business of making representations to government, or providing connections with government, perform necessary and useful services in the democratic process and, with rare exceptions, go about their work ethically.

For this reason Bill C-82 makes no attempt to regulate them. There are laws enough to deal with unacceptable approaches, or for that matter with unacceptable reception of society's persuaders. What this bill undertakes is the registration of paid lobbyists so that public office holders will have full knowledge of those with whom they are dealing on the public's behalf. Hidden persuaders, those who do not register their connections, will be subject to fines not exceeding $25,000 or to prison terms not exceeding six months—or both—on summary conviction. On proceedings by way of indictment, the fines can go to $100,000 and the jail terms to two years. Serious stuff!

Honourable senators, this legislation comes as no surprise. It was promised by Prime Minister Brian Mulroney in September 1985 and was based on a unanimous report from an all-party committee tabled in the House of Commons last January. It is conceived to incorporate four guiding principles: One, openness: The registry will tell us who is dealing with government. Two, clarity: There will be no doubt of who must register and who need not. Three, access: The road to government will not be obstructed. Four, simplicity: An administrative burden will not be imposed upon those affected.

Those individuals who wish to reach the government on their own behalf or those who work as volunteers within organizations will not be covered by this legislation. The citizen, in short, will retain his unencumbered access to public office holders.

Those who must register are divided into two tiers. A tier-one lobbyist is anyone who, under contract to third parties, approaches public office holders, even for the purpose of arranging meetings for clients. What will be required of them beyond their name, their firm's name and address and names and addresses of clients—including information on parent and subsidiary companies where applicable—will be details of the particular issues to which their lobbying efforts relate.

The Assistant Deputy Registrar General of Canada will be the keeper of the registry and will require notice within ten days of the commencement of any lobbying activity. When clients change or issues change, updated information will be necessary. It is difficult to understand why any ethical communicator would hesitate to provide such particulars.

The second-tier lobbyists, as the minister likes to boast, will have to disclose no more information than they now provide on their calling cards. They are likely to be the employees or officers of trade organizations, labour federations, professional associations, boards of trade or private businesses who, to a significant degree, lobby for their employers. They need only register their names and the names of the people they work for. This information must be updated and certified annually.

All information contained in the registry will be public. There will be no charge for registration and only a nominal fee to cover photocopying and such for those seeking access to the register.

Alas, there will be nothing retroactive about this reasonable process of determining who is intervening in public business and why. We second-tier wonders of 41 years ago will have no way of acquiring paper proof of our having had what the minister calls "a role in keeping government informed". In the bad old days recognition was hard to come by. Those who are about to receive it should rejoice.

Honourable senators, I commend Bill C-82 to you as a valuable step forward in public sector ethics.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that there is general agreement that all remaining orders stand, but I am subject to correction by any other honourable senator who wishes to speak to any item on the order paper.

Hon. William J. Petten: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to deal with the business of the Senate, particularly as it applies to tomorrow. I also want to put a motion asking for leave to sit tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

The reasoning behind that is that the House of Commons, I am told, will get a Speaker's ruling on the grouping of the various amendments on the abortion resolution and they are expected to vote at around noon. They will then adjourn for a period of time. I believe their adjournment motion will be for August 10. In any event, between eleven and twelve o'clock it might be appropriate for us to have Royal Assent for those bills that will have received third reading. That will not put us in conflict with the activities of the other place after noon, because no one at this time knows how many votes there will be or how long they will take. It will probably be more convenient for all of us if we have Royal Assent before the House starts its voting process on the abortion resolution.

At approximately ten o'clock, before Royal Assent, we will be able to deal with any matters left over from today or any third readings that might be ready for tomorrow. If that is satisfactory to honourable senators, I will put the motion.

With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, 28th July, 1988, at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, earlier today Senator Doody and I discussed this adjournment until tomorrow morning and we worked out a program that would make it possible for us to have some legislation ready for Royal Assent tomorrow and some other legislation ready to go to committee. Of course, it will be up to honourable senators to decide what they wish to do, but we will be able to offer a program that will make this adjournment possible. Therefore, I believe we should support this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt this motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Which adjournment?

Senator Frith: The adjournment until ten o'clock tomorrow morning.

Senator Flynn: What will happen when we are through tomorrow?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, as Senator Doody has pointed out, the House of Commons plans to adjourn tomorrow at about one o'clock, or whenever they finish their votes on the abortion issue. I am told they will then adjourn until August 10. On August 10 the committee of the other place on the Free Trade Agreement will report. However, as I understand it, the House will not be able to debate that report until the following week, and the government proposes to deal with child care for the balance of that week, a matter that will be of great interest to the Senate at some time. However, we will perhaps be able to hold our breaths, at least for the balance of that week. Senator Doody and I discussed that also and it seems the appropriate adjournment after that for the Senate would be to August 16.

Senator Doody: Perhaps I could add a couple of thoughts on the timing of our recess, if we manage to get one—and I suspect we will. The return date would be predicated, to a large degree, on the amount of work that the committees will dedicate themselves to during the time that the Senate is recessed. At that time we will have approximately six bills in committee—probably more than that, because there are two agricultural bills that will have to be sent as well. So there will probably be eight bills that the committees should be able to study. We have agreed that it is not necessary for the entire Senate to come back simply because the committees have work to do. However, it is equally true that the committees should deal with that work while the Senate is adjourned.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if you would give us a listing of the bills in committee?

Senator Doody: I may be a bit presumptuous on some of these. Bill C-82, which deals with lobbyists, was introduced at second reading yesterday. I hope it will be responded to today and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Bill C-30, which we introduced for second reading a few days ago, is still awaiting a response. I hope it will be responded to by the spokesman on the other side and referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Bill C-110 has been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

I am sorry, Senator Sinclair, did you wish to comment?

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I would just like to say a word on Bill C-110. As I look at it and at some other legislation in the other place, namely, Bill C-130, I see a conflict between them. Bill C-130 will have some effect on Bill C-110, but it is not even before this chamber yet. I would suggest, therefore, that we are in the position of having to defer consideration of Bill C-110 until we see what happens to Bill C-130, particularly in view of the Danforth amendment and, to use Mr. Crosbie's phrase, "the defanging of that amendment". We have not been able to get our hands on the defanged amendment. I have asked the American Consul to give us something on that, and I understand that it will be some time before we get it. While we will deal with the bill when we can, it will not likely be very quickly.

Senator Doody: With reference to the defanging part of the operation, I can think of nobody more suitable or better equipped to defang any piece of legislation than the honourable gentleman. So we are obviously referring it to the right committee at the right time.

Regarding the relationship to Bill C-130, we are walking on some tricky ground. I hope that we will not have to wait for an election to get the tribunal bill under way. In any event, we will discuss that at another time.

Bill C-103, the ACOA Bill, is in committee. I understand that that committee will be meeting this evening. What that committee's plans are beyond this evening I am not in a position to say, but I do hope that that committee will find time to meet and discuss that bill while the Senate is adjourned.

Bill C-92 relates to the Canadian Wheat Board. I think the Agriculture Committee is concerned with that. That committee has a meeting planned for next week, I believe. In any event, we would like to have that bill referred to committee as quickly as possible. Indeed, we would have preferred to have it referred to committee this week because there are financial implications involved in it. There are changes in the borrowing authority in the bill which will allow greater flexibility and the saving of considerable moneys. The faster this bill is approved, the faster the financial savings involved will commence.

Bill C-129 deals with the privatization of Air Canada. That is before the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I understand that a schedule of meetings for that committee has been prepared to deal with that bill. I understand there are three or four meetings of that committee planned for next week.

Bill C-126, which relates to the Bretton Woods Agreement, is to be dealt with today. I understand there will be a response from the other side on second reading of that bill. The Honourable Thomas Hockin is prepared to come here at three o'clock this afternoon to deal with the bill in Committee of the Whole, if that is agreeable to honourable senators.

We have two other agricultural bills before us, Bills C-132 and C-112. We had hoped to deal with these in Committee of the Whole this afternoon as well. The parliamentary secretary is prepared to come here and answer questions honourable senators may have. The minister is out of town, but the parliamentary secretary has handled these bills and is prepared to come here and explain them to honourable senators. However, I have been informed that it is the wish of the Agriculture Committee to deal with these bills next week. I do not pretend that they have the urgency that Bill C-92 has.

In any event, those are the bills that will be dealt with in committee, if we are fortunate enough to give them second reading and have them referred to the appropriate committees. Once again, I can only hope that the committees will deal with them during the coming week.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have just one comment in addition to what Senator Doody has said. He and I realize that we are in no position to give any undertakings on behalf of committees. The committees decide when they will meet and what they will deal with, but I am sure they will take into account what Senator Doody has said in making those decisions.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray is absent today, but I would be pleased to take as notice any questions honourable senators might wish to give me.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATIONS FOR CANADIAN PASSPORTS—REVISION OF REGULATION RE GUARANTORS

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate a question about applications for Canadian passports. I have had a few calls on this matter. The present regulations state that an applicant for a passport must have his application countersigned by a guarantor who has known the applicant personally for at least two years and well enough to be confident that the statements he has made are true. Guarantors must belong to certain occupational groups. These groups include ministers of religion, signing officers of banks, judges, police officers, postmasters, lawyers, mayors, doctors, dentists, university teachers and school principals.

Senator Marshall: And senators?

Senator Turner: Senators are not mentioned; they are the forgotten group. While there are a number of different occupational groups which qualify, many occupational groups do not. While a high school principal can sign for you, a high school teacher cannot. While a university administrator can sign, an administrator for the Government of Canada cannot. While a bank manager can sign, a trade union official cannot.

The present list of guarantors seems to reflect an older vision of Canadian society, where people lived in small towns and where there was a reasonable chance that the people on the list would know you. With the majority of Canadians now living in large urban centres, where relationships are more impersonal, this may no longer be the case.

Is the government giving any consideration to revising its regulation regarding who can act as guarantors in applications for Canadian passports? The reason for the question is that I have had calls from people who go down to see postmasters, lawyers, mayors, doctors, dentists, and they are all busy. It takes a while to get into their office to get the application signed.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will attempt to get the answer for Senator Turner.

Senator Turner: Thank you very much.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

DISAPPEARANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE ROCK FROM DOW'S LAKE, OTTAWA

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: I have a very weighty question for the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am advised that on the driveway here in Ottawa by Dow's Lake there used to be a large rock, weighing one or two tonnes, in front of the tulip beds that are laid out in that area. On that rock was a plaque commemorating Queen Juliana of the Netherlands' gift of tulips to the City of Ottawa as an expression of her gratitude for having been here in Canada during World War II, and particularly here in Ottawa.

I am advised, honourable senators, that this large, weighty rock has disappeared, and it seems that its disappearance is not a removal of the plaque from the rock but the whole rock, which hardly could be considered an act of vandalism. It is peculiar that this large rock disappeared at approximately the same time as Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands was here in May or June of this year.

I should like to know if the honourable senator could tell me if my facts are correct, and, if so, who removed this weighty object and why.

Senator Argue: And where?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This may come as quite a shock to the senator, but I really do not know. Had the honourable senator asked me about rocks in Newfoundland, I would have been in a much better position to answer him. In any event, if the rock is not returned, I will see to it that we get a replacement from my province. In the meantime, I will make inquiries as to the fate of this particular one.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions and ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF TOBACCO FARMERS IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO— GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on July 5 last by the Honourable Colin Kenny, regarding Agriculture—Plight of Tobacco Farmers in Southwestern Ontario—Government Assistance.

(The answer follows:)

The Government has made every reasonable effort to assist all tobacco producers in Canada. A budget of $33.5 million was made available to the Tobacco Diversification Plan (TDP) to compensate exiting producers and to encourage diversification.

In Ontario, two major initiatives have been implemented. These are the Tobacco Transition Adjustment Initiative (TTAI) and the Alternate Enterprise Initiative (AEI).

In Ontario, to date, the TTAI which can be further sub-divided into three programs (the Tobacco Assistance Program, the Exit Compensation Program and the Ontario Burley Transition Adjustment Initiative) has provided some $12.2 million compensation to 796 exiting producers.

The AEI is supporting crop and market development projects as well as more basic research activities. The AEI is funding projects involving a variety of crops including peanuts, processing tomatoes, cash-crop hay, ginseng and garlic. The federal government has committed $9.0 million to this initiative in Ontario.

The search for alternatives is one of the keys to addressing the problems facing the tobacco industry. A great deal of time and effort must be diverted to this search but, even in the short time the AEI has been in place, substantial progress has been made. Caution, however, must be taken to ensure that our search for alternatives does not disrupt the established markets and livelihoods of other producers.

The tobacco industry, although still under pressure, has shown signs of some stability. For example, flue-cured tobacco production in Ontario in 1988 is estimated to increase to 141 million pounds, an increase of some 30 million pounds from 1987.

The Government continues to follow the situation closely and the Government's efforts to assist the industry in their efforts to rationalize production and develop alternatives will continue. The industry's and the provincial government's continued input and cooperation will be sought, so as to maximize the benefits derived from any and all federal initiatives undertaken.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN CANADA—DROUGHT CONDITIONS—EFFECT ON PRICE OF BREAD

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on July 5 last by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding Agriculture—Western Canada—Drought Conditions—Effect on Price of Bread.

(The answer follows:)

The domestic price of wheat was raised to $7.00 per bushel on April 1, 1986 (the maximum at that time) for No. 1 Canada Western Red Spring (CWRS), 13.5 per cent protein, basis in store Thunder Bay and has maintained at that level.

The government has announced changes to the two-price wheat policy. After August 1, 1988, the domestic selling price of wheat for human consumption in Canada is to be at prices competitive with prices of wheat paid by U.S. millers.

On July 15, the Canadian Wheat Board established the new domestic price for August and September at $5.98 a bushel.

Thus, statements that Canadian domestic prices would increase based on currently prevailing prices in the North American market are unfounded.

The government will be monitoring prices very closely as the domestic price of wheat changes every two months. Each dollar per bushel change in the price of wheat is equivalent to a change in the value of wheat in a 24 ounce loaf of bread of only about 2 cents.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

AVAILABILITY AND COST OF TEXT TO PUBLIC

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on July 5 by the Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay, regarding the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Availability and Cost of Text to Public.

(The answer follows:)

Copies of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the accompanying tariff schedules are available free from regional offices of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion across the country and from the International Trade Communications Group of the Department of External Affairs.

The implementing legislation must be obtained through the Department of Supply and Services or through Government bookstores across the country at cost, as is the case with every bill or statute of the Government of Canada.

For those Canadians interested in reading the Agreement itself, there is no charge whatsoever.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

JOB CREATION—BASIS OF PREDICTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on July 12 last by the Honourable Philippe Deane Gigantès, regarding the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Job Creation—Basis of Prediction.

(The answer follows:)

The figure of 251,193 projected net job gains as a result of implementation of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is taken from a study entitled "An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement", prepared for the Economic Council of Canada and published in April, 1988, as the Council's Discussion Paper No. 344. The figure was altered slightly for technical reasons (increased by 108 jobs) in the Statement of the Economic Council, "Venturing Forth: An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement" published earlier this year.

The Council refers to the figures obtained as "the most likely outcome" with regard to the net overall impact of the Free Trade Agreement upon the Canadian economy. The honourable senator should consult the Council's documentation for a detailed explanation of the basis for the conclusions the report contains.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—CONSULTATIONS ON DESIGN OF FERRY—RELOCATION OF TERMINAL

(The answer follows:)

When the question of improving the Caribou-Wood Islands ferry service was being examined, officials looked at the service as a total system, and in addition to considering the type of ship required, they examined the question of terminal changes, including the possibility of moving the Caribou terminal to the Northumberland Strait shoreline. A preliminary investigation showed that the cost of relocating the terminal would be inordinately high.

The government's constitutional obligation to Prince Edward Island to maintain a year-round connection with the mainland is fully met by the government-funded ferry service between Borden and Cape Tormentine. It would also be met by a fixed crossing in the same location if a decision were taken to build one. The Caribou-Wood Islands ferry service is a seasonal operation designed to relieve traffic pressure on the Borden service during the summer months and to provide help to the Island's summer tourist industry. There is no federal obligation to provide winter ferry service at the eastern end of the Northumberland Strait nor is there any evidence of a real requirement. The government therefore has no plans to change the existing seasonal arrangements.

The need for a larger ship on the Caribou-Wood Islands run has been identified as immediate and the requirement could not be met in a timely manner by waiting until ships currently used on the Borden service could be transferred if a fixed crossing is built. Should a fixed crossing not be built, the Borden ships will continue to be needed on that service.

AGRICULTURE

PLIGHT OF TOBACCO FARMERS IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—AGENDA ITEM AT MEETING OF MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on July 13 last by the Honourable Colin Kenny, regarding Agriculture—Plight of Tobacco Farmers in Southwestern Ontario—Agenda Item at Meeting of Ministers of Agriculture—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The tobacco industry was not a specific agenda item at the recent meeting of Ministers of Agriculture but has been a topic of ongoing discussion between federal and provincial officials. The current situation in Ontario is being examined closely by federal, provincial and industry representatives and a report on the operation of the Tobacco Assistance Program and the condition of the industry will be submitted to ministers in the near future.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL

THIRD READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C. for the third reading of the Bill C-72, An Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps it is because of my background and some experience with the subject matter of this legislation, but I am hard pressed to think of any law that has had as profound an effect upon Canadian society as have the attempts to reconcile and solve conflicting linguistic objectives in our country. When we think about it from an historical point of view, the early Canadians made quite a bold move when they decided to save the northern half of the North American continent for what, at the time, amounted to British institutions and at the same time to preserve two languages, although they were not then two official languages. Through the efforts and initiatives of Governor Murray and others, the early Canadians not only managed to resist the blandishments of those to the south of us to join them but also maintained the French culture and linguistic traditions. Indeed, at that time, as far as the Americans were concerned, those to the north of them were Les Canadiens—simply "the Canadians", meaning French-speaking Canadians. Picture the situation at the time of the American Revolution. What could have been more logical than to invite the French Canadians to join the Revolution against the British? Indeed, such invitations were made and the French Canadians resisted them.

Senator Corbin: Some of us did.

Senator Frith: Enough of them did. I was speaking in general terms—I do not know of any human endeavour involving more than one person that is ever completely unanimous.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: However, most French Canadians—and, most importantly, enough of them—resisted the invitations from the Americans to join the revolution against the British. From that perspective, the French Canadians saved the northern half of North America for the country we now know as Canada.

Senator Corbin: The Americans weren't that good, either.

Senator Frith: The Americans weren't that what?

Senator Corbin: They weren't that good, either.

Senator Frith: I am afraid I don't know what you mean.

Senator Corbin: They made some boobos, too, and they lost us.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, we have now seen a human endeavour involving three people and no unanimity.

● (1430)

Honourable senators, I should say that I am, as you might have understood and as I said at the beginning, expressing my opinions. It is my opinion that, if the French Canadians had not resisted and had joined the American Revolution, North America would be all one country, and, by the way, there would not be any controversy over a Free Trade Agreement.

The legislation before us is a continuation of the determination to continue with this bold experiment that Canadians launched to establish a country in those difficult times and to add the difficulty of trying to do it in two languages. When the B & B Commission started, I can remember that none of us argued with a submission that was made to us frequently: Why are we not all just Canadians? We would then ask the question: Yes, why not be all Canadians, but what language are we going to speak? The persons who asked us those questions usually said, "Why, of course, English." "Why English?" "Because it is the language that dominates North America and is dominating the world."

It is much easier to run a country in one language. Look at the United States—a melting pot with only one official language. It will cost us so much to do this. It is so difficult. Why should we do it? Why should we try? Is life not difficult enough without trying to run a country in two languages? The answer is yes, I guess it is, but maybe we are bull-headed. Lots of people around the world ask us, "Why don't you run your country in one language?" But we continue to do it our way. We succeed to the point that, in my view, although only 25 years ago you could not have said this, that experiment is now irreversible, I am glad to say.

What the B & B Commission was struggling with was attitudes. As we held hearings in all parts of Canada, we heard these questions: Why do we not run the country with only one language? Why does Quebec not give up? Why do they not recognize the fact, and why do the Francophones outside not recognize the fact, that there is no point in trying to maintain the French language in North America? English is such a dominant language around the world and in North America that there is no point in trying to continue with two languages in Canada. Yet the same people would often say with breathtaking inconsistency that the French Canadians were trying to take over, as if there were any chance, in the context of the enormous domination of English in the world and in North America, that that was remotely possible.

On the question of attitudes, I ask honourable senators to think of themselves in the following position. Let us suppose that in all of North America the only political unit that speaks English is the Province of Ontario. The President of the United States speaks French; French is the language in British Columbia; French is the language all across the west; French is the language in the east; French is the language in Montana; French is the language in Washington; French is the language in New York; French is the language in Los Angeles; French is the language all over North America, except in Ontario, and you are a citizen of Ontario. You are being told, "Why don't you give up? French is all over North America. You can't possibly maintain English. You can't maintain your English culture. You cannot maintain your English language. It is impossible; give up!" Would you? Or wouldn't you, an Ontario Anglophone, say, "My language and culture are important to me and I believe our country will be a bilingual country. We are a concentrated minority and recognize that we are a minority, but we will try to maintain a bilingual country." That, in effect, is exactly all that Quebec and the Francophones outside Quebec have been saying.

This has been a magnificent adventure in majority-minority relations. During the B & B time we had inquiries from all over the world as to how we were doing with our experiment in majority-minority linguistic relations. We heard from Yugoslavia and from many other countries—Canada is not the only country in the world that has many languages. It was clear in the Canadian case that it was a majority dealing with one significant minority. So there was widespread interest in how we were doing.

We should take pride in our success, but there is a lot of work to be done. This legislation before us is work to continue the development of this adventure. We should be proud of how we have done it in Canada—that is, without the violence that often attends attempts at solutions to such problems. The Canadian tradition has always been to settle questions by discussion, by disagreement and by articulate and sometimes violent oratory. Not by machine guns and bombs in the town square. That is not our way.

A majority never gives up anything when it does something for a minority. It still stays the majority. The majority always has the last say. For a majority to make a concession to a minority takes nothing away from the majority, but adds a great deal to the majority.

Let me quote from the general introduction some words that I remember—in the first draft, at least—came from Mr. Laurendeau and Mr. Dunton, the co-chairmen of the commission. It is found on page xlvi of the introduction at paragraph 86. It states:

Respect for the idea of minority.

The principle of equality implies respect for the idea of minority status, both in the country as a whole and in each of its regions. Within the provinces or smaller administrative entities, both Anglophones and Francophones live in some cases as a majority, in some cases as a minority. Since the English-speaking population is larger across the country, its members are less often in the minority; but they are the minority in some areas, especially in the province of Quebec. The Francophones are usually in the minority outside Quebec. In either case, however, the principle of equality requires that the minority receive generous treatment.

This proposal may seem Utopian, but is it really so? Recognizing the rights of a linguistic minority does not reduce those of the majority: with a little good will, the rights of both can be exercised without serious conflict, as is clearly demonstrated by the examples of Switzerland and Finland. In other words, a majority does not abdicate when it resolves to take a minority into consideration; it remains the majority, with the advantages its situation implies, while at the same time demonstrating its humanity.

This is political wisdom too. The history of countries with more than one language and culture shows how often rigid attitudes held by majorities have made common life difficult, if not impossible. The use of force, in any circumstances, results in either revolt or submission. Besides, for the majority to hold back from acts within its power or to allow events it would be able to prevent, out of respect for the minority, is not a product of weakness but a step forward in civilization. In this spirit too will we approach the matter of the other minorities.

Honourable senators, when this bill was here for debate on second reading, I expressed some reservations about some of its provisions. With respect to the bill as a whole, I believe it reflects, as I have said, the principles described in the quotation I have just read, and I believe it is an important step forward in this evolutionary and highly civilized initiative taken by our country in linguistic and majority-minority relations. The reservations I expressed at that time were three: The first was about the clause that raises the possibility of applying the principle of equality in the public service on the basis of quotas. My second reservation related to the use of orders in council as a means to interpret and place into law administrative interpretations of the act and its principles. My third reservation dealt with what seemed to me to be extreme powers, or unnecessarily strong powers, granted to the commissioner and, in particular, the use of the courts.

On the question of quotas, the public administration aspect of the royal commission report is found in Book Three. During our discussions and during our historical review of the problem of representation, I remember the temptation, in view of the historic under-representation of Francophones in the Public Service, to resort to the "quota solution"—that is to say that if the population, as was the case then, is approximately 28 per cent francophone, then the Public Service of Canada should have 28 per cent francophone participation. That was the temptation that we resisted. I say we resisted it in spite of the following, which was a part of our historical review. I quote from page 101, paragraph 260:

There was a precipitous decline of the French-speaking proportion of the total public service after the establishment of the Civil Service Commission.

That was the establishment of the so-called merit principle, a principle worthy of support; but the difficulty was that "merit" was interpreted to include the ability to speak English. The paragraph continues:

Although precise estimates are not available, it appears that Francophones made up about 22 per cent of all federal employees in 1918 but less than 13 per cent in 1946.

The temptation was to apply a quota system in order bring the representation back up. The commission's feeling—and you will look in vain through this report to find any support for the idea for this—was that the use of quotas was undesirable for two basic reasons: first, it was insensitive to the objectives of the legislation—namely, service to the public and opportunity to work in one's own language. It is insensitive because, of course, to be sensitively applied, it should be applied in a way to meet those needs, and they cannot be met by rigid application of quotas. Some departments would need more and some less for language of service, and some departments and units within those departments would need less and some more for language of work.

My concern was with Part VI, which deals with equitable participation and establishes the principle that both language groups should be fairly represented and enjoy full participation in the work of government. So long as we are talking about fair representation and full participation I have no difficulty. However, I wanted to ask the minister about this point, and the minister has assured me that the principle is not one of quota but one of fair representation only. I was provided with some material by a Mr. Patterson, who had analysed the situation in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and expressed the feeling that a quota principle was being applied in that department. Upon further study, I found it open to interpretation.

Senator Guay: He disagreed with the minister.

Senator Frith: Yes, he disagreed with the minister. I believe he sent material to some of us saying that the minister was incorrect with regard to the quota principle.

Senator Flynn: Who is the minister?

Senator Frith: Mr. Hnatyshyn. Mr. Patterson is probably correct in his figures, but the conclusion he draws from those figures does not support the theory that the federal public service is now applying a quota system. Even in rejecting the quota system, our commission agreed that in some situations more participation is necessary than in others and that some departments may very well wish to, and are entitled to, increase the representation of Francophones or Anglophones according to their own needs. The overall picture in the federal public service is the important one. I was reassured by the minister on that point. I was not so reassured on the other two.

My second point dealt with orders in council. As a matter of principle, I believe it is dangerous for Parliament to delegate to the administration, in effect, the power to legislate by order in council. Parliament has done so here, and it has done so more than it ought to have, although I understand the motivation in doing so.

Excuse me for continuing in such a subjective vein, but, when I was legal adviser to the first Commissioner of Official Languages, problems occurred frequently about interpretation because of lack of clarity in the legislation. I suppose from my professional point of view that was a good thing. I can understand the temptation and desire of the administration, for the best of all reasons, to have more flexibility in interpretation by the use of orders in council.

Of course, when Parliament delegates its legislative authority, it usually does so in a worthy cause. However, that is not sufficient reason to do it, and I believe, honourable senators, that we should keep vigilant attention on the use of orders in council for the implementation of this legislation, because, in spite of what I have said about majority-minority relations, in that the majority gives up nothing when it gives something to the minority, attitudes are important and majorities have sensitivities, too, and it would be unfortunate if, by overkill, we gave a reason for any hypersensitive groups within majorities to feel anxious and, as a result, to oppose this desirable legislation.

There is the usual, or what has become popular, answer to government by order in council and that is parliamentary review. The difficulty with parliamentary review here is that, while any orders in council made to implement this legislation must be laid before Parliament, parliamentary approval is not necessary for them to take effect. Having decided, as I believe we have, to give away some of our legislative power to implement this desirable objective, and having done so subject to parliamentary review, I urge vigilance and that we keep an eye out when Senator Doody tables such regulations. We should ensure that they are drawn to the attention of the Joint Committee on Official Languages and the Joint Committee on the Scrutiny of Regulations to be sure that there has not been excessive use of this power we are delegating to the administration.

The third and last reservation I had dealt with was the general question of the commissioner's powers and the fact that the courts are now going to play a role in the implementation of Canada's official languages policy.

I mentioned at second reading debate that the normal role of an ombudsman, which is what the commissioner has been up to now, is to investigate complaints, to investigate on his own initiative, and to make recommendations. That is so of all the provincial ombudsmen who deal with general complaints against the administration.

Again, I can understand why the commissioner and others are looking for further powers. It is because one can feel rather helpless that, after conducting an investigation, after supporting it with a report and making recommendations, nothing happens. That was the scheme of the original Officials Languages Act.

This legislation establishes an important additional power, and I flag it for the attention of honourable senators. I still have some doubts about whether it is necessary. It will now be possible for the commissioner and others to resort to the courts if their complaints are not satisfied, and the courts can make an appropriate judgment. The exact wording is "an appropriate and just remedy". That, of course, could include a civil remedy; it could mean damages; it could mean a mandatory order; it could mean an injunction on the civil side; or it could mean a criminal penalty if the courts thought that it was appropriate and just. We doubt that that would ever happen. I note that Senator Flynn is shaking his head.

Senator Guay: He often does.

Senator Flynn: You are always bowing.

Senator Frith: If it were Mr. Justice Flynn, I would not worry about it, because Mr. Justice Flynn would not consider a criminal order.

Senator Flynn: There is no penalty attached to that provision.

Senator Frith: Again, Senator Flynn and I apparently disagree, but I am bound to say—and correct me if I am wrong, Senator Guay—that I asked the Minister of Justice that question—and it is true that Senator Flynn is a former Minister of Justice—and the present minister turned to his officials and said that, yes, it could include criminal remedies.

However, I agree with Senator Flynn that it is unlikely this would happen, but I also agree with his colleague, Mr. Hnatyshyn, and his advisers that it could include that.

Senator Flynn: He does not know.

Senator Frith: Do you mean that he is like Mr. Crosbie, in that he has not read his own legislation? Honourable senators, I assume that he has read it.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: I should have thought, honourable senators, that there was a principle of law, well established, that a criminal offence had to be defined specifically and a specific penalty provided for that offence. With all due respect to the present Minister of Justice and his advisers, I find it hard to believe that you can establish a criminal offence on that language which has just been read.

Senator Frith: Senator Everett may, but I do not. I am familiar with the principle to which Senator Everett refers. The same principle applies for taxing legislation: You must specifically provide for the imposition of a tax or for the imposition of a criminal offence. However, I say to both Senator Flynn and Senator Everett that it is left to the court to decide what is appropriate and just. It is not a matter of reading some sections of a statute, knowing that the court will interpret those sections and, in interpreting those sections, will apply the principle. This leaves it to the court to decide whether it is appropriate and just, and I think that is quite a distinction.

Senator Everett: I also think it is a distinction. I would merely point out or suggest that, if the honourable senator were representing a client who had been incarcerated for having breached that section, he would very quickly take an appeal.

Senator Frith: Yes, I would very quickly take an appeal.

Honourable senators, the point of all this is to reassure me that there is no problem. I am open to such reassurance, but I have to say that when I took the appeal the same words would be before the Court of Appeal. What could be argued on the other side would be that that is all very well, but the trial court made a decision it thought was appropriate and just.

Senator Flynn: To send someone to jail?

Senator Frith: It made a decision that it thought was appropriate and just. The argument would be that the words the lower court relied on were the words in the statute—that is “appropriate and just”. The Court of Appeal would have to deal with those words, just as the trial court did, and so would the Supreme Court.

I hope honourable senators are all reassured that I am giving a too draconian interpretation—and I probably am—and that you are reassured by Senators Everett and Flynn that there is nothing to worry about. Perhaps I am stretching it as to criminal possibilities, but not as to the civil.

Senator Doody: You must be flattered that people are listening so attentively.

Senator Frith: Yes, I am, but that is really another matter.

Under the basic principles of the act, the role of the commissioner, essentially, was to advance the principles of institutional bilingualism in the federal administration, and, of course, that meant the commissioner, as I said, played the role of an ombudsman, making recommendations to departments. The publicity, the recommendations to the Governor in Council and all of those sanctions were meant to bring about implementation of the policy.

• (1500)

Now departments can be taken to court. Departments of the federal government can actually be taken to court for not complying with recommendations and with the principles of the act, and even the principle, as I mentioned earlier—which I will not get into as being perhaps too arcane—that evidence of similar acts can be admitted into evidence against them, although normally evidence of similar acts is not admissible—that is, to attempt to prove that they had offended this time because they had done so before.

Honourable senators, I have, I suppose understandably—I hope understandably—spent more time on my reservations and my caveats or warning signals about this legislation than I have spent on my support for it, but I return to where I started. I believe that, essentially, this legislation, subject only to those caveats, is another step forward in the promotion of a very civilized Canadian tradition—one I believe we should all be proud of, the outstanding success of our experiment in linguistic justice and for justice between majority and minority. I hope it will soon become law.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to Senator Frith. I do not argue with most of the comments he made; however, in the premise to his remarks he did allude to the faithfulness of the French Canadians to the British Crown in the 1775-76 invasion by the Americans into the Canadian colony, as it was at that time.

Was he suggesting that a majority of French Canadians fought the invasion on the basis that they felt their language was being put at risk? I am not attempting to put words into the mouth of the Honourable Senator Frith; I am trying to understand why it was that he invoked that particular period in our history in relation to the Official Languages Act, which, of course, I support. Could he clear that up?

Senator Frith: Yes, I am glad to have the chance to do so, and I am glad the Honourable Senator Corbin put the question in the words he did, namely, “faithfulness to the British Crown”, because I do not want to give that impression at all. History is an art of interpretation.

I do not believe that the refusal to join the American Revolution was based either on faithfulness to the British Crown or on the feeling that language would be better protected if they resisted those blandishments.

My statement was that they did, for whatever reason, and that as a result thereof it could be said that there would not be a separate country in the northern half of North America if they had not done so, because of their strong majority position at that time.

And if we want to take it one step further, in my opinion, if, for their own reasons, instead of rejecting the call to join the American Revolution, they had joined it, I doubt that North America, since it would then be one country, would have two official languages today.

Senator Corbin: I do not want to engage in debate. Perhaps I can make that a topic of an inquiry at some other time, since we are pressed today and this week, but I would suggest today for the record that the French Canadians were loyal to the British Crown because the Bishop of Quebec got involved and saw grave danger to the Roman Catholic faith. It was on those grounds that he managed to scrounge enough French Canadians to support Guy Carleton, Lord Dorchester, to fight on the side of the British and to repulse the American attack.

The Americans were most inept. Even though they had managed to take St-Jean, Fort Chambly and Montreal, Lord Dorchester was able to flee in the middle of the night. He could thank the rapid currents and favourable winds of the night. He reached Quebec in safety. He locked himself in the citadel and threw out all of those who wanted to join the American Revolution. Had it not been for the ineptness of the logistics of American supplies and troops, the grave difficulties that Benedict Arnold encountered in the wilderness of Maine and the lower reaches of the Chaudière River, I think that history would have been reversed. Had that majority of French Canadians joined the American Revolution, we would be just another state of the Union today.

I do not think it had anything to do with language at that time. The reasons events unfolded as they did were based principally on considerations of religion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am glad to have that added to the record. I repeat what I said just a moment ago: the result was that there was a separate country for the northern half of North America, for whatever reason, and another for the southern half of North America, and I still say that, if it had been otherwise, North America, as one country, would not now have two official languages.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If Cleopatra's nose had been a millimetre longer, our world would not have looked the same.

[English]

Senator Frith: I am prepared to end this history lesson at any time, but I am also prepared to proceed with it.

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators should remember that the invasion by the Americans took place in 1775, if I remember correctly.

Senator Corbin: Correct.

Senator Tremblay: That was a year after the passage of the Quebec Act in 1774, which included at least one of our basic principles in the Constitution of 1867; that is, laws relating to civil rights and property.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if nothing else has come out of this debate, it has taught me a very valuable lesson: I will not mention Quebec's history in the discussions taking place this afternoon.

In any event, on behalf of Senator Murray, I should like to thank the participants in this debate and the Special Committee of the Senate in dealing so expeditiously with this bill. This is a very important piece of legislation, as has been pointed out by the people who have entered the debate.

I would simply like to thank the participants on behalf of the sponsor, Senator Murray.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 10:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Marshall, for the second reading of the Bill C-126, An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Bill C-126 is a short bill—several paragraphs in length and a total of 36 lines—but the size of the bill is certainly no indication of its importance nor is it any indication of the problems that the bill itself is attempting, through the International Monetary Fund, to deal with.

As Senator Phillips has told us, the International Monetary Fund, through the enhanced structural adjustment facility, will, it is hoped, receive an additional $10 billion in order to assist the poorest debtor developing countries. It is an indication of the continuing effort of the International Monetary Fund and the world community to cope with the problem of indebtedness.

Honourable senators, the indebtedness of the poorest countries dealt with in this bill is serious and acute, but it has not attracted the same international attention as have the debt problems of the middle income countries such as Brazil, Mexico and Argentina, because, in the main, the debt of these latter middle income countries is held by the commercial banks while the debt of the poorest countries is held by governments and international institutions. While the burden of the debt on the poorest countries is, in some cases, a crushing burden, nevertheless, its impact on the international financial community is not as great, because, if default took place, it would not threaten in the same way the commercial banks and, accordingly, the international financial community.

Much can be said about this subject, and I will certainly not take advantage of the patience of my colleagues in saying a great deal, but I should say that the Senate itself, through the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, dealt with the question of the international financial institutions and the debt problem of developing countries. That committee's report was published in April of last year and does, I think, contain a good analysis of the situation. It also contains some recommendations that are quite consistent with the action that is proposed in this bill. Honourable senators will note that on pages 120 and 121 of the Senate's report there are outlined the principle programs of the International Monetary Fund that were organized to help debtor countries experiencing longer-term debt servicing problems.

The most recent fund or facility, the Structural Adjustment Facility, was established in 1986 for the purpose of helping low income member countries with serious balance of payments problems to implement medium-term structural adjustments. Senator Phillips has pointed out that the Venice Summit took a further initiative and provided for what is now described in the bill as the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, which, presumably, is "enhanced", and so called because of the infusion of an additional $10 billion Canadian.

I should say, honourable senators, that Canada has always been a strong supporter of international financial institutions, including the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank and the regional development banks, to mention the principal ones. Accordingly, we have consistently dedicated a substantial proportion of our international assistance to the maintenance of a strong Canadian presence and a strong Canadian commitment to the viability of these international financial institutions, including the International Monetary Fund.

The Senate committee, after a good deal of evidence and discussion, and despite criticisms that have been made of the International Monetary Fund, did conclude that the fund had played a significant role in international financial assistance, rescheduling and stabilization, and that it ought to play a key role in the future. The fund has attracted criticism in making available assistance—either short-term balance-of-payments assistance or longer-term structural adjustment assistance to debtor countries—because it has at the same time insisted that the recipient countries undertake remedial measures to improve their economic performance. All of those remedial measures have not been easy to apply, have been very painful and, in some cases, have increased the hardship of the citizens of these particular countries.

One can debate the severity of the medicine applied by the International Monetary Fund in particular circumstances, but the Senate committee was of one mind in concluding that a chief responsibility for the economic improvement of all debtor countries rested with these countries themselves. It was clear to the committee that, in certain cases, the debt problem had gone out of control because of what we would describe as misguided economic policies. It was clear in the case of certain countries, particularly the middle-income countries—not the countries involved in this bill—that the public sector was extended so that the entrepreneurial spirit and private investment, particularly from abroad, were not greatly attracted to that kind of environment. It has to be emphasized that, as the international community comes forward to assist the debtor countries, there is a responsibility on the debtor countries to apply remedies of their own.

I should like to conclude rather quickly, honourable senators, in order to give the minister an opportunity to answer questions.

[Senator MacEachen.]

With respect to the middle-income debtor countries—Brazil, Mexico, Argentina and so on—the situation has somewhat improved. Certainly, the position of the commercial banks has somewhat improved. It is still a fact that the debt problem is one of the major international problems threatening the stability of the world economic system. If I am not mistaken, the summit leaders in Toronto took great pains to concentrate upon what further steps could be taken to improve the situation of the debtor countries, particularly the middle-income debtor countries.

In this particular bill, Canada, in accordance with its sound tradition and consistent performance of the past, is coming forward to make its contribution through this facility of the International Monetary Fund, which will help the poorest countries, particularly the poorest countries located in sub-Saharan Africa. The Senate committee drew particular attention to the situation of the low-income debtor countries. The report says:

... on a per capita basis, the debt of the low-income African countries is higher than that of Latin American debtors, their debt has grown faster and their debt service burden is as heavy or heavier. For many of the poorer debtor countries the outlook for the next ten years is bleak, and nowhere is it bleaker than in low-income Africa where even under optimistic assumptions, per capita incomes are projected to decline.

Senator Phillips, in introducing the second reading of the bill, used the expression that the intent was to assist countries "to maintain economic growth". Perhaps it would be better to say "to resist the decline of greater economic stagnation, particularly in low-income Africa." They are faced not with rising prosperity, not with greater economic growth, but with greater poverty. That is very worrying indeed. It does not represent the same threat to the international financial system, although it is not as good as the situation potentially in Latin America. However, it is certainly disturbing from an international humanitarian point of view.

Honourable senators, the committee report made the point, which I made earlier, to the effect that there is a pressing need for domestic economic policy reforms in those countries:

... many of them lack even the most basic infrastructure, as well as the cadre of trained personnel at almost every level in the government, ...

and reform is necessary in the industrial and financial sectors.

What is proposed in this bill is certainly much to be welcomed and much to be supported, because it will make a contribution. If it will not reverse the predicted decline in the economies of these countries, it will at least ameliorate the condition of distress and poverty that prevails in these countries.

Honourable senators, that is all I wish to say on this occasion.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), that this bill be now referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Robertson in the Chair.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is now in Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-126, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if it is the committee's pleasure, I would ask permission to escort Mr. Hockin, the Minister of State (Finance) into the chamber.

● (1530)

The Chairman: While Senator Doody is escorting the honourable minister in, shall the title be postponed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Carried.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance), was escorted to a seat in the Senate chamber.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to present the Minister of State (Finance), the Honourable Tom Hockin, who will be pleased to answer any questions you have on Bill C-126.

The Chairman: Thank you, Senator Doody.

Mr. Minister, we welcome you to the Senate this afternoon. Please feel comfortable in remaining seated while you answer our questions, if that is your wish.

You may have an opening statement, sir. Please proceed; the proceedings are in your hands.

Hon. Thomas Hockin, Minister of State (Finance): Madam Chairperson, I have an opening statement, but I was listening to the comments of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and in the last 15 minutes he summarized what this bill tries to do. I have also read what has been said before in this chamber on the subject. I think it might be redundant for me to give an introductory set of comments.

However, there are two things that I might say. First, this facility is different from the standby facility that the IMF ordinarily operates. This is meant to build on the productive capacity of a country rather than to solve the demand problems that exist with the balance of payments of the recipient countries.

Second, it gives a longer pay-back period, which gives flexibility, which is very welcomed by these countries. I think these points have been acknowledged in this chamber.

I might make a couple of comments. The Leader of the Opposition said that he thought things were better for the middle-income countries. I would make two distinctions here.

First, they are operating with more presence of commercial banks. I would not be as optimistic as he is about the situation improving. There are great difficulties, especially now with Argentina, the relationship with the IMF and working out an arrangement with the commercial banks. So, although this bill does not speak to that, I would not be quite as optimistic as he was at this stage. Maybe we will have good news in a few weeks, but the situation that we are seeing with middle-income countries is not encouraging.

I would also suggest that this is not a facility just to slow down the inevitable sinking of these economies, which was another reference that I heard ten minutes ago. There are some economies in the sub-Sahara and Africa as well that will grow. They will not just see their problems temporarily, in a palliative sense, dealt with, but will in fact grow.

With those two caveats, I should like to make myself available for questions.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Honourable senators, do you have questions for the minister?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am pleased that the minister has referred to my comment about the future prospects of the African countries, because I intended to ask him whether he had a view on the projection contained in the Senate report of last April in which it is stated—and I will repeat the sentence again—that:

For many of the poorer debtor countries the outlook for the next ten years is bleak, and nowhere is it bleaker than in low-income Africa where, even under optimistic assumptions, per capita incomes are projected to decline.

I want to ask the minister whether in the interim it would be possible to say that that is now a valid projection and that, instead of the decline of per capita incomes, there may be at least a levelling off or some slight increase.

Mr. Hockin: No; I would say that the projection is still accurate. From what I know, and from the briefings that I have had, the projection is still accurate. It is just that there will be some countries that will show some success.

Senator MacEachen: To use the wording in the Senate report, "it is a bleak outlook", and it is still bleak. Low-income Africa is in bad shape. Therefore, whatever we can do to help is quite justified.

Another question, if I may address it to the minister, is the question which I addressed earlier to Senator Phillips when he introduced the second reading of the bill, namely, the question of whether the United States had contributed. The answer is, "No. The United States is not contributing to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility."

It is not a new incident in that the United States has failed in recent years to measure up to its international responsibilities not only in contributing to the World Bank but also other multinational organizations. I deplore that.

What I ask the minister is: Can you throw any light on the reasons which the United States has advanced for not coming forward? Is the problem in the administration or in the Congress? In the circumstances of no contribution from the United States, has the burden for other countries been increased, and is the United States of a mind to pick up its contribution at a later date?

I know that Canada has no control over this now any more than it did in the past, but we should maintain the pressure on the United States to pick up its responsibilities.

Mr. Hockin: The U.S. government has informed the IMF that it is not in a position to make a contribution at this time.

For the moment the United States administration has given priority to ensuring that the general capital increase for the World Bank is approved by Congress. It is not going too far to say that the chances of that are good. It is a good, strong capital increase that they are coming forth with. That, hopefully, will be done soon.

It is my hope, though, that the new administration that will take office early in 1989—be it Republican or Democrat—will review the U.S. position on a contribution to the enhanced facility.

The reasons they give are simply ones of priorities. They simply say that the World Bank capital increase is vital, and they want it to be a meaningful increase. Indeed, what is before the Congress is quite meaningful—I think $74 billion is being looked at. Therefore, that is where the priority lies, and I think it is fair to say that we have not had the enhanced facility underfunded but that it has been quite well funded. Mr. Camdessus has done quite a good job of filling his hat as he has taken it from capital to capital.

● (1540)

Senator MacEachen: Presumably, when the fund was created—and Senator Phillips has told us that this particular facility was initiated at the Venice Summit—am I to believe that at the Venice Summit the summit leaders approved the facility and the President of the United States said: "No, I will not contribute."? Can you throw any light on that?

Mr. Hockin: Yes, I am informed that the President of the United States, at the Venice Summit, indicated that the United States would not be contributing.

Senator MacEachen: Very well. The United States has not had a good record on the World Bank with respect to the capital increase and other efforts to provide resources to the World Bank. Within the World Bank there was a principle of burden-sharing, and at times when the United States failed to come forward other contributors were appealing to the principle of burden-sharing to bring in the United States. That failed, and other countries, including Canada, had to make temporary provisions for the failure of the United States to participate.

What I am asking here is: Has it been necessary for other countries to ante up more because the United States has failed to come forward, or has the total funding been reduced because of the failure of the United States to come forward? Further, what amount would be expected from the United States toward the amount required for the facility which Senator Phillips reported was $10 billion Canadian? In other words, how much is being lost because of the failure of the United States to ante up?

Mr. Hockin: There are two questions there, senator. On the first question of the United States not participating in burden-sharing within the World Bank, I think that your characterization is not a fair one. The United States has carried its burden within the World Bank and will continue to do so. As I have said in my previous answer—and the administration has fought very hard for this—it looks as though Congress will be coming forward with a substantial contribution, which will be, as I have said, over $70 billion.

Senator MacEachen: I disagree with the minister, because there have been circumstances within the past five years—or certainly with the past eight years—when the United States has failed to carry its burden in the World Bank and, as a consequence, other countries, including Canada, have had to make special arrangements. I do not think the minister should let the U.S. off the hook so easily.

Mr. Hockin: I would defer to the senator's memory with respect to the historical aspects of these matters. However, the point I am trying to make is that the Americans feel that they have been sharing the burden generally within the World Bank. There may have been years when their sharing was not what the senator would have liked. However, I am reminding the senator that the fact that they have not yet agreed to a contribution through the U.S. Congress should not be regarded as a done deal. It looks very much as though they will be contributing, and contributing substantially.

Senator MacEachen: What, then, would their share be?

Mr. Hockin: Senator, do you mean to the World Bank or to the IMF?

Senator MacEachen: I mean to the Extended Fund Facility.

Mr. Hockin: I think their share in the World Bank is close to $74 billion. With respect to the Enhanced Facility, I think their share would be around $2 billion of the $8 billion or $9 billion total.

Senator MacEachen: In any event, I do not want to stay on that point, but I think it is worthwhile to underline that the U.S., even though this program was approved at the summit, has failed to come forward and that that failure is not a new failure in terms of its support for international financial institutions, including the World Bank, and I can only say that—

Mr. Hockin: Senator, may I just say this in response: I think that all senators are aware that the Government of Canada has been pressing the U.S. to carry its burden in both the World Bank and the IMF. Indeed, we have expressed our disappointment that they are not participating in this facility, and we think they should be so participating.

Senator MacEachen: Madam Chairman, I certainly appreciate that statement by the minister, and I believe that it is important that Canada continue to express its disappointment and to press the U.S. on this matter.

May I turn to one or two other points having to do with the purposes for which these funds are being provided? As the name implies, it is intended to assist debtor countries or low-income countries to undertake structural adjustments rather than to assist them with their short-term liquidity problems. I take it for granted that, in extending funding to a country under this facility, there will be programs or policy reforms that will be recommended by the International Monetary Fund. My question is: For the benefit of the committee, would it be possible for us to have a list of the countries that are eligible, or may be eligible, for this funding? Further, if any have already received funding, could we have some information on the kind of policy reforms that those countries have been asked to undertake and over what period of time?

Mr. Hockin: I have a list here of the low-income developing members who are eligible for assistance under the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility. It contains the names of almost 50 countries, and I could table this with the Senate, if you wish.

Senator MacEachen: That would be helpful.

Mr. Hockin: Just to give you the flavour, a number of countries, such as China and India, have quotas here which they are not exercising. In other words, at the present time they will not be moving in and taking the place of a sub-Saharan country that badly needs assistance under this program. They are eligible to do so, but they will not necessarily be taking up their quota. Therefore, this list indicates the quota to which each of the listed countries is eligible. However, they may not, in fact, take up the quota for which they are eligible. For example, of the total $8.7 billion, India's share is $2.2 billion and the People's Republic of China's share is $2.4 billion. Adding both of those amounts together, that is equal to almost half of the total fund. However, both of those countries have said that they will stand aside and let the other countries take up their quota.

In any event, senator, I will table that document.

Senator MacEachen: Madam Chairman, if it is convenient for the minister, perhaps he would mention a few of the African countries that are eligible and the sums for which they may be eligible.

Mr. Hockin: I would be glad to, senator.

Benin, $31 million; Burundi, $42 million; Chad, $30 million; Djibouti, $8 million; Equatorial Guinea, $18 million; Ethiopia $70.6 million; Gambia $17 million; Ghana $204 million. There is a country, from what I understand, that has a chance for economic growth, but it is difficult to predict these things. Guinea, $52 million; Guinea-Bissau, $7.5 million; Kenya, $142 million; Madagascar, $66 million; Liberia, $71 million; Lesotho, $15 million; Maldives, $2 million; Malawi, $37 million; Mali $50 million; Mauritania, $33.9 million; Mozambique, $61 million; Niger $33 million; Rwanda, $43 million; Senegal, $85 million; Sierra Leone, $57 million; Somalia, $44 million; Togo, $38 million; Uganda, $99 million; and Zambia, $270 million. That gives you some flavour of the African recipients and the quotas they are eligible for.

Let me move to what the program is to be used for. Adjustment programs supported by these resources will concentrate heavily on measures to improve the supply or the productive capacity of the economy concerned rather than on some of the other things dealt with by the standby line of credit. For example, policies that encourage more efficient investment decisions or establish producer prices that ensure an adequate return to farmers will be a focus of these programs. I am also told that improved macroeconomic management will also be carefully monitored, but the supply capacity of each recipient economy is to be the centrepoint of the adjustment program.

The second characteristic is that the time horizon for bringing about policy reform will be longer with this facility in recognition of the limited implementation capacity of many of the governments of the poorest countries and the very severe difficulties they face.

Senator MacEachen: Would the program be a five-year or a ten-year one? How long will it extend?

Mr. Hockin: It can extend for up to 12 years under this facility.

Senator MacEachen: Madam Chairman, may I ask if any countries have received funding under this facility?

Mr. Hockin: I do not have an update and my official does not have an update, but some countries have received funds under this facility, yes.

Senator MacEachen: I wonder if we could have that information at some later point. I do not want to insist upon it today, but I would find it useful to have a list of the countries that have received funding and a list of the program reforms which the IMF has asked for in those countries.

Mr. Hockin: I would be glad to see that that is done. It might be helpful if I gave you some kind of flavour of what kind of policy reforms are expected under this particular facility. Some typical examples would be the removal of price controls, the posting of real interest rates in the country, reduced fiscal deficits and more open trade or less restrictive trade. These are the sorts of things this facility could encourage.

Senator MacEachen: It is not my intention to belittle in any way the importance of this additional facility. However, when one hears that a sum, for example, of $142 million is available to a country like Kenya, one thinks that it is a relatively modest amount. Can this amount for which Kenya is eligible under this fund be combined with other resources, from, for example, the World Bank and other countries, to make a more impressive package of financial resources that would have a greater impact?

Mr. Hockin: The honourable senator has raised a good point. As a matter of fact, I met this morning with the Minister of Finance from Kenya and we discussed this point. They are eligible for other mixes of finances from, for example, the Paris Club and other facilities within the IMF and the World Bank. When I asked him whether he would like to have received a greater quota, he said that he would, but that it was not a great concern because they have good access to a mix of programs available. Of course, these countries also look to bilateral programs with Canada and other countries. For example, Kenya is in a position where it can really take advantage of this benefit, as their economy is much stronger than the economies of some of the other sub-Saharan countries.

Senator MacEachen: Madam Chairman, I have a question about terminology used in the bill and terminology used by Senator Phillips. Clause 1, which adds a new section 5.1(1), tells us that the minister may lend the IMF a sum not exceeding $550 million. Senator Phillips told us that the bill will authorize a Canadian contribution. I wonder whether that contribution is intended to be a loan. It does not have quite the same flavour to say that it is a contribution when, in reality, it is a loan.

Mr. Hockin: Canada's proposed contribution of about $550 million Canadian will come from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It will be considered a non-budgetary expenditure. As a loan, it is secured by the IMF trust fund which guarantees it, and it will pay market interest rates. This amount will be paid out over three years; so a cheque will not be written tomorrow for the total amount. There is also provision for a second contribution, which will be a grant. It is necessary to bring the interest rate and Canada's contribution down to 0.5 per cent. Our contribution to that grant is $250 million, and it will be doled out, chunk by chunk, to buy down the interest rate as this facility is used. It is not expected to be over $30 million per year. That, of course, is a budgetary item, and that is coming out of our ODA budget.

• (1600)

Senator MacEachen: Do I understand you correctly that the $550 million is a loan?

Mr. Hockin: That is right.

[Mr. Hockin.]

Senator MacEachen: A loan that attracts an adequate rate of return?

Mr. Hockin: That is right.

Senator MacEachen: And am I correct that the grant basically reduces the interest burden to the recipient of that loan?

Mr. Hockin: We are not unique here.

Senator MacEachen: I want to understand the process. The $550 million is an investment, in a sense, and it is, therefore, a non-budgetary item. We receive interest on it.

Mr. Hockin: That is right, and it is guaranteed by the trust fund of the IMF.

Senator MacEachen: Let us say that it is welcomed by those countries, but it is not an item of expenditure by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Hockin: No, it is a non-budgetary item; that is right.

Senator MacEachen: And the beef is the grant.

Mr. Hockin: That is right, and we pay down the interest rate through this grant.

Senator MacEachen: May I just conclude by going back to a comment which the minister made on the middle-income countries and middle-income debtor countries? I had expressed the view that their situation was somewhat better and that the situation of the banks was somewhat better. Perhaps I am quite wrong on that, but I thought, for example, Mexico was significantly better off than it had been. Brazil, I understand, has not yet worked out its arrangements with the IMF, but it has softened its stand on its moratorium on debt payments. I had the view that the situation had eased to some extent, and I would appreciate the views of the minister, who is much closer to these situations than I am.

Mr. Hockin: It is not helpful to characterize the whole basket of countries called "middle-income countries" as situations that are improving or deteriorating. One has to break into the basket and look at it country by country.

I am concerned with the situation relating to Argentina. The balance of payments situation has deteriorated there. Their budget deficit has increased. They are having trouble structuring any kind of relationship with commercial banks or the IMF. That is a great concern. That was in the foreground of my thinking when I thought of these countries. There are other countries, amongst middle-income countries, where things are improving. I would not be Pollyanna-ish about the situation, because we are still at a very difficult stage.

Senator MacEachen: Mexico has bettered its situation.

Mr. Hockin: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: And Brazil is less militant in its international outlook.

Mr. Hockin: Yes, but that is a worry too.

Senator MacEachen: They are cause for concern, but I suppose it is a matter of the degree of worry—that is, where the worry is registered on the thermometer.

The Chairman: If there are no further questions of the minister, I thank him very much for coming this afternoon.

Mr. Hockin: Thank you, Madam Chairman.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Senator MacEachen: I would just make a comment before the bill is reported and draw the attention of honourable senators to the final sentence, which is as follows:

Any sum or sums required for the purposes of this section shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I do not expect Mr. Hockin to understand why I am saying that, but it relates to a speech I made yesterday dealing with the question of appropriation bills. This, presumably, is an appropriation of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Senator Barootes: It is a money bill.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Madam Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill without amendment.

The Chairman: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-126, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

BILL TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF CHAPLEAU—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of the Bill C-308, An Act to change the name of the electoral district of Chapleau.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to support this bill.

I was not here during the debate yesterday, but I did read the Debates so I know what Senator Flynn had to say. I also know about the question asked by Senator Molgat to which Senator Flynn was going to respond today. I shall give him an opportunity to do that.

Senator Flynn may not have noticed, since I do not imagine he narcissistically reads his own speeches as I do, but, since he knows that the member is a woman, I would point out that a masculine pronoun is used in the Debates of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: I spoke in French.

Senator Frith: Then the problem is with the translation, when it says that, according to the present member, "his" constituents are very unhappy about the change.

Senator Flynn: I spoke in French.

Senator Frith: It would be "sa".

I believe we should support this bill. The only reservation I have is the one raised by Senator Molgat. If Senator Flynn can assure us on that point, I think we should pass the bill without referring it to committee.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I want to thank Senator Frith for his comments. It would, of course, be a very serious, mistake to overlook the fact that the member is a woman.

According to the information I obtained in answer to Senator Molgat's question, no representations were made at that particular stage, and I am referring to when the Electoral Boundaries Commission wrote its report, because at the time, no one was terribly concerned about the fact that they were going to change the name from Gatineau to Chapleau.

However, subsequent reactions from constituents in her riding made Mrs. Mailly decide to take the step of tabling a bill to restore the former name, while adding another name, La Lièvre, which designates the northern part of the riding. Constituents in this area felt somewhat left out and there was a request to have them represented in the riding's name.

No formal representations were made, so that the Electoral Boundaries Commission did not have a chance to consider changing the name of Chapleau which had been suggested. Apparently, the name designates a provincial riding located in this particular part of the province.

Senator Frith: So that's the reason.

Senator Flynn: That is probably why the Electoral Boundaries Commission chose the name Chapleau.

My enquiries confirmed, however, what I said yesterday. Mr. Chapleau, as a public figure, had no particular ties with the riding of Gatineau, and if I remember correctly, Adolphe Chapleau was from the Montreal area.

Nevertheless, as I said yesterday, he was a figure of some renown in the political history of the province of Quebec.

Senator Frith: I understand he had no connection with this particular part of the province.

Senator Flynn: That is correct. But there was a club north of Montreal called the Chapleau Club, which was a very nice hunting and fishing establishment. Maybe the club's territory was near this particular region and Mr. Chapleau went hunting or fishing in the area.

I seem to have upset the Speaker pro tempore by referring to the opportunities afforded Mr. Chapleau to go to this club, but the Speaker pro tempore can hardly complain, since Charlevoix is splendid hunting and fishing territory as well!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

THIRD READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Tomorrow morning we may have quite a few items on the agenda and at least this item will have been dealt with.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, although normally we would want to consider a bill in a standing committee or Committee of the Whole, in this instance there is no minister responsible for this bill. We can say we have had a mini-Committee of the Whole, with explanations provided by Senator Flynn.

I therefore second the motion of Senator Flynn.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doyle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the second reading of the Bill C-82, An Act respecting the registration of lobbyists.—(Honourable Senator Olson, P.C.).

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, we have looked at Bill C-82 and recognized that it is designed to give a certain amount of transparency to lobbying activities that are taking place on Parliament Hill, and we agree with that. There is no question that a number of associations, partnerships, corporations, or whatever, have grown up on Parliament Hill and around Ottawa which do lobbying, or what we refer to as "lobbying". It has been suspected that these activities have been taking place in back rooms; now it has been decided that those lobbyists should be registered.

To get to the next question—that is, whether one supports what Bill C-82 does about achieving that objective—I am not sure whether we agree with the bill or not.

At the outset—this will be a brief speech—we will not object to giving the bill second reading and referring it to committee, where we can obtain some explanations.

I have read the bill more than once, and I have read the explanations that were given in the other place at several of the stages, and, quite frankly, I am concerned with the intent of the bill, however honest it might be, which is to achieve a level of transparency yet, at the same time, not interfere with the legitimate right of citizens to advise or try to persuade members of the legislative bodies of both houses of Parliament of their opinions and their views on certain subjects. The bill is really not clear in that regard.

In fairness, I can also say that perhaps the government is not quite sure what will be adequate and yet will not interfere with what I have just mentioned.

It is suggested that we set up a registry, in the first place, and then find out what the regulations will be afterwards. Senator Doyle, who introduced the bill yesterday, said that there are to be no regulations—that this is simply a registry. "Tier I" type lobbyists will register for that purpose and "Tier II" lobbyists will register for another purpose. In the case of "Tier II" lobbyists, they will not be asked for any more information than is contained on a business card—that is, one's name, address and telephone number.

Perhaps that is true, but I think that the penalties provided here—for example, a $25,000 fine for someone who fails to comply with this bill—are such that we need to be somewhat careful about those we are requiring to be registered.

I suppose lawyers are the ones in the most peculiar position.

Senator Barootes: That's fine; make it difficult for them.

Senator Olson: Senator Barootes says, "That's fine; make it difficult for them." But there are many things I do not agree with that lawyers sometimes do—

Senator Frith: What?

Senator Olson: Part of their business is to make representations on behalf of someone else. It happens in court and it happens on Parliament Hill. I think we need to be reasonably careful that at least they know what is expected of them if they are going to do this form of advocacy, and that is not clear in this bill.

● (1620)

If I am to keep my promise to myself and several others to make this speech brief, perhaps I should advise honourable senators that we are prepared to let this bill go to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, where we can hear more detailed explanations of these points. Honourable senators, I do not think that I can honestly and fairly say that I am in favour of the bill; I simply do not know. I have to say this, though: I am not in favour of setting up a restriction under which citizens cannot legitimately make representations with respect to matters of concern to them in the public domain. That, in my view, would be a disservice to them.

In any event, I am prepared to let the bill go to committee. I hope that somebody in the government—the minister, his parliamentary secretary or a member of the bureaucracy within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I think it is the Deputy Registrar General who will administer this act—has at least some idea of how the government intends to define certain kinds of activity and who is expected to comply with what is in this bill. Or does this simply constitute an attempt to get started on a registry, and we will move on from there to whatever seems to be the appropriate improvements?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to whoever may be able to answer it. If a member of this chamber were to declare himself or herself and were therefore to go into the registry, would that person automatically “come a cropper” under the Senate and House of Commons Act, which is far more precise?

Senator Olson: If the honourable senator is addressing that question to me, I want to make it clear right now that I am no expert on this bill. I believe, however, that some exemptions are made in it and that those exemptions include senators. As to the exact definition, description or anticipated circumstances Senator MacDonald had in mind when he asked the question, however, I am not sure.

Senator Frith: That is a good question for the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Mira Spivak moved the second reading of Bill C-112, to amend the Canada Grain Act and other acts in consequence thereof.

She said: Honourable senators, it is a pleasure to speak today on the amendments to the Canada Grain Act.

The federal government has been working with producers and other representatives of the grains and oilseeds industry to make federal programs and agencies more efficient. The amendments to the Canada Grain Act that we are discussing today fall into this category and are designed to serve the Canadian grain producer. The proposed amendments were made in consultation with, and have the support of, the industry.

Honourable senators, this is the first time in 17 years that any substantial changes have been made to this act. First passed in 1912, the Canada Grain Act has not undergone major revision since 1971. The proposed amendments will standardize and clarify the terminology used in the act and will update the legislation to reflect industry developments. In addition, the amendments will provide clarification for the industry concerning the Canadian Grain Commission's regulatory role and authority.

Honourable senators, the Canada Grain Act provides the framework for the Canadian Grain Commission's operation. The commission maintains Canada's high quality standards and regulates grain handling. The amendments to the act, as I have said, are generally to provide more efficient and effective administration of this legislation and to update its terminology. The amendments also clarify the protection offered to persons dealing with licensees.

By way of background, the amendments change some definitions used in the act. Since the act was last amended in 1971 the structure and practices of the industry have changed so that many terms that are now used are out of date and many current terms are not included. This type of amendment eliminates confusion in the industry about the provisions of the act and the authority of the commission.

The amendments give the commission the authority to limit the length of time producers may leave their grain unpriced and the length of time licensed grain elevators and grain dealers may delay payment to producers who have delivered grain to them. The amendments specify which documents issued, according to the act, will be protected by security posted by licensees and also specify that only grain producers are protected, and that for only one year.

Setting time limits—for example, 90 days—for both the pricing of and the payment for grain would reduce financial risks for all parties concerned and would reduce the amount of security that licensees would need to provide. It would also increase the efficiency of the elevator system by limiting the amount of grain in long-term storage. Limiting the length of time that documents are covered by security to one year would also reduce the level of security required by licensees.

In substance, and in a little more detail, the amendments to the Canada Grain Act provide, first, for clarification and standardization of the terminology used in the act. The term “minister”, for example, is defined not just as the Minister of Agriculture but as any other minister. Terms like “cash purchase ticket” have been redefined, the word “chemist” has been changed to “scientist”, and so on.

The amendments to the Canada Grain Act also provide for the authority to establish by regulation, subject to Governor in Council approval, time limits for the deferral of pricing, the storage of grain in elevators and the payments for grain by licensed elevators and grain dealers; the limitation of protection of securities posted with the commission to actual producers holding cash purchase tickets, elevator receipts or grain receipts to a period of one year from the date of delivery of the grain, and the clarification of which documents are to be issued by licensed elevators and grain dealers. The documents will be: cash purchase tickets, elevator receipts, grain receipts and so on.

The amendments also provide for the consolidation of authority to establish and change grades by regulation of the commission, subject to Governor in Council approval. Now certain classes of grain, spring wheat and durum wheat and grades are in the act; others—for example, canola—are in the regulations.

The amendments also provide for the flexibility to package and certify specific qualities of grain as required to serve particular markets, as, for example, when customers wish to purchase on specification rather than on established grades. Some buyers may object to certain grade names, such as “feed wheat”, on grain to be used for human consumption. Certain countries request mixtures, for example, such as canola and mustard.

The amendments also provide for specific terms of office for commissioners and assistant commissioners. The term of office for a commissioner, for example, will be up to seven years. The bill also provides for staggered terminations of appointment, which will provide continuity to the commission's leadership. It establishes a term of office of five years for assistant commissioners. Since they have less responsibility, a five-year term is suitable.

The amendments provide for raising penalties for contraventions of the act to three times the current levels. This follows changes to other acts administered by Agriculture Canada. The increases are designed to reflect inflation over the years. These penalties are maximums, with no minimums specified, and they provide substantial flexibility.

● (1630)

The Canadian Grain Commission has helped Canada maintain a solid reputation as a reliable supplier of high quality grain and grain products. The amendments discussed today should make it easier for the commission to operate, which will be good news for everyone involved in the industry.

Those are my brief remarks regarding the amendments to this act.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, we welcome the explanation that Senator Spivak has provided. The Canada Grain Act has for many years governed grain standards, the operation in many ways of our country elevator system, the setting of standards for export grain and so on. This act has historically been placed on the statute books for the protection of the producer. From time to time it is necessary to bring the statute up to date and provide certain necessary amendments.

However, there is a feeling—and it has been clearly expressed—that one of the underlying purposes of this legislation is to make it possible for the government to appoint a current member of Parliament to the position of chairman of the board. We know that provision is being made to make the position more secure, namely, to make it a seven-year appointment.

However, I do welcome the amendments to this act. Over the years appointments to the Canadian Wheat Board have not been of a political nature. That, of course, is not true with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Some years ago two commissioners, who I think were quite able, were dismissed. One can only feel that that was done for political reasons.

I should like to attest to the effectiveness of this legislation—the Canada Grain Act as it now stands—and I am sure that the amendment will bring about improvements. Some years ago I had the privilege to travel to China. I was at one of their main ports and, with a Chinese official in the grain business, was able to witness the unloading of a ship named Amundsen D, which, we were told, was the second-largest grain boat in the world at the time. With their technology at that time, they used a large scoop to scoop the grain from the boat and move it over and dump it into an open railway car. I asked the Chinese official whose grain—it was wheat—was being unloaded. He said that it was Canadian wheat. I said, “How can you tell?” He said, “Not much dust.” He told us if the boat had been from the United States we would not have been able to see the unloading process, because they do not clean their grain for export. They provide the grain, and the sample is taken at a later date for pricing and commercial transactions. The process that Canada uses has stood the Canadian grain industry and the producers in good stead for many years.

I am sure there are technical improvements to the current legislation before us, and we would welcome a chance to discuss them in the Agriculture Committee.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, as Senator Spivak has said, the last time major amendments were made to the Canada Grain Act was in 1971. I was the minister responsible for those amendments. I hope the present amendments do not cause as much difficulty as the 1971 amendments did. I can tell Senator Spivak and other senators that on three occasions the committee sat well into the night—until two o'clock and three o'clock in the morning. In fact, on one occasion the committee sat until 7.30 a.m. There were a couple of Conservative members who caused that drawn-out committee meeting.

Senator Flynn: That was unusual.

Senator Olson: That was not unusual; it happened all the time. If anyone here believes that some Conservative members are not capable of so-called dilly-dallying, they should have a lesson in history. As a matter of fact, the last time the Canada Grain Act was amended we had to call Parliament back between Christmas Day and New Year's Day. So, if you think that sitting a few days in July is a great sacrifice, think about what happened in that case.

That bill dealt with major amendments to the Canada Grain Act. There was also another bill at that time—a marketing bill—that the Conservatives were opposed to. Now they are running all over Canada defending those bills and the marketing boards that came out of those bills. Things change over time.

Senator Doody: Some things never change.

Senator Olson: The more some things change the more they stay the same. Having given that history, I do not want to get into the technical details, because I am sure these amendments need to be made and I accept Senator Spivak's explanation as to why these amendments need to be made. However, I do not accept her conclusion with respect to changing the tenure. I think the government will regret changing it from the present wording, which reads "at pleasure", to a fixed term. I do not believe any government should have to contend with appointed officials who are not carrying out their duties. If the term of office is seven years and you try to dismiss them before the end of the term, it becomes a very messy business.

Senator MacDonald: Impossible!

Senator Olson: Nearly impossible. I could name a couple of people, but I do not think it would serve any useful purpose to drag those names into the debate. I can see there are some senators here who know their names. Some newspapers, including The Co-operator, have reported that the government wants to provide security of office for a present member of Parliament. If you have confidence that you will be elected again, you do not need to change it from the present wording, "at pleasure". I guess you have lost confidence in your ability to lead the government three or four years down the road, at least that it is how it appears, and that is why you wish to have an irrevocable seven-year contract arrangement.

I have seen a situation in which a government appointed people who did not do their job. It was an impossible situation. There was so-called "good behaviour" tenure, which was, as Senator MacDonald said, nearly impossible to change. If you change the act to a term of seven years, I am sure this government and future governments will regret it.

● (1640)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators I must inform the Senate that if Senator Spivak speaks now her speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Spivak: With regard to the comments of Senator Argue and Senator Olson, I have some information here which I want to share with them gratuitously.

First, the appointments are up to seven years and they provide for staggered termination of appointments. That is, you could appoint one individual for one or two years, another individual for five years and another individual for seven years.

Senator Nurgitz: How do you like it so far?

Senator Olson: Okay. Can I ask you a question?

Senator Spivak: That is my understanding. Don't push me any further!

An Hon. Senator: Push him!

Senator Frith: No special privileges! Push away! No immunity!

Senator Spivak: I saw him getting up, and I wanted to continue.

Senator Frith: No immunities for "pushees".

Senator Spivak: Right! I want to share with you some information, which I am sure most of you know, without getting into a whole debate on whether "tenure" or "at pleasure" is better, on a number of agencies with tenure appointments. I will read them for your information.

The CBC is five years; the National Transportation Agency is five years; the CRTC is seven years; the National Energy Board is seven years; the Bank of Canada is seven years; the Veterans Appeal Board is seven years; the National Parole Board is ten years; and the Canada Pension Commission is ten years.

Senator Petten: That is what I was waiting for!

Senator Frith: Please do not get to the Senate!

Senator Spivak: And then there is the Senate . . . !

Of course, all of these tenured terms were initiated long before my coming here and long before the coming of this government to office.

Senator Olson: I do not want to be pushy, honourable senators, but can I ask one question?

Senator Spivak: You can ask.

Senator Olson: Well, I will try, anyway.

You said that it is not for seven years; it is up to seven years.

Senator Spivak: That is my understanding.

Senator Olson: But if you appoint someone for seven years and after three years you find out that you do not like him and do not want him, what do you do then?

Senator Doody: Sue him!

Senator Barootes: Make him a deputy minister!

Senator Spivak: Perhaps we could get the answers to some of those questions at third reading or in committee.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, would Senator Spivak permit a question?

Senator Spivak: Yes.

Senator Molgat: Could she indicate to us whether there have been any difficulties at the Canadian Grain Commission with the present wording? Is the reason for the change that there have been problems?

Senator Spivak: Senator Molgat, I will endeavour to get the answer to that question as well before third reading.

Senator Frith: Or in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Spivak, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-132, to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

He said: Honourable senators, it is a pleasure to be able to speak in this chamber today on the amendments to the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Over the last few years Canadian farmers have been hit hard by forces beyond their control—first by low grain prices and now, as you know, by a severe drought. In both situations the federal government has responded quickly with programs to cushion the producers from the impact of these two anomalies.

Right now the drought is one of our most pressing concerns. The government is working with provincial governments and producer groups to help farmers deal with the severe dry conditions. A federal-provincial coordinating committee on drought was established this spring.

The federal government has increased the PFRA budget by $12 million to help farmers and communities find new water supplies. Livestock producers will receive assistance worth up to $153 million through a recently announced federal-provincial program.

The federal government has put programs in place to help farmers meet short-term needs during periods of bad weather and low prices, but it also has some long-term plans for the agricultural sector. The Western Grain Stabilization Act amendments are part of Canada's overall plan to strengthen the future of Canadian agriculture.

The Prime Minister announced changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Act last December as part of a series of comprehensive agricultural initiatives, and they were brought to this house. These initiatives make up the largest agricultural assistance package in the history of Canada.

Some of the initiatives announced by the Prime Minister will help producers meet their most pressing short-term needs. The extension of the Special Canadian Grains Program has put $1.1 billion directly in the hands of Canadian farmers. The extension of the Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program will save our producers $200 million a year over the next two years. Funding for farm debt review boards will continue. These boards have already helped some 2,000 producers stay on their land. Additional funding for the Farm Credit Corporation will help that corporation continue in its role as an important lending institution for our farmers.

On the longer-term needs, the federal government is also putting programs in place to help our agricultural industry remain strong and stable in the future. Over $100 million will be spent on joint ventures with the provinces. Some of the areas involved include soil conservation projects, establishing a national agricultural biotechnology centre and providing farm management training and research on ethanol blended gasolines.

The federal government is also doing an overall review of farm safety net programs. This summer ministers are meeting with producer groups to discuss further initiatives in income stabilization for producers.

This is where the Western Grain Stabilization Act comes into the picture. The WGSa is the main source of income support for grain farmers facing fluctuating world prices.

World grain prices took a severe nosedive in the last few years because of a subsidy battle in the international marketplace. Prices are on their way up again, but farmers are still recovering from a long period of low prices. WGSa was created to cushion farmers from such a drop in prices, and the program has done exactly that.

Close to $1.4 billion went out to about 135,000 farmers on the Western Grain Stabilization Program in the 1986-87 crop year.

Senator Olson: One hundred thirty-five thousand what?

• (1650)

Senator Barootes: One hundred and thirty-five thousand farmers benefited. This amount was paid out in the calendar year 1987.

However, approximately 15 per cent of western farmers are not enrolled in the program. Amendments to the act are aimed at encouraging these producers to join in the following ways: The 10 per cent penalty for rejoining will be removed; the deadline for participation in the 1987-88 crop year will be extended so that producers can rejoin up to 60 days after the proclamation of this legislation, which we think could probably bring them to October of this year. In other words, they can rejoin up until then.

Additionally, more crops will be covered under this program: Triticale, which is a rye/wheat hybrid, mixed grain, sunflower seed, safflower seed, buckwheat, peas, lentils, fava beans and canary seed. Every grain that is mentioned in the Canada Grain Act is included in the WGSa, except corn, soybeans and edible beans. Those products, as you know, fall under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

Producers who rejoin the program and conditional participants will receive higher payments under the amended program than under the present program. For example, a rejoining producer with maximum sales will receive a payment equal to 70 per cent of the maximum individual payment. Previously, producers who rejoined received only 30 per cent of the full payment.

Let me give you an example of that. Based on the interim payment made in May, a full participant with $60,000 in eligible sales would receive $14,500. A rejoining producer with the same amount of eligible sales would receive about $10,000. Without the program changes that are being made, and the amendments to this program under this bill, the re-enrolling producer would have received approximately $4,350, which is less than half of what he will now be entitled to.

The Producer Advisory Committee to the Western Grain Stabilization Program will be expanded under this bill. Right now this committee consists of five members, including the chairman. At present two are from Alberta, two are from Saskatchewan and one is from Manitoba. The amendments will increase the committee membership to eight, including the chairman. This will allow one more member to be added for each of the three prairie provinces and will result in slightly better regional representation; it will also make it easier to obtain a quorum.

Finally, measures are being taken to eliminate the deficit in the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Some you may recall that last winter in this chamber I reported that the fund had gone $1.5 billion into the red. Record payments since then have left the fund with a deficit of $2.2 billion. This includes $695 million in interim stabilization payments distributed to participants in May of this year. This program that the government has now undertaken will save millions of dollars for farmers by reducing interest charges against the stabilization fund, because there will be a $750 million write-down of that accumulated debt. That is exactly what was promised last December, and it will be carried out.

Honourable senators, let us speak of that deficit. Sooner or later the federal government will have to deal with the deficit in the fund. Dealing with a deficit sooner rather than later is, I believe, smart fiscal management. The WGSA amendments will eliminate the deficit in two ways: through a partial debt write-down of that $750 million, and by an increase in the federal and producer levy contributions. That $750 million deficit write-down is very welcome. Without that write-down, which is a federal contribution and reduces our deficit considerably, the increase necessary in producer levies to reduce the deficit would be unreasonably high, and perhaps prohibitive.

Honourable senators, let us speak of levy increases. Levy contributions for crops covered under the program will increase. This crop year and the next producer levy contributions on grain sold will increase from 1 per cent to 4 per cent. The government's share of levy contributions will increase to 6 per cent from 3 per cent. Therefore, honourable senators, both producer and federal levies will increase by exactly the same percentage.

The federal government must deal with this deficit in order to keep the program stable and keep it in place. The federal government is responsible for maintaining the WGSA and takes the commitment very seriously. The program is part of the federal government's long-term approach to helping farmers deal with erratic farm income. Most farmers would likely agree that we cannot take an ad hoc approach to dealing with fluctuating farm incomes. Producers need a long-term solution such as the WGSA to ensure that their income remains stable.

Honourable senators, as you know, grain prices are now on their way up. However, in recent years they have dropped so drastically that even record payments through traditional support programs like the WGSA have not been enough to cushion producers from very low returns.

The federal government responded with a program to help farmers survive the drastic drop in prices. The Special Canadian Grains Program was put in place two years ago and complements the WGSA. It does not replace it.

The Western Grain Stabilization Act has proven its benefits as a program producers can rely on when prices drop below normal levels. Amendments to the program will broaden the farm safety net by encouraging more producers to join. These amendments fit in with the federal government's long-term goal of strengthening the position of our grain farmers.

Honourable senators, I strongly recommend expeditious passage of this important bill in support of the western agricultural industry.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, Senator Barootes prefaced his remarks by going over the substantial number of programs that are in place today. It is perfectly true that very substantial sums of money have been paid out for the benefit of western grain and livestock producers in this time of great need. However, all of those programs, taken together, have not been able to arrest the tremendous exodus of farmers from their farms. One reads reports in the Globe and Mail of the very large numbers that have had to leave their farms. Thus it follows that large quantities of land today are under the ownership of the Farm Credit Corporation, and it is a problem for that corporation to deal with, and a problem for the future.

However, honourable senators, this is Canada, and we would expect that the farms should be in the hands of the farmers, and not end in the hands of a federal corporation. So there is still, in my judgment, a crying need for protection against foreclosure on farmers who, through no fault of their own, face a very high burden of interest rates that they cannot meet, with grain prices where they are today.

This act has been on the statute books for a long time. It was brought in many years ago by the Honourable Otto Lang, assisted by his then parliamentary secretary, Mr. Ralph Goodale. The plan has been of tremendous benefit to farmers out west, and it has paid out huge sums of money at times when prices were low and needs were great. About 75 per cent of farmers are in the plan and about 25 per cent remain outside it.

I can remember when the plan was being discussed and when it came time to join the plan. The National Farmers Union said at the time that it was a poor deal, that it should be a general insurance plan and that it was not good enough to have specific insurance. There were a number of free enterprise types with large land holdings who said, "I don't need to get into this program. I can look after things for myself." So about 25 per cent of the farmers remained outside the program. When asked, I would say to my neighbours, "Don't be misled. Under the plan the farmer puts in $1 and the government puts in $2. That's not a bad situation. Take a chance. If you never get a pay-out from the program, don't blame anybody. After all, if your house never burns down and you do not have to collect insurance, you don't blame the insurance company. So get into it." I think I gave good, sound advice.

The government likes to take credit for the huge sums that are paid out. It is correct that the current government amended the act to allow for prepayment by order in council. When I was the minister in charge of administering the act, I felt that it was better to bring in amendments to the act to make these payments rather than giving all the power to the Governor in Council. However, I have no complaint whatever with the method being used at this time.

On June 28, 1984, I had the privilege and responsibility of recommending certain amendments to the act, and one of the first was with respect to the addition of a second pay-out triggering mechanism. According to the amendment, the net cash flow per tonne of eligible earnings would be supported at the level of the previous five years. This pay-out mechanism was intended to make the program more sensitive to price and cost variations during periods of increased marketing. With regard to the second amendment, receipts were to be based on the crop year for pay-out purposes to allow the program to respond more quickly by allowing stabilization payments to be made three or four months after the end of the crop year, rather than after ten months, as was the case with the calendar year procedure. These major amendments have resulted in massive amounts of money being triggered for payment. Without those amendments back in 1984, these very large sums of money would not have been triggered. Money would have been triggered, but not in such large sums.

Another thing I had to deal with at that time was a demand by many producers to get out of the program. As a result, I recommended that the date for which farmers could get out of the plan be postponed for more than a year. It was my expectation that within that one-year period payments would be made and the demand by farmers to be removed from the act would not be great. I think experience has shown that to be the case, and the amendments to which Senator Barootes referred to encourage farmers who are not under the plan to get under the plan is there for a very good and substantial reason. The more producers who are under the act, the better.

Honourable senators, I want to criticize in a major way the change in the proportion contributed by the producers as compared to that contributed by the government. Initially, the act stated that the contribution would be 2 per cent from producers and 4 per cent from government. Because of certain calculations built into the act, when there were surpluses the farmer's contribution went down to 1 per cent and the federal contribution was also reduced. I thought it would have been better if contributions had not gone down at all. This legislation will increase the farmer's contribution by four times and the government's contribution by two times. So, instead of a ratio of 2 per cent to 4 per cent, we will have a ratio of 4 per cent from the farmers to 6 per cent from the government. Therefore, the government is withdrawing in a proportionate way—not in an absolute way but in a proportionate way—its share of contributions to the fund. I think that is a mistake.

[Senator Argue.]

The ratio basis established at the inception of the fund was good then, and it is good today. If the price of grain goes up and stays up the ratio of 2 per cent to 4 per cent will be sufficient to cover future payments. Senator Barootes has said that the price of grain has been going up, and that is correct. However, in the past few days the price of grain has been going down. Every time there is a shower in the United States, or even the prospect of rain, prices go down.

Senator Barootes: Volumes go down, too.

Senator Argue: That is right. Their volume goes down, our volume goes down and the price goes down. The Wheat Board asking price is very encouraging and the increase in the initial price is encouraging. However, even though prices are going up, they are still low, and I feel that the 4 per cent burden on producers is too high in relation to the government's contribution.

It is fine for Senator Barootes to outline the large sums of money that have been provided and are being provided from the federal treasury, but what the federal government is doing here is withdrawing its contribution and increasing producer contributions by a relative amount. That is not wise. Certainly, it is not wise from the standpoint of the producer. I think the government should forget about trying to pay off the deficit. The deficit is there because the act worked. A situation arose that required money to be paid out. That money was paid out, resulting in a deficit. In my judgment, if there were a change in grain prices, the 2 per cent to 4 per cent ratio would correct the situation without these increases. Apart from my complaint about this levy, I am glad to support this legislation and to see it referred to the Agriculture and Forestry Committee.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to make some comments similar to those made by Senator Argue, but from a slightly different vantage point. When the Western Grain Stabilization Act was brought into being, it was designed to be actuarially sound based on a 2 per cent contribution from the producer and a 4 per cent contribution from the government. There was, I think, good reason to believe—good prognosticating—that it was sound, until we came to a situation where the international market just simply collapsed. It went down for all the reasons that have been stated. There was a subsidy war between Europe and the United States and so on. This insurance program was never intended to be able to finance itself under those conditions.

● (1710)

The government, and I think quite properly, used the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the administration through the Canadian Wheat Board to distribute some significant amounts of money under this program. They were obliged to do so in any event, but they used this, and I am not complaining about it.

There was a great surplus in that fund—in the area of $1.4 billion—but by the time several years of drought and depressed prices had passed that surplus had turned into a deficit of about the same amount. That deficit was around $1.4 billion or $1.5 billion.

I think the government should have been quite happy, however, that there was $1.4 billion in a fund to deal with that situation, and happy also with the fact that the administration, the formula and the criteria as to who would be paid were all set out. I do not think the government should now complain that, somehow, they have to levy a new set of fees which will somehow make it actuarially sound in a period when prices in international trading are what we would call normal. However, this 100 per cent from 2 per cent to 4 per cent or, because the levy went down, from 1 per cent to 4 per cent, which is a 400 per cent increase, I think, is quite harsh. So far as I can tell from speaking to western farmers, they are not yet out of the financial squeeze they were put in.

It is clear that there is also provision in this bill for individual contributions from farmers to be changed from $600 to $2,400. That is the amount farmers will be expected to pay into the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. It will be 4 per cent to a maximum of $2,400. I think the government is being harsh by putting in place a set of levies comprising a 400 per cent increase in order to get that money back. When a whole sector has had great difficulty, as has the grain sector during the past four years from both drought and the present international crisis, I do not think the government should say that, somehow, it should be able to recover all that money. I know the government is now putting up $750 million to pay for part of the deficit in the fund, but, even so, I think a 400 per cent increase is premature, until the grain sector does, in fact, recover.

What Senator Barootes has said is, I suppose, partly true. Prices have gone up; but they have also come down. Wheat in the Chicago Board of Trade market went down 21.5 cents yesterday. That is the price that sets the world price from day to day. As a matter of fact, it has come down more than 40 cents from the high it was at of around $4 a bushel. It is now back to $3.57. Even that is better than it was, because a few months ago that price was a dollar less than it is today—in other words, about $2.55 U.S. per bushel.

I do not want to keep honourable senators too long, but I do want to repeat that it is a little premature to have a 400 per cent increase in the levy on farmers. I hope that the government will use its authority from time to time—and I think the Governor in Council has some authority—to be a little less harsh than what is proposed in this bill.

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Barootes speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Barootes: I wish to thank my two friends from Alberta and Saskatchewan for their comments, particularly as they have had a very close relationship with this program virtually from its inception. I should also like to pay tribute to the Honourable Otto Lang, who was in power when this program was instituted.

I did, as the Honourable Senator Argue will note, make comments about other programs the government had instituted. That is a little of the author's privilege in giving such a speech. However, I would point out to Senator Argue the effectiveness of these programs. For example, in Saskatchewan alone, where I come from, the special grains programs and others that were provided increased the net farm income per farmer by 82 per cent last year and the year before. In fact, it was 82.5 per cent one year and 81.7 in the other year. This has been helpful, but, in a time of crisis like this, one cannot expect everything to be wiped out by waving a magic wand of government dollars. We are going through a very difficult period.

I should also like to congratulate Senator Argue on those triggering mechanisms he mentioned. Both are included in this bill and both are operative, although they are still somewhat tardy. They do not work perfectly yet, because, while they do the triggering, there is such a latent period before the pay-out that there is some hardship. I would pay tribute to him again for suggesting the May interim payments, which have been so helpful to some of the farmers.

I now turn to the levy of 400 per cent, as Senator Olson put it. In the original program the difference between the levy of the farmer and the contribution of the federal government was always 2 per cent.

Senator Olson: It was 2 per cent to 4 per cent.

Senator Barootes: One was 2 per cent and the government's contribution was 4 per cent. The difference was 2 per cent. It is simple arithmetic and even I can understand it. However, when the stabilization fund grew to a level where the reserve was $1.4 billion, the administration of the day wanted to make big boys of themselves, generous boys of themselves, so they reduced it to 1 per cent for the farmer and 3 per cent for the government, which is, again, a differential of exactly two percentage points. They did not reduce both by half; there was still a 2 per cent differential between the producers' levy and the government's portion.

Senator Olson: That is three to one.

Senator Barootes: When it was raised on this occasion as they depleted the fund, of necessity, the differential was, again, 2 per cent. It is 4 per cent on the levy of the farmer and 6 per cent for the government. The differential has always been 2 per cent. It remains 2 per cent and, despite Senator Olson's Cartesian geometry and algebra, it will remain 2 per cent.

I must also point out that an insurance program, which this is, must have reserves. An insurance program is of no value if the company goes belly-up, goes broke, and cannot pay out; there must be some restoration.

Honourable senators, I would mention one other small point. You say that, when the government raised the producers from 1 per cent to 4 per cent and the government from 3 per cent to 6 per cent, that was rather harsh on the farmers and not quite so harsh on the government. But you forget that there was $750 million thrown in as well, which really constitutes virtually a year's interim pay-out. So when you take the $750 million write-down plus the increase in the federal contribution from 3 per cent to 6 per cent, I think it makes up for that very well.

● (1720)

Finally, should the program become an actuarially sound insurance program with healthy returns, then it can be looked at and perhaps the contributions lowered.

So I close the debate in that manner and suggest that perhaps we can dispense with this in another way.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Efsthios William Barootes: With leave of the Senate, now.

Senator Frith: Nice try!

Senator Argue: No, no!

Senator Barootes: I only made that attempt to see the indignation that was going to come on the face of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. I thought he was going to give me another lecture, but obviously he is not going to do that.

Senator Frith: Instead of indignation you got a smiling "Nice try!"

Senator Barootes: It was a nice try.

Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle, that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Barootes, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Marshall, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), for the second reading of the Bill C-92, An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.—(Honourable Senator Argue, P.C.)

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, we on this side of the house feel that this bill, too, should be referred to the Senate Committee on Agriculture for further consideration. There are a number of provisions in the bill, some of which we can agree with, I am sure, but as far as I am concerned the producer provision is one that should not be there in its present form.

[Senator Barootes.]

The provision of producer cars means that a producer can order a car and, as an incentive to ordering that car, the Governor in Council, in consultation with the Canadian Wheat Board, will be enabled to return a larger sum of money to that producer based on a number of factors.

It has been pointed out by western organizations, including the three prairie pools and the National Farmers Union, that there is a substantial cost involved in using the producer car system. It is a substantial cost, because it means that a single car must be spotted and must be dealt with. We now have high through-put elevators and extended lengths of railway sidings, all designed to take grain out at a rapid pace. The use of producer cars creates an element that brings about, in the judgment of these people and in my own judgment, an increase in the inefficiency of the system. It is costly and it could become, if it is used a great deal, a danger to the current system. Our current grain marketing system has stood us in good stead.

I read with interest the statement made by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Honourable Mr. Mayer. He pointed out, as did Senator Marshall the other day, that the Canadian Wheat Board, in spite of difficult marketing circumstances, has been able to increase Canada's share in the world market. If this is to be done, and if this is to be continued, and if our grain system is to be efficient, then I think overloading the system with producer cars carries great danger.

The prairie pools would like an opportunity, I am sure, to appear before the Senate Agriculture Committee to put forward their points of view. I hope the Senate Agriculture Committee will hear from the railroads and the grain transportation authority and that the forum of the Senate Agriculture Committee will be available to all those who wish to make a presentation.

In the House of Commons, debate was not particularly lengthy; indeed, it was quite short. The agricultural critic for the Liberal Party, Mr. Maurice Foster, moved an amendment, which was supported by the NDP. The amendment, though quite modest, was turned down. He moved that:

railway car during the pool period.

which is just a connection to the previous phrase, and added:

The said sum shall reflect an equitable allocation of the costs incurred by the Board to maintain the country delivery points.

I see a trend developing that makes it more difficult for local country elevators to operate. There is a trend to larger farms, and I think this particular provision is, in the judgment of the prairie pools, something they do not wish to support, and they feel they should be entitled to make a representation to the committee on it. I think that that is reasonable. I know that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture is prepared to make the committee available so that their points of view may be put forward.

I would certainly support an amendment to clarify the result of this provision for producer cars, and I think we are justified in having it referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry for further consideration.

I overheard Senator Barootes say—and if I am misquoting him, he will correct me—that one of the main features of this bill is to provide a system whereby the Canadian Wheat Board, with the approval of the Minister of Finance, can go into the bond market in Canada, or in other countries, to borrow money for the purposes of financing the operation of the board, or to invest money, if the board should have that opportunity from time to time.

I think that is a dangerous provision. The commodity market is extremely volatile. Farmers have put together the Canadian Wheat Board system because they, individually, did not want to gamble on the commodity market; they wished the Canadian Wheat Board to do the gambling on behalf of all of them and equalize their returns for the year. I think it is regrettable that the government should make this provision and encourage the Canadian Wheat Board to go into the bond market, which is a volatile market. If the board should borrow outside Canada—and it certainly could—then, of course, the vast change in valuation of foreign currency would come into the whole picture.

• (1730)

I think the system we have in place now, under which the Wheat Board makes a sale that is based on credit guaranteed by the Government of Canada, is a good system. When the Government of Canada provides to the Canadian Wheat Board credit through the banking system at perhaps prime less one quarter of 1 per cent, and when the Wheat Board is able to deal with Canadian institutions like the credit unions when borrowings are required, that is a good system. I do not think it should be modified in this radical way, which will make it possible for the Canadian Wheat Board to enter into the bond market. That, in itself, is a gamble. There is no certainty that the Wheat Board will save money—there is no certainty that it will not lose money.

Honourable senators, some pretty sophisticated investors have lost money on the bond market, depending upon when borrowings were made, the currency in which they were made and the transaction involved.

Honourable senators, I respect the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to operate its system effectively, but when it gets into the financial bond market I think it is treading on dangerous and unexplored ground.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I do not greatly disagree with what Senator Argue has said, but I think the matter of the investigation of the producer car, which has to do with clause 8 of this bill, should be considered with information from the organizations concerned.

Other senators having spoken about the producer car, I should like to say a word or two about financing. My information is that originally the borrowings or other financial matters of the Wheat Board were handled by the five or six major Canadian banks. A few years ago the handling of these matters was extended to credit unions and trust companies, resulting in a modest improvement in the financial status of the Canadian Wheat Board, which also meant a better return to the producer—the farmer, for whom the Wheat Board acts. Now the Canadian Wheat Board is asking for an extension, which would involve investment houses. It may be that some of us distrust everybody in the financial world, but the fact is that, if those investment houses are able to do better financially for the Wheat Board, it will mean more dollars in the farmer's pocket. I do not have that same distrust, because I know that the Wheat Board is made up of people who are conservative in their financial dealings. I wish they were conservative in other ways as well, but, unfortunately, often they are not. Secondly, these financial dealings must be approved by the Minister of Finance, so there is the government check that was requested earlier. Moreover, the Wheat Board sometimes finances in foreign currencies in any event when it enters into dealings with foreign countries. I would not be too worried about their making a bollix of things. I think they will do well for the farmers.

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, I was to sponsor Bill C-92, and, although I have attended quite regularly since February, the matter was brought up on a day when I was not here. I want to thank Senator Marshall for dealing with Bill C-92 on my behalf at second reading.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bielish: Senator Hays drew to the attention of the Senate clause 8 of the bill, suggesting that it is a controversial provision. I should like to express my appreciation to Senator Olson for his support of clause 8. I think this bill has been debated sufficiently and at the appropriate time I should like to refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bielish, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILLS C-110 AND C-121—ORDER WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax), seconded by the Honourable Senator Walker, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-110, An Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, and the subject-matter of the Bill C-121, An Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, in advance of the said Bills coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator MacDonald has requested that this order be withdrawn from the order paper since both bills are currently before the chamber. It is my understanding that this matter is no longer relevant and that the order ought to be withdrawn.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order withdrawn.

CONSIDERATION OF ELEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator van Roggen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buckwold, for the adoption of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (Turks and Caicos Islands), presented in the Senate on 2nd December, 1987.—(Honourable Senator van Roggen).

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, this order stands in the name of Senator van Roggen. I attempted to get in touch with him this afternoon, but he was already on his way back to Vancouver. I do not fault him for that; I am just saying that I could not get in touch with him. This matter has stood in his name for some time—since December of last year, I believe. Before it disappears into the woodwork as a result of an adjournment or the dissolution of Parliament, I want to make a few comments on it. I do not suppose Senator van Roggen would object to my speaking at this time.

With the permission of honourable senators, then, I should like to say that I regret that this matter has not been dealt with in any way, shape or form since December. I am speaking, of course, about the proposition to join with Canada the Turks and Caicos Islands. This proposal is more and more in the public mind. I am not a promoter of the union of Canada and the Turks and Caicos Islands; yet I am one of those Canadians and parliamentarians who would like more information about it. What I really want to understand is the content of the report and the way in which it was drafted.

Senator van Roggen's committee held its meeting on this question in camera. For some reason the public was not allowed an opportunity to make presentations there. It is my understanding that someone from the British High Commission was allowed to make a private statement and to outline to senators reasons or arguments as to why Canada should not touch this proposition at this time, even though Canada is supplying funds to the Turks and Caicos Islands to build an air strip. I must say I find that rather strange, because the Turks and Caicos Islands are a British possession or protectorate, or call it what you want. Yet we are supplying funds to build an airstrip on the Turks and Caicos Islands when, in my opinion, the British government ought to be doing that if it claims possession or exclusive interest in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

However, I do object to the fact that the committee sat in camera on a question which, in my opinion, should have been fully vented in a public way. I have read an in camera transcript of the proceedings of that committee. I assume it is normal practice for notes to be taken for the benefit of members of the committee, especially the chairman, but, because it was in camera, the transcript cannot be made public, nor can I quote directly or indirectly from it.

Suffice it to say that what was said in the committee should have been said publicly. The press thinks we hold too many in camera meetings in this place. Sometimes they have an argument for that position and sometimes they do not. There are moments when members of the committee must close the doors and deliberate among themselves as to what they must do with evidence gathered on a certain item—legislation or whatever. This matter was not at that stage; it was at the stage where the meeting should have been public.

On the basis of what I read in the transcript of the in camera hearing of that committee, I feel that the report would perhaps have been different from the one tabled in this house. Let me put it another way. I believe if that committee had held public meetings, certain utterances and comments of an elitist nature would not have been made in the committee. This whole matter of the way the committee handled the Turks and Caicos Islands issue sounded to me like a cover-up job. Some members of the committee had determined in their own minds that this proposal would be quashed and would not go anywhere. A report was written to reflect that. Yet there were comments made in the committee which I feel ought to have been part of that report, if they were worthwhile stating at all.

Honourable senators, I do not believe we have reached the end of the discussion on the Turks and Caicos Islands proposal. It was discussed again very recently in a major Canadian magazine. There seems to be increasing support for the idea, for all sorts of reasons, but a lot of those reasons have not been put before us.

Over the years we have heard good speeches from members of the Senate and the other place. The next time the item comes before us we ought to make sure the committee holds full-fledged public hearings in order to give an opportunity to those who wish to make a point, either for or against the project of a union with the Turks and Caicos Islands. I think that is what was wrong with the process this time around. I do not feel comfortable with the report. I am not saying that I cannot live with some of the comments and the recommendations in the report. I am simply stating that we have not heard all of the story, and we are entitled to hear all of it. I hope the next time that will be done.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator van Roggen, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe there is general agreement that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I was out of the chamber when Order No. 13 was called. It presently stands in my name, but, because of the length of time it is taking me to do research on the matter, I would be prepared to allow anyone else to speak to it.

Not apropos of that particular item, I should like to say that the debates I have listened to this afternoon with regard to the Wheat Board and the problem of grain production in the west are of intense interest to the three million people I speak for in Toronto.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: If Senator Lang has spoken to this item, the question should be put.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): No, he said he would be prepared to yield to anyone else.

Senator Flynn: I thought he said he was not going to speak on this item.

Senator Frith: He said that because of the research required he will not speak to it soon, but if anyone else wants to speak to it he may.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

THE ESTIMATES, 1988-89

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

WEDNESDAY, July 27, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1989 were referred, examined the said Estimates and presents, in obedience to the Order of Reference of 1st March 1988, its second interim report as follows:

On February 26, 1986 the Minister of Finance announced that $1.08 billion over a four-year period was being added to the budgets of the three research granting councils, the Medical Research Council (MRC), the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council (NSERC), and the Social Sciences Humanities Research Council (SSHRC). Of this, $315.9 million was to be allocated to increase their annual budgets, an additional $369 million was expected from the private sector, and the remaining $369 million to come from federal matching of private sector contributions. (The government has subsequently increased these amounts to $380.2 million.) This amount was to be used under the newly created Matching Grants Program. The five-year expenditure plan for the three councils covering the period 1986-87 to 1990-91 is shown in the table in the annex.

The government's intention was to raise the base-level budgets in 1986-87 for the three councils from $480.4 million to $562 million. For each of the subsequent four years, the budgets were to be frozen at $537.7 million. Any increase in each of the councils' budget was to come from the Matching Grants Program. Subsequently, in May 1988, the government altered that policy and announced that the base budgets of the three councils would increase annually over the next five years.

In a federal document entitled STRENGTHENING THE PRIVATE SECTOR/UNIVERSITY RESEARCH PARTNERSHIP:

THE MATCHING POLICY RULES, the government established three objectives for the Matching Grants program:

to increase, in partnership with the private sector, the overall level of university-based research, research training, and directly related activities, to increase the overall level of private sector-university collaboration in terms of both the mutually desired direction of university research and the transfer of the results of that research for application by the private sector, to encourage joint research activities that capitalize on the strengths and interests of the private sector and the universities for the economic and social benefit of Canadians. (page 6)

The Committee's intention in reviewing these estimates was to examine and report on the effectiveness of this program. The Committee was also aware that this current review could highlight possible elements that should be considered when the government undertakes a review of this program in 1989-90.

The Committee heard from the following witnesses:

University of Toronto:

Professor David Nowlan, Vice-President, Research;
Ms. Carole Gillin, Director, Office of Research Administration.

All the witnesses provided excellent testimonies and the Committee wishes to thank them for their efforts.

Witnesses from the three research granting councils explained that the government matches eligible private sector contributions to university research by providing this money directly to the general operating budgets of the councils. While the councils must use the government matching grant to support the direct costs of university research, there is no condition that it be used specifically to support university-industry related research. There is also no condition that any part of the government portion be used to reward the university or individual researcher for their efforts in generating the private sector support. There are however some differences in the way the councils use this matching grant.

NSERC has been trying to encourage university-industry cooperation for some time, but began a formal university-industry (UI) program in 1984 to encourage much closer ties between these two sectors. Through this program, NSERC jointly funds university-based research activities with the private sector. With the start of the matching grants program, NSERC decided to devote its federal matching grants to its UI program. Any unused portion would then be used to support other program activities. For the first year of the program, NSERC received $25.4 million in federal matching contributions and devoted $20 million to the UI program in 1987-88. Officials from NSERC told members of the Committee that they expected to receive $40 million in federal matching grants for 1988-89 and anticipated spending close to $30 million on the UI program.

In addition to allocating the first draw of the matching grants to its UI program, NSERC also provides some incentive to universities for generating private sector support. For the first year, 1986-87, NSERC gave 10 per cent of the maximum federal contribution, or $2.54 million to the universities generating the private sector support. Because the eligible support amounted to $68 million, the actual incentive was reduced to 3.7 per cent. For 1987-88 and 1988-89, the incentive is set at 20 per cent and 30 per cent of the maximum federal matching grant, or $8.1 million and $19.2 million respectively.

For NSERC, fifty institutions reported receiving private sector contributions of $68 million in 1986-87. Of this, $39 million came from the business sector with 61 per cent of that coming from Ontario and 16 per cent coming from Quebec. The reported contributions received by each university are unevenly distributed with the universities of Toronto and Waterloo each receiving approximately one-sixth of the total. The top five schools (Waterloo, Toronto, McGill, Queen's and Alberta) account for half the total. In fact, twenty universities account for close to 90 per cent of this total. Chart One in the annex compares NSERC's and SSHRC's experience in this area.

Prior to the Matching Grants policy, SSHRC did not have any specific program to encourage university-private sector collaboration. In the 1986-87 fiscal year, SSHRC introduced its Canada Research Fellowships program to increase the career opportunities of promising researchers in the social sciences and humanities. While this program was to be financed jointly by the private sector, SSHRC reported that there was virtually no response from the business community. Virtually all the money used for this program came from the endowments of universities, which according to government guidelines, are eligible for federal matching grants.

SSHRC reports that in 1986-87, fifty-one institutions received $24.7 million in private sector contributions that were eligible for federal matching grants. Of this, only 17 per cent came from private businesses. University endowments, providing 35 per cent of the total, were the largest single source of eligible contributions. (See Chart Two in the annex for comparisons between NSERC and SSHRC of these data.)

The University of Toronto, with 23 per cent of the total, was the largest single recipient. University of Alberta followed with 10 per cent. Just as with NSERC, five schools (Toronto, Alberta, Queen's, York and Ottawa) generated over half the total contributions.

SSHRC, like NSERC, provides an incentive to the universities that generate the private sector contributions. In the first year SSHRC intended to provide 20 per cent, or $1.2 million, of the federal contribution of $6 million. However, due to the ineligibility of the private sector contributions made under the Canada Research Fellowship program, this was reduced to $840,000.

MRC, like SSHRC, did not have any program in place to foster university-industry activities directly. Following the announcement of the matching grants policy, MRC adopted the objective of enhancing the interaction between university and industry researchers in the health sciences. In 1987-88, the first year of its UI program, MRC reported spending $600,000 and indicated that they expected this to rise to $3 million in 1988-89. Industry contributions under the program are expected to equal about half of MRC's support.

MRC also indicate that they have been supporting university-industry collaboration since 1980, but without a formal program. In 1986-87 contributions by industry to MRC funded research (mainly from the pharmaceutical sector) amounted to $7.7 million. Over the same period, MRC contributed $10.8 million to these projects.

Details about the source of eligible private sector support and the universities which received this support under the Matching Grants Program were not provided by MRC. It did report however, that aggregate information indicating that it had exceeded the amount that the government was prepared to commit, thereby insuring that it received the maximum of $13.1 million for 1987-88. It should be noted that only the amounts from private agencies such as the National Cancer Research Institute and the Heart Foundation that exceed $65 million are eligible for federal matching grants. This minimum amount was the aggregate level of university research supported by these private agencies in the year before the beginning of the program.

ISSUES FOR CONSIDERATION

When the Committee began its examination of the estimates associated with the Matching Grants Program, it was aware that the government was planning to review the effectiveness of the program in the 1989-90 fiscal year. From its previous report on COMPREHENSIVE AUDITING, members of the Committee are well aware that measuring effectiveness in the broadest sense means much more than determining whether the program achieves its intended results. It was one of our intentions in producing this report to outline some of the characteristics of effectiveness that are appropriate for this program and to indicate our findings to date.

1. Appropriateness of the Program

Is the design of the program appropriate for meeting the objectives?

The objectives of the program essentially are to get the universities and the private sector to increase their overall level of collaboration and the volume of university-based research. Yet the program the government and the councils have designed offers nothing to individual researchers for seeking out private sector support. Any incentives paid go directly to the general research budgets of the universities and not to the projects supported by private sector money. (Professor Nowlan did inform the Committee that the University of Toronto was an exception and returned some of the money to the individual researchers who generated the initial private sector contribution.)

In addition to the lack of incentives within the program design, the definition of the private sector established by the government and used in this program may be flawed. That definition includes the following:

- businesses;
- individuals;
- designated Crown Corporations;
- private non-profit organizations;
- private foundations and trusts, e.g. university endowment funds;
- charitable organizations.

As indicated earlier, SSHRC reports that for 1986-87, $3.7 million, or 15 per cent of the total eligible contributions from the private sector came from business organizations whereas university endowment funds represented the largest single contributor providing $10.5 million, or 42 per cent of the total. NSERC reported that 57.3 per cent of its eligible contributions of $68.1 million came from the business sector while university endowment trusts contributed $10.1 million, or 14.8 per cent of the total. While the MRC did not provide such information, Dr. Bois, the President of the MRC, indicated that a large share of the eligible contributions came from the drug companies.

It would appear that the broad definition of the private sector has had a significant impact on the level of eligible contributions, particularly for SSHRC and to some extent for NSERC. If the government matched eligible contributions from the business sector only, SSHRC would have been eligible for $3.7 million in the first year of the program or $2.3 million less than they did receive. NSERC still would have received its full complement of $25.4 million since the business sector contributed almost $39 million.

But if the intent behind the objectives of the program was to increase the level of university-business collaboration, the broad definition of the private sector clouds the extent to which that collaboration has occurred. Alternatively, without this broad definition, SSHRC would have had difficulty in obtaining the maximum federal contribution. The Committee was told that the university community had requested that university endowment funds be included in the definition and we can see why they would want this. But is it really appropriate? This is the kind of question we would hope that the evaluators will consider when they review the program.

2. Achievement of Intended Results

Is the program achieving what was expected when it was introduced?

From the information received from the three research granting councils there is nothing to indicate one way or another whether the program has been instrumental in generating any additional support from the private sector.

In the previous section, we reported on the amounts of money that the councils were receiving from the private sector. The problem is that no one seems to know whether this is more, less or the same level of support than before the program began because that information has not been collected. It may be possible to obtain those data but that would require universities research offices to pull it together, something they have not been asked for and something they might be reluctant to do because of the time and expense. Furthermore, there are no signs to indicate whether private sector support is on the rise since the program began.

3. Relevance of the Program

Does the program make sense in the context of the problem or condition?

In the document entitled STRENGTHENING THE PRIVATE SECTOR/UNIVERSITY RESEARCH PARTNERSHIP: THE MATCHING POLICY RULES, there is an open letter from the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Science and Technology calling for stronger collaboration between the private sector and the universities. It states:

...it is anticipated that the transfer of research results to the private sector and the speed of their application for the economic and social benefit of the country will be significantly enhanced"

This statement implies that the problem we face in Canada is an inadequate level of new knowledge being transferred from university labs to the marketplace. Dr. Wynne-Edwards, Vice-President, Research and Development from Alcan International Ltd. told the Committee that this was not really an accurate understanding of the matter. He said:

The objective of the scientist in the university system is to produce new knowledge and to publish it internationally... A lot of it is done and published internationally in order to access the rest of the world knowledge in that field. No matter how munificent the taxpayer in Canada becomes we will never perform more than 1 or 2 per cent of the research going on in the world. So a major task of universities is to be a listening post, to gather the other 98 or 99 per cent going on elsewhere. Part of the competitive situation we are in now is that other countries are much better than we are at picking up that knowledge and making money out of it. The problem does not lie in universities, but in Canadian business. (Page 31: 24)

Dr. Wynne Edwards did not mean that industry wants universities to stick to basic research while it will carry out the applied side. Professor Nowlan refined this argument by pointing out that the concepts of basic or curiosity research, and applied research are outmoded. He contended that a better classification is to consider research as either pre-competitive or competitive. Using this classification, industry is more than willing to see universities engage in research that does not have direct application to the market.

Professor Nowlan pointed out that this kind of research needs to be published and exposed to peer review so that the best ideas are honed and refined. If these ideas reach the competitive stage and have direct application to the market place, industry will be likely to terminate their university collaboration on that particular activity and continue the applied research in their own labs.

None of this means that university-industry collaboration should be discouraged. Rather, it means that high expectations of important results from this collaboration are likely to be disappointed. From our hearings, the message seems to be that university-industry collaboration is necessary to establish the networks so that our best minds are pursuing pre-competitive ideas in areas where Canadians are capable of undertaking world class research.

The Committee hopes that when the government begins its evaluation of this subject, it will look at what Canada hopes to achieve to encourage universities and industry to collaborate. If we are trying to increase the competitive stage of research, then we may have to strengthen the incentives to industry to do this kind of research. In doing so, we will have to understand that the nature of this kind of research makes it secretive because it will have direct application to the marketplace. Alternatively if we want to increase the collaboration of industry and universities in the pre-competitive stage of research, then we should not necessarily expect it to have direct application to the market in the immediate future or ever.

These are the issues that should be looked at to determine if the program in place is relevant to the condition or problem we are trying to resolve.

4. Acceptance by the Community

Has the community accepted this program?

We define the community as the clients or the direct participants in the program. This includes the three research granting councils, the universities and their research staff, and the private sector contributors.

The three research granting councils are the direct clients of the government, leaving the university community and the private sector at arm's length from the primary source of the money. In fact, the government has been deliberate in maintaining this relationship and allows the councils a considerable amount of room in deciding how to use the federal contribution. Where the government has intervened is in establishing a definition for the private sector, and in placing conditions on the definition of eligible research activities, limiting these to such areas as research projects and equipment, research training and development, and university chairs. It does not allow activities primarily related to education nor investment in land and buildings.

The clients of the research granting councils are the universities and the research community. It is individual researchers who first report to their universities that they have received a research grant from a private sector donor. The universities in turn report to the research granting councils the total amount of eligible private sector contributions they have received. The research councils then decide how much, if any, they will return to the universities as an incentive for generating the grant. And it is up to the individual university to decide how much, if any, to return to the individual researcher or project as an incentive for generating the grant that started the whole chain of events.

From the evidence heard, the Committee concluded that at the present time there is nothing to indicate that the program has gained any acceptance or positive endorsement by all the key players. With respect to the research granting councils, they clearly want the program to succeed, but their acceptance seems to be clouded by the fact that they always are in need of additional money. With respect to the universities, they too want the program to succeed, but like the granting councils, they see this program as a new-found source to create and support research activities that are not supported elsewhere. But the group that is essential to the success of the program, the individual researchers and the private sector donors, see virtually nothing new in this program compared to what was available to them before the program started.

5. Secondary Impacts

When this program was first announced, there were many who were critical of its success because of its design and more importantly because of the inappropriateness of the objectives established for it. Many observers felt that the principal issue that had to be faced was not a need for increased collaboration between universities and industry, but the shrinking budgets (in real terms) of the three research granting councils. In our report on FEDERAL POLICY ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION we supported the view that the research granting councils should have their base budgets increased in line with inflation. This did not mean that we supported all the work of these councils but we felt that there was, and still is, a role for the kind of research that the councils support and that it should not be diminished simply by erosion through inflation. Yet that is what the government had been doing until its announcement in May 1988 to increase the base budgets of the councils by $200 million over the next five years. This program, which started out with the objective of increasing the level of collaboration between academia and business appeared just as much geared to increasing the level of the granting councils' funding base. Yet in trying to do both, it appears that neither is being done very well. The councils have been relying on funding increases that are conditional upon private sector participation; yet there is no incentive to encourage that participation.

In addition to this program being an inappropriate way to augment council budgets, it also redistributes this money to the large research universities. Earlier we described how five universities (Waterloo, Toronto, McGill, Queen's, and Alberta) accounted for half the reported income from the private sector under NSERC rules. For SSHRC, five universities (Toronto, Alberta, Queen's, York, and Ottawa) also accounted for about half the reported income in the first year of the program. We are not saying that this is wrong, but the government must realize that this is a secondary and possibly unintended effect of the program.

These secondary effects of this program, i.e. the impact on council budgets and the redistribution of research dollars, must be considered when the government reviews this program next year.

6. Cost of Administering the Program

Any review of a broad-based definition of effectiveness must include an examination of the economy and efficiency of the operation. The Committee did not spend a lot of time on this subject but did discover some interesting facts. First, the granting councils had to engage additional staff to administer the program. In fact, Dr. May, President of NSERC, told the Committee that NSERC added sixteen persons to administer the program. Yet no part of the money the universities received from the councils could be used for administrative purposes. Dr. May told the Committee that he expected the universities to engage additional staff to administer the Matching Grants Program. But Ms. Carol Gillen informed the Committee that the University of Toronto had not hired any new people to handle its administration. There is little doubt that without these resources, the universities would be hard pressed to administer this program effectively. The Committee hopes that when the government looks at the effectiveness of this program, it will examine the extent to which there are inadequate resources to make the program operate effectively.

The Committee recognizes that this policy of not using research money from the granting councils for administrative support is consistent with the practice of the councils before this program began. The Committee believes it is wrong for the government to assume that the overhead costs of research will be covered out of general operating money of universities. This too was a matter we looked at in our report on FEDERAL POLICY ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION, where we recommended that when the government supports research at universities, either through a grant or under contract, the overhead costs of that research should be covered fully.

The Next Step

While our Committee decided not to question the objectives of this program at this time, it became very clear that the Matching Grants Program of the federal government needs very careful and serious examination because it appears to contain some serious flaws. These range from a program design that is unsuited to meeting the objectives established for it, to the achievement of program results that may never have been intended.

At this stage we would like to offer some suggestions for a redesign of the program that should be considered when this program is to be evaluated.

First, we suggest that there be a reconsideration of the premise for university-industry collaboration. If we need to increase the transfer of ideas from the universities to industry, the solution may not be more university research supported by industry. The problem may lie with industry's inability to adapt good ideas that are in the pre-competitive stage and move them to the competitive stage and the market. If this is true, then more university research is not the answer; it may require other industrial incentives. The now defunct Special Research Tax Credit program had a very reasonable objective but was flawed by program design.

For more pre-competitive research that is world class, the answer could lie in strengthening the Network Of Centres of Excellence program the government announced in May of this year. But because this program is still in the design stage, it is not possible to comment on its chances for success.

Alternatively, if the government feels that we need to maintain the current level of basic research that now takes place in our universities independent of university-industry collaboration, then the solution is to ensure that the base levels of the granting councils keep up with inflation.

The Report of the University Committee of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology (NABST) to the Prime Minister also was critical of the attempt by government to try to solve the underfunding problem and the need for university-industry collaboration with one ill-defined program. The report states:

While conceptually interesting, the matching-grants policy will fail to provide any real increase over inflation before the fiscal year 1989-90. Far from solving the problem of funding university R&D, therefore, it simply compounds it. (p.126)

We note that the government has announced an additional $200 million increase in the budgets of the three councils over the next five years. This appears to be very close to estimates for inflation over this period.

The report of the University Committee of NABST also states that:

The major flaw in the matching-grants policy is that it attempts to achieve too much and fails to address the fundamental issue. While the objective of increasing collaboration and joint research activities between the private sector and the universities can be met, it is unrealistic to expect this policy to solve the overall problem...Thus the design of the matching-grants policy leaves much to be desired. (p.128)

While we have focused on the University Committee of NABST, its Industry Committee also was very critical of the Matching Grants Program.

To conclude this report, the Committee offers the following suggestions for the redesign of a matching grants program.

Recognize that research in the social sciences and humanities is different from research in the natural sciences and engineering, which in turn is different from medical sciences research. A sophisticated understanding of these significant differences is essential in designing a program of university-industry collaboration. The kinds of industry that support each of these three divisions of research are considerably different from one another and have considerably different access to financial resources to support research.

Recognize that if the objective of the program is to encourage university-industry collaboration, including university endowment funds as part of the private sector does not meet that objective. The inclusion of this category seems to be there simply to allow social sciences and humanities to get the maximum federal matching of private sector contributions.

Recognize that if the objective is to encourage an increase in support from the private sector, then there has to be some encouragement to the researchers and universities to solicit this support, and there has to be an incentive for the private sector to increase their contributions from their current level of support. This means providing overhead funding so that universities can develop such a program.

Recognize that before it renews this program, the government must undertake a thorough broad-based evaluation of its operation to date. While the government is already committed to undertaking a review, we wish to stress that such a review must not be so narrow as to focus exclusively on whether the program has met its objectives. It must include a review of other factors that go into any broad-based measurement of effectiveness. This includes such elements as the appropriateness of the program, its relevance to the stated needs, its acceptance by the community it is intended to serve, its secondary and unintended effects, and the cost of its delivery.

The review must include an examination of the original purpose of the program and an evaluation as to whether the achievements of this program are still appropriate. This also means consideration of whether there are better ways of achieving the stated objectives such as alternative programs like the new Network of Centres of Excellence program or special strategic grants through the research granting councils.

Lastly, the government is to undertake this broad based review in 1989-90, it should begin now by paying special attention to the design of the evaluation and by submitting it to the program clients to ensure that the evaluators will be looking at the right things. For example, it may be that a special evaluation committee should be set up to advise the Minister or Deputy Minister on what is an appropriate set of elements that should go into this evaluation. We look forward to seeing the results of this evaluation and serve notice that we may call on the department at the beginning of the next fiscal year to explain how the department will undertake this evaluation.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 28, 1988

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE JOHN FORBES MACNEILL, Q.C.

FORMER CLERK OF THE SENATE AND CLERK OF THE PARLIAMENTS—TRIBUTES

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, those of you who had the privilege of knowing John MacNeill will share my sadness at his passing yesterday at the age of 90. John MacNeill was well known. He was Clerk of the Senate and Clerk of the Parliaments, and a Master in Chancery for many years. Before that he was Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate, following several years with the Department of Justice.

John MacNeill was born in 1897 in Hampton, New Brunswick. He received his law degree from Dalhousie University and was appointed to the bar of Nova Scotia. He served in World War I from 1915 to 1919, after which he came to Ottawa. For a time—I believe it was around 1924—he served as Secretary to Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, a former Chief Justice of Canada, who was then the chairman of the Statute Revision Commission.

In his day John MacNeill was considered one of the best constitutional lawyers and experts. Here in the Senate no decision was taken by either side if there was any doubt without first consulting John MacNeill. In short, I would describe him as a gentleman and a scholar. He was always extremely pleasant and everyone enjoyed dealing with him.

[Translation]

Personally, I remember a man who was an asset to the Senate. He reminds us, perhaps, of a time when this institution was more serene. It would be difficult to imagine John MacNeill in the context of 1988.

I would point out that after he left the Senate in 1968, he never failed to send me Christmas greetings. We saw each other a few times; we sometimes spoke on the telephone.

Frankly, John MacNeill is someone I shall not forget; no one fortunate enough to have met him will forget him. Speaking on behalf of all senators, I extend to Mrs. MacNeill, their two daughters and all members of their family our kindest regards and deepest sympathy.

[English]

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, speaking on behalf of this side, I want to associate myself and, I am sure, all of my colleagues with everything Senator Flynn has said.

I did not have the personal pleasure of knowing Mr. MacNeill as well as Senator Flynn did, but I did have many dealings with him and met him on numerous occasions. I think it may have been the good fortune of a number of my colleagues, who may not have been here during Mr. MacNeill's time with the Senate, to have met him frequently in the halls. I remember particularly that he was a fairly frequent visitor. One of the places I used to meet him was the Senate barber shop, where we would continue the discussions we had had in past years on the Senate and public affairs in general. He was, indeed, one of those great public servants, a man of very high calibre who had the respect of all individuals, regardless of party affiliation. I, for one, never knew his party affiliation, and still do not know if he even had one.

Mr. MacNeill was an individual who impressed people by his very presence. You could argue with him, yes, but you knew he was speaking with profound knowledge and a real sense of commitment to this institution.

His death is a grave loss to Canada, but he will leave behind him memories for a number of senators who are still here, but, more than that, the real memory of an individual who contributed greatly to making the Senate what it is.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On Reports of Committees:

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I shall have a report on Bill C-58 shortly. I ask for leave to revert to Reports of Committees as soon as I receive it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 16th August, 1988, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is certainly my pleasure to support this motion. I just want to make a passing comment, and that is that I think there are some adjournments of the Senate during which pressure should not be put on committees to meet. I have always supported the concept that, when there is no business for the Senate, the Senate should not be called just to provide a reason for committees to meet. On the contrary, I have always supported the concept that, if the Senate does not sit because there is not enough business to occupy it, it should always be understood that committees with business to do should meet during such an adjournment.

However, some adjournments of the Senate can be considered summer, fall or winter breaks. I think that, while it has not been so designated officially, this is our summer break. And I think it is the only break we are going to get this summer, other than an election, which, for a senator, is not a break, and I am not using "break" in the other sense of the word.

In this case, then, I know that certain committees do plan to meet during the break. They should certainly not be discouraged from doing so, but I think it is important that we understand that this is an adjournment different from many of our other adjournments. We all understand that at Christmas, for example, committees will not be asked to meet while the Senate is not sitting. I am sure that is not the intention of Senator Doody's motion, but I think it is important for us to understand that distinction.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, my honourable friend's intervention has thoroughly confused me. I am under the impression that the interval about which he speaks will be an extremely busy one for some senators. The Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will be meeting next week. It will meet on Tuesday and plans to meet for a total of three days that week. The Committee on Foreign Affairs will be meeting on Monday of the following week and will continue to meet for another three or four days. As a member of both these committees, I think I am going to be well employed during this interval.

I am sorry to say that, unless my friend has some information for me that I do not already have, I see no dimension of a summer break in what is coming up; in fact, I see it as a very busy time. I just wonder whether I have misunderstood the signals sent to me about the meetings of these committees. As far as I am concerned, I expect to be well employed.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, I think Senator Roblin has misunderstood, and I agree with him—in fact, I also expect to be busy during this break. The only point I was trying to make was that when we discussed yesterday the possibility of an adjournment it was in the context of the need for the committees to meet during the break. That is why I said that any committee planning to meet during this two-week period should not be discouraged from doing so. I simply draw attention to the fact that there is a difference between a motion for an adjournment that constitutes a break and one during which the Senate may have no business but the committees have plenty of business.

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I really feel that I have to say a word or two on the subject that is under discussion. When Senator Frith and I discussed the possibility of this short adjournment, at all times I made it clear that it would not preclude the committees from working, from doing the task that has been assigned to them by the Senate. I do not think that when we accepted our positions here we were automatically given a schedule of summer holidays, Christmas holidays and so on. I think we were sent here to do a certain amount of work, and we accepted that. I appreciate the fact that honourable senators have done that. I thank them and I am grateful that so much of this material has gone to committee. I am also grateful to the committee members, who have indicated that they will meet during the next two weeks to deal with the material that is before them.

Honourable senators, I do not want any signals sent out—certainly not from me—that the committees are being encouraged not to meet to do the work that has been sent to them. I understand that not only are the committees mentioned by Senator Roblin sitting but the Agriculture and Forestry Committee has also scheduled meetings for next week. Those committee members have three days of work before them. I congratulate them and commend them for it. I think that is a far more admirable attitude to take than the attitude that we deserve a break, therefore we should all pack up and go home. I do not think we can really do that when there is business to attend to.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): That is right.

Senator Frith: That could apply to Christmas, too, then.

Senator Doody: That could very well be, Scrooge!

An Hon. Senator: We might even postpone Christmas.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I should like to inform the Senate that Senator Murray is not with us today. I will be pleased to take as notice any questions honourable senators may wish to ask.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill C-126, to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Rossiter, seconded by the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer, for the second reading of the Bill C-30, An Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend An Act to amend the National Parks Act.—(Honourable Senator Kenny).

Hon. Colin Kenny: Honourable senators, I should like to speak briefly on this bill. I intend to highlight areas that I believe should be examined in more detail when the bill goes to committee. The best way to do that would be to touch briefly on these points and serve notice on my colleagues that I intend to pursue these matters further in committee.

First, I should like to note that in subsection 5(1.5) the minister is called upon "to report to Parliament every two years on the state of the parks and progress towards establishing new parks." However, in subsection 5(1.1) the minister reports only to the House of Commons on the "management plan for that park in respect of resource protection, zoning, visitor use", et cetera. I am curious as to why only the House of Commons would be dealing with that report rather than Parliament.

Second, there is the question of boundaries for the Sunshine ski area. The bill was introduced some time ago and has been delayed principally because of this issue. The bill calls for the Governor in Council to establish boundaries for the Sunshine ski area. There are many people who would like to see legislated boundaries for the ski area.

● (1020)

It involves the request of Sunshine to expand beyond its current boundaries. The resort would like to build a 260-room hotel up at the top of the mountain, a new lift line and an expanded parking lot. It is a contentious issue. Skiers like to have the opportunity to have accommodation on hill, but there are many people who are concerned that, if accommodation is expanded on hill beyond that currently in existence, damage will occur to the fragile Sunshine Meadows. Likewise, there are concerns among a variety of people that expanding the parking lot will inevitably lead to further damage and overuse of an area that is already heavily used. I believe that the committee should examine this question in some detail. If the boundaries are placed in the legislation, it will make expansion difficult and will ensure the protection of a fragile area. If the boundaries can be varied, there is likely to be more development. It appears that, if Sunshine can be allowed to develop, we can also expect to see significant expansion at other ski areas within the park. I believe that the committee should examine this fully.

The question of horses, mules and donkeys in the park is also worth considering further by the committee. There are commercial operators who currently conduct tours through the park, and these animals foul the trails.

This past weekend I hiked about 40 kilometres through Banff Park. Half of the trails that I hiked on were badly fouled. The current legislation permits operators to conduct these tours through the park, and I think the committee should take a better look at that question.

The bill is important because it allows Banff to proceed further, after its plebiscite, towards a status more appropriate to a community, and it is a useful bill from that point of view. However, the committee should have an opportunity to examine how quickly the town will evolve into a more normal status. The bill is important and useful because it has increased the fines on poachers significantly.

The bill does not address some other issues that it perhaps should. It does not address the question of pingos, which are structures that occur only in the far north, specifically in the area around Tuktoyaktuk. I have seen these pingos and they are very striking abnormalities in the earth's structure. In the past the minister has spoken about devising ways to ensure that they are protected so that future generations can see them and enjoy them. Yet there is no provision in this legislation for their protection.

There is also no non-derogation clause in this legislation, and I think the committee should examine it. We heard our colleague, Senator Watt, speaking on this issue. It is an important one for our first citizens, and I believe that the committee should further examine that question.

Briefly, honourable senators, that summarizes the issues I believe we should pursue in committee. If there are no other speakers, I would be happy to see the bill go to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Rossiter, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

MUTUAL LEGAL ASSISTANCE IN CRIMINAL MATTERS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, July 28, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-58, An Act to provide for the implementation of treaties for mutual legal assistance in criminal matters and to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Immigration Act, 1976, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, July 13, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment but with the following observations:

Recognizing the importance of having a regime of mutual legal assistance in Canada in order to combat international crime more effectively, your Committee is prepared to recommend the passage of Bill C-58 without amendments. At the same time, we express serious concern about endorsing such open-ended legislation. This Bill would apply to future as well as existing mutual legal assistance treaties signed by the government of Canada. It provides no mechanism by which Parliament could screen executive arrangements whose application may affect the rights and liberties of people within our borders.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Joan B. Neiman: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

THE LATE FÉLIX LECLERC

TRIBUTES

Hon. Martial Asselin: Honourable senators, today I would like to join all those in Canada as well as abroad who since last week have risen to mourn the passing of Félix Leclerc and point out his priceless contribution to the development and promotion of French life in North America. I thought that the Senate of Canada should pay tribute to this proud and valiant Quebecer who in his poems, songs and plays strongly defended the linguistic and cultural heritage of French-speakers in this country and inspired future generations to hold high the torch of their raison d'être. Honourable senators, I wish to express our deep sorrow to all those close to the deceased.

At a time when French Canada was barely recognized internationally, especially in France, Félix Leclerc in his songs recalled the existence of this French-speaking community, isolated to be sure, but so lively, original, ambitious and talented. He was the political conscience of a people as it awoke to the modern era. He presaged the political awareness that was to grip it in the early 1960s.

From his considerable talents as a lyricist and musician came songs that remain among the most beautiful in the French repertoire, because they express simply and poetically the soul of a people, its attachment to the land and its harmony with nature.

The international French community, honourable senators, has lost one of its greatest ambassadors. At its general assembly in Yaoundé last January, the International Association of French Language Parliamentarians, which I now chair, awarded Félix Leclerc the Ordre de la pléiade, an order for the French-speaking world and the dialogue of cultures, with great honour for his inestimable contribution to the defence and promotion of the French language and culture. This order will be awarded posthumously next fall.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we wish to endorse Senator Asselin's remarks. I did not know Félix Leclerc very well, but I have heard his songs on records and I saw him on several occasions in concert in Salle Wilfrid-Pelletier at Place des Arts in Montreal. Something that struck me was that his reputation was such that usually posters would only announce "Félix". So the question "Félix who?" never required an answer. "Félix" meant Félix Leclerc.

As Senator Asselin mentioned, a great artist and a great Canadian has passed away. He leaves a great void in Canadian artistic life, but fortunately his artistic works will live a very long time in the musical life of Canada and the world.

QUEBEC COURTS AMENDMENT BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-145, to amend various acts to give effect to the reconstitution of the Quebec Provincial Court, Court of the Sessions of the Peace and Youth Court as the Court of Quebec.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On Thursday next, August 18, 1988.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Tomorrow will be fine.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: With leave, I would like to move it for tomorrow.

Senator Doody: Fine.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it seems possible that we could both speak on it tomorrow, have a committee meeting and try for Royal Assent, if there is to be Royal Assent this week.

We need to look at the schedules to ensure that the i's are dotted and the t's are crossed. Apart from that, as I understand it, this is a bill to have one name for various courts in Quebec. I suggest that we place it on the Orders of the Day for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Flynn, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-210, to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): On Thursday next, August 18, 1988—subject to correction!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I have a small problem with this bill and I think we should leave it until Thursday.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next, August 18, 1988.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its twenty-eighth report respecting Bill C-129, to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see appendix, p. 4180.)

A Clerk at the Table:

Tuesday, August 16, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense!

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Mr. Clerk, would you please read only the conclusion of the report?

[English]

A Clerk at the Table:

Finally, it is clear from the evidence received by this Committee that relevant public policy objectives can continue to be met once Air Canada is privatized. Provision of air service on uneconomic routes is no longer the exclusive responsibility of Air Canada, and the NTA permits the payment of subsidies to any airline for this activity. Regarding aid to Canada's aerospace industry, a number of policy tools are available, including DRIE and other economic development programs.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, before moving the adoption of the report, it might be wise if I drew your attention to a few matters.

First, as chairman of the committee, I wish to express appreciation for the large attendance of the committee during its hearings in the first week of August. Those who were here can attest to the fact that it was not a comfortable time to be engaged in Ottawa, but we were able to give it—and I use this phrase with some attribution in mind—more than cursory attention.

In doing so we dealt with a number of situations that perhaps were lost in the hurry with which the matter was dealt with in committee in the other place. We heard from 11 witnesses—professionals advising the government and professionals advising Air Canada in regard to this primary equity issue.

One matter that did disturb those people was the role of Air Canada as an instrument to carry out public policy. What had been overlooked was that Air Canada's role had changed from its early days. In fact, from 1977 onward its public policy role was no longer a condition of its operation, to the extent that it was not required to provide services other than on an established basis of business. From that time forward, under the Air Canada Act, the company was no longer a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways and had to operate in contemplation of profit.

Honourable senators, a point that must be remembered is that this is a privatization bill; it does not deal with deregulation of the airline industry. Indeed, in Canada the industry has, de facto, been largely deregulated since 1980, and that was enshrined in statutory form with the passage of the National Transportation Act over a year ago.

A number of other issues were dealt with by the committee, and I will just mention them since they are effectively dealt with in the report.

First, there is the matter of overhaul and operational maintenance facilities in such places as Montreal, Mississauga near Toronto, and Winnipeg. I think it is important to realize that the continuation of these facilities in those cities is a matter of statute. In other words, while no one can bind a subsequent Parliament, nevertheless, any change with respect to these facilities would require legislative change. That would also apply to the head office of the company, which is to be continued in Montreal.

With respect to safety, that matter was disposed of concisely and accurately, and the provisions in the existing legislation were brought to the attention of a number of people. The minister involved, who is also the Deputy Prime Minister, outlined to the committee the activities undertaken, not only by the present government but by previous governments, to improve and move forward in the area of aeronautical safety.

The committee dealt with the provisions of the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act in regard to safety.

With respect to bilingualism, Air Canada is specifically required to continue its policy in this regard, because the Official Languages Act applies to Air Canada. In this respect, Air Canada may be suffering somewhat from a provision in the act which its other competitors do not need to abide by. However, Air Canada would abide by that provision in any event as a crown corporation and even as a private corporation, because, by a specific provision in the Official Languages Act, that act applies to Air Canada. However, the officials of the company did point out that the company's role as a bilingual carrier had commercial and business attributes to it, so they intended to continue to be bilingual, irrespective of whether or not that provision remained in place.

The share offering will be a primary issue. The committee had to examine this situation with some care, because the issue is up to a maximum of 45 per cent. The minister, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, pointed out that there might be some flexibility under certain circumstances beyond that 45 per cent. However, in a rather skillful way, which, in the opinion of the committee, was very well done, the majority share ownership, which will continue in the government at this time, will be proxied to the chairman of Air Canada to be voted in accordance with the wishes of the majority of the minority shareholders. In other words, what is happening here is that an arms-length relationship is being established between government and the company, and in this way private investors in this primary issue will be able to control the company, even though they are in the minority position. This public pronouncement will be part of a prospectus that will be subject to due diligence. Therefore, while it is not in legislative form, nevertheless, it has tremendous impact, as people who will be purchasing the shares will be doing so in accordance with this commitment.

There may be some concern. There was an attempt, I must say, by one witness to put a gloss on it, but there may be some concern by some investors that a majority remains in the hands of the government. Technical advisors from the U.K. to Air Canada and company pointed out that in the airline industry partialized public ownership is known and sophisticated investors are comfortable with it. One witness said that, in the minds of some people, having the government concerned to the extent of the suggested percentage level might be looked upon as a continuing strength.

The secondary issue of shares, which is provided for in the bill, will mean the total privatization of Air Canada. When that issue will take place we do not know, but the legislation has been drafted in such a way that total privatization can take place. Of course, the government's ownership will be effected by way of a secondary issue rather than a primary issue as in this case.

There is one other point. Air Canada is committed to making available to its employees an ability to participate in this primary issue. The terms and conditions of this proposal have not been finalized, but they will be outlined in the prospectus.

The committee dealt with the whole question of foreign ownership. Rather surprisingly, one competitor wanted to have the provisions protecting Air Canada from being controlled by ownership outside Canada removed. Of course, his concern did not apply. You cannot control Pacific Western Airlines Corporation because of Alberta legislation. They are the controlling shareholder; they own Canadian Airlines International. However, we noted the point and felt that the pertinent provisions in the bill were positive and proper. Moreover, the Aeronautics Act has a similar provision.

With regard to employment issues, I was impressed by the stridence of some of the union representatives' remarks on safety and such issues. Their attitude did not seem to surprise officials of Air Canada. I think that union representatives believe that jobs will be protected by having a flexible and aggressive private enterprise Air Canada. However, there may be some disquiet in the minds of certain leaders, and, again, whether it is from ideological standpoints or otherwise is not for me to say. I believe that the Air Canada people recognize, as they have in the past, the importance of being looked upon as good corporate citizens.

Honourable senators, I hope you will agree that this bill deserves your unqualified support.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, before we take a vote on this report of the committee, I wish to make a comment or two, which may be made now or at third reading.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): We do not need to take a vote on the report. It is adopted because it reports the bill without amendment.

Senator Roblin: I am glad to be instructed on procedure by my honourable friend. His comments in this respect are always so enlightening, and I thank him, as usual, for his courtesy in keeping me well informed.

Senator Frith: I thank my friend for his appreciation of my helpfulness.

Senator Roblin: There is one portion of this bill that attracted some attention on the part of some of us from the province of Manitoba. I am referring to the provision to do with the undertaking of the corporation to maintain its base in Winnipeg, as it has done for some time in the past.

The history of the relationship between Air Canada and the City of Winnipeg is long and tortuous. It is one in which I had some involvement in days gone by. However, I am struck by the fact that we are actually incorporating in the words of the statute the undertaking that the maintenance base will continue in Winnipeg, as will bases in a number of other places. I would not overlook that fact. It is to become statutory. That protection was certainly not available for the City of Winnipeg in days gone by.

I call attention to the fact that the question of the maintenance base in that city, as well as those in Montreal and Mississauga, is now covered by a statutory provision. It is perhaps unusual that such a condition should be found in a bill of this sort; nevertheless, I find it satisfactory and I am glad to see it there.

In the course of the committee's examination, we spent some time talking about maintenance bases generally, and a number of interesting points emerged which I should like to mention because I think they are deserving of some public attention.

The first is the clear undertaking of the management of Air Canada that they understood the meaning and purpose of the clause on maintenance bases and that this was designed to assure the people of Winnipeg that their interest would be considered by management in the future. They understood that it was statutory; it was part of the law; and that it was not subject to managerial change or alteration.

The second point that emerged, which I think is of some interest, is an understanding of what the term "maintenance base" means, because without some kind of definition of that term one might be a little uneasy about the meaning of the clause in the bill. It was made quite clear that the definition of the term "overhaul" has, indeed, a technical meaning in the airline industry. That meaning was placed on the record by the management of Air Canada, who stated that in order to constitute an overhaul centre a base must have the capability of doing "C" checks and "D" checks on aircraft. The importance of that definition is that "C" checks and "D" checks are really checks of very great complexity and, indeed, of a high technical requirement when aircraft are being maintained. Such a check is not just a once-over-lightly sort of operation which would not really support the technical or employment interest now engaged in the Winnipeg base. It goes much deeper than that. It means a heavy overhaul in which the aircraft is stripped and the various systems re-examined.

The management of Air Canada gave us the particulars with respect to the number of person-hours required to perform these checks in connection with, for example, a 727-type aircraft. A "C" check requires about 500 person-hours and a "D" check takes approximately 15,000 person-hours. In order to have the capability of doing that kind of heavy airframe work, these centres would need to maintain the expertise and back-up support shops required for these checks. The phrase that attracts my eye is, "The need to maintain the expertise and back-up support shops required for these kinds of checks."

I rise, therefore, to support the recommendation of the committee that the bill be reported without amendment. I agree with the chairman that we had pretty good examination of all aspects of this matter, not just the maintenance facility in Winnipeg but a great many other things as well. I think we did provide a forum where all the competing interests, if they wished, could be heard. In fact, as the chairman reminded the committee on a number of occasions, invitations were extended to possible complainants who might be expected to appear, particularly from the smaller centres and regions of Canada. I think that was a good thing to do, even though it did not prompt any response from those centres.

On the whole, the committee did a commendable job. I should like to say that the chairman was unsparing in his questioning of those who appeared before us, which perhaps is no bad thing. We had an opportunity to form a judgment as to the wisdom of this particular measure. I am glad to support it and I am glad to say that, for the first time, the interests of my city in connection with the maintenance base are actually enshrined in a statute of the Parliament of Canada.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, having heard from Senator Roblin on his concern about aspects of this bill as it relates to Winnipeg and Manitoba, I want to say a word or two about the concerns for Saskatchewan that I expressed in committee. I support the recommendation that has been brought forward by our very able chairman. However, it should be indicated for the record that the people of Saskatchewan are somewhat concerned about the level of service that might be available to them in the future, a service which, at the present time, is still quite marginal. Saskatchewan is not the biggest market for Air Canada or for any airline. We have had the experience of airlines of national importance coming into the cities of Regina and Saskatoon, trying them for a little while, and, when they did not pay, withdrawing, leaving the cities, in the end, with even poorer service than they had had before, a level of service which has hardly been restored at the present time.

On behalf of my particular region, I raised this issue with the representatives of Air Canada, who assured me that, although it had not been public policy in the past to look after areas like Saskatchewan and other provinces that do not have major markets, consideration would be given in the future to providing a good level of service and equipment. With that in mind, I feel that the future can be even brighter for places like Saskatchewan.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to support the bill. Like Senator Roblin, I simply wanted to indicate the concerns of people in our part of the world about the service we might get in the future from a privatized Air Canada.

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, with your leave I would like to comment briefly on the committee's report.

I think our country had no choice when our neighbour the United States decided a few years ago to deregulate air transportation. It was clear at the time that Canada could not continue with the system it had, namely a regulated industry.

Once the concept that originated in the United States was well established there, it started to take hold in Canada as well, Air Canada being the exception. I think it is clear that considering deregulation in the United States and among Air Canada's competitors in this country, we must give Air Canada the same flexibility.

The statistics are eloquent. A few years ago, Air Canada ranked seventh in the world. Today, it ranks thirteenth. There is no doubt in my mind that during the past five years when deregulation has become the norm, Air Canada's status as a crown corporation has been an obstacle to its prosperity. It was in a position to purchase CP Air, but because of the government's veto, CP Air was purchased by Pacific Western.

So first of all, I don't think we have a choice. We must give the corporation the same flexibility as the rest of the industry. Second, I think it is a very good idea, if in its wisdom the government and our legislators, for specific social reasons, want a company, any company, to provide certain services to isolated communities, to have prices reflect the real cost and to subsidize the carrier directly.

About official languages, it seems to me this is now part of the Canadian Constitution, but it was a good idea to include the provision in the legislation governing this country's foremost carrier.

Finally, the only part I find rather surprising is the provision that the government reserves 45 per cent of the shares and at the same time publicly instructs the chairman of the board to vote with the majority of private investors. I fail to understand the rationale behind the government's approach, especially since the government announced that in the final instance all Air Canada shares will be offered for sale to the Canadian public.

To sum up my thoughts on the matter, honourable senators, I personally support this step by the government. I would even say we have no choice, if we want Air Canada to continue to expand and to compete on an equal footing with its competitors.

On motion of Senator Kelly, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

AGRICULTURE

DISPERSAL OF BREEDING HERDS IN DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS—TAX DEFERRAL ON LIVESTOCK SALES

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate—or, perhaps, the deputy leader, who usually brings in delayed answers. He will recall that some time ago the government announced that a provision would be put into the Income Tax Act to defer taxes on livestock sales in those areas where the drought situation required that there be a dispersal of the breeding herds.

I should like to ask the minister if he could find out and advise this chamber whether or not a directive has been issued by the Department of National Revenue spelling out the details and the terms and conditions on which this deferral can and will be made, or if the Department of National Revenue has issued a press release or any other communiqué that would give the producers the information they require to take advantage of this announcement.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of my colleague, Mr. MacKay, on that matter. The one press release that I have in front of me was issued by the Department of Agriculture on June 30 announcing the tax deferral for 1988. I shall inquire of Mr. MacKay to see what further action his department has taken.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the reason I am aware of that—and I am sure that many producers appreciate that—is that we are now approaching the season when producers will have to take some action, and they will want to know what to do in order to comply with it to their benefit.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

SELF-GOVERNMENT AND NATIVE LAND CLAIMS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Murray as the Leader of the Government in the Senate. My question deals with whether or not the government intends to announce an overall policy framework and objectives concerning the aboriginal peoples.

Senator Murray, this is a follow-up to my previous question, which I asked some time ago.

I am not referring to day-to-day policies to deal with the various issues, processes or problems. I am talking about policies and actions that would indicate how a Conservative government sees the aboriginal peoples in the future of Canada.

For example, free trade, privatization and the decentralization of government power provide us with a good idea of the government's vision for the future of Canada in a number of areas. Whether the government is right or wrong in these initiatives is not important in the context of my question. The point is that the government does have a vision for the future of the country in these matters.

However, when it comes to aboriginal matters, the government seems content simply to follow through on the policy initiatives that were left over by the previous administration. I am referring to the major policy initiatives to negotiate land claims agreements, to establish an aboriginal constitutional process, and to move towards greater aboriginal self-government. Some of those policies have to be renewed or replaced because they have become outdated and less workable.

Nevertheless, the government has yet to put forward its own policy initiative and its own vision of how the aboriginal peoples will be able to take their rightful place in Canadian society and within Confederation.

My question is: When can we expect the government to develop and announce the types of policies I am referring to?

• (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my friend has read a prepared statement in which he has identified certain areas in respect of which he would like to have a response from the government indicating what the impact of some of these matters would be on the aboriginal peoples. I shall take the matter under advisement and try to bring in a reply to his question as soon as possible.

With regard to constitutionally entrenched self-government, the federal government left a proposal on the table in March of 1987. That proposal was supported by a number of provinces. Unfortunately, it did not have sufficient support from other provinces and from the representatives of the aboriginal groups to enable us to proceed with a constitutional amendment. That being the case, it seems to me that we need a new process. We have been meeting with representatives of the aboriginal peoples with a view to agreeing on a process that will eventually lead to agreement on a self-government amendment. I do not think there is anything that I can usefully add at this time.

Senator Watt: Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that Senator Murray will follow up on my request. With regard to the constitutional process, as senators know, a certain set of issues was supposed to have been dealt with by way of constitutional amendment in the form of a resolution. I think the Government of Canada does have an obligation to the aboriginal peoples to live up to its commitments. The previous administration worked out specific issues that were to be dealt with in the future—matters having to do with self-government, an economic base, a land base, communications, transportation and things of that nature.

Within the aboriginal societies, honourable senators, there are a great many problems that will probably never disappear. I think that from time to time we should do everything in our power to try to tackle those problems and see whether we can come up with some solutions. In my opinion, after having been in Ottawa for the last three years, on a number of occasions, when aboriginal peoples have brought forward a problem or presented a solution to a problem, there has been a tendency to sweep the matter under the carpet. I think now is the time for all of us to take this matter seriously, to tackle these problems and to try to work towards finding solutions to them.

I am not suggesting to senators or to members of Parliament that we deal with every little problem that arises in aboriginal societies. There are, however, major issues that need to be addressed. We need to know where we belong. How do we deal with a society that might be slightly different from societies which now exist and have existed in the past? I think we should examine closely ways in which the two societies can co-exist for the betterment of this country and for all of us.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the points that the honourable senator is making, although I do believe they would be made more appropriately in a debate rather than during the oral question period. I simply advise him that the government does have a land claims policy, for example. This has led to an agreement in principle between the Government of Canada and the Dene nations, which I hope will be ratified before long. There have also been discussions on other matters with the Labrador-Inuit Association, with the Council of Aboriginal Peoples in the Yukon and so forth. There is a policy framework within which the government has been operating.

In any case, I will examine Senator Watt's opening statement in this exchange and see what response my colleague, Mr. McKnight, can make to it as soon as possible.

THE ENVIRONMENT

DEADLINE FOR ELIMINATION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Preliminary to my putting the question, perhaps I should remind honourable senators that the policy of the government is that lead in gasoline is to be eliminated by 1993. Last month, however, a congressional report prepared by the United States Department of Health and Human Services changed the basis of the understanding of the problems related to lead poisoning.

The Canadian determination of 1993 as the time at which lead will be eliminated in gasoline was based upon the dangerous level being 25 micrograms per decalitre, whereas the congressional report now states that the danger level is estimated to be at 10 to 15 micrograms per decalitre. This means that the basis upon which we have made our decision to eliminate lead from gasoline by 1993 is low by 40 to 60 per cent.

My question, then, is: Is the government making plans now or has it made a decision yet to bring forward the date at which lead must be eliminated from gasoline? I suggest that from these figures the date should be brought forward to approximately 1990.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I appreciate the statement of the honourable senator. The matter is now under consideration by the government. I shall ask my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, to prepare a report for the Senate.

[Senator Watt.]

TRANSPORT

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I direct my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations. It relates to what I presume is one of his responsibilities, which is to ensure fairness between the provinces, to the extent that he can do that.

My question has to do with the Port of Churchill. There has been put to the federal government a request—and this is backed by all of the parties in the province of Manitoba; there is unanimity among the provincial parties there—that the government endeavour to commit itself to moving some grain through the Port of Churchill this year. This is an urgent matter, because, as the honourable senator knows, the port opens in about the first week of August and has a very short shipping season, which ends in October. It is urgent that a decision be made in this regard.

The provincial parties have approached the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, who has refused to take any action in this matter.

My question is: First, has the minister received any communication from the Government of Manitoba in this regard or has he been in touch with that government? Second, would he be prepared to make the case with the minister responsible or with the members of cabinet? If nothing is done, honourable senators, and if the Port of Churchill does not have a shipping season this year, it is likely that it could be closed forever.

● (1450)

I seem to think that a letter concerning the Port of Churchill has gone from Mr. Benoît Bouchard, the Minister of Transport, to the Government of Manitoba, but I shall have to confirm that.

So far as the minister of state for the Wheat Board is concerned, I am not sure that it is accurate to say that he refuses to take any action, as Senator Molgat puts it. He, however, like all ministers, is subject to some limitations in the exercise of his responsibilities and the achievement of what he might consider desirable vis-à-vis the Canadian Wheat Board.

Having said that, I assure the honourable senator that it is no part of anybody's intention or desire to see the Port of Churchill suffer. There has, of course, been drought, and the amount of grains being shipped out of the country is not of a quantity, so far, to warrant very extensive use of that port. However, I shall ask for a further report from Mr. Mayer on the matter.

Senator Molgat: I shall wait for the reply of the minister.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO MANITOBA FOR MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, some time ago I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question regarding the Western Diversification Fund and the very small amount of money that has been advanced to Manitoba. There was a request by the Government of Manitoba that a different approach be taken to some of the funds, and that was for infrastructure in certain municipalities.

The minister assured me that he would obtain the information. Has he received that information yet?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am aware that the matter is still under discussion between the Government of Manitoba and the minister responsible for the western diversification department, Mr. McKnight. I will ask Mr. McKnight whether he has anything further to report on the matter at this time.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have three delayed answers to questions. There was a question on July 5, 1988, by Senator Gigantès regarding Canada-United States Relations—Treatment of Canadian Circuit Boards by United States Customs. On July 19, 1988, there was a question by Senator Marsden regarding Paraguay, and a question by Senator Grafstein regarding Panama. I ask that these answers be printed as part of today's proceedings.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN CIRCUIT BOARDS BY UNITED STATES CUSTOMS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on July 5 last by the Honourable Philippe Deane Gigantès regarding Canada-United States Relations—Treatment of Canadian Circuit Boards by United States Customs.

(The answer follows:)

ATI Technologies of Scarborough, Ontario, produces high quality graphic circuit boards for use in IBM compatible computers. A number of ATI shipments have been detained by U.S. Customs, particularly in Buffalo for suspected copyright infringement. Under U.S. Customs procedures, the shipments will be released if, following evaluation, no infringement is determined to exist.

Officials have been working closely with the company as well as with appropriate U.S. authorities in both Buffalo and Washington with a view to resolving the firm's problems. The company maintains that no copyright infringement is involved.

While, from a policy perspective, we question the appropriateness of U.S. Customs procedures applicable to cases of suspected intellectual property infringement involving patents, copyrights or trade marks, it would not appear that U.S. Customs officials are exceeding their mandate or engaging in harassment in this instance.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PARAGUAY—STATUS OF SEÑOR HERMEN RAFAEL SAGUIER—GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE AND ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on July 19 last by the Honourable Lorna Marsden regarding Foreign Affairs—Paraguay—Status of Señor Hermen Rafael Saguier—Government Knowledge and Action.

Señor Saguier has returned to Paraguay and is apparently circulating freely. In fact, he has appeared publicly on several occasions as he is campaigning for leadership of the "Partido Liberal Radical Autenticok" along with the other leader, Domingo Laino.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

PANAMA—SAFETY AND SECURITY OF VICE-PRESIDENT—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on July 19 last by the Honourable Jerahmiel S. Grafstein regarding Foreign Affairs—Panama—Safety and Security of Vice-President—Government Representation.

(The answer follows:)

According to most recent information the former Vice-President of Panama, Dr. Esquivel is now not in hiding. He is currently working at his medical clinic and leading a normal life.

THE ESTIMATES, 1988-89

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twenty-Sixth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates, 1988-89), presented in the Senate on July 27, 1988.

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, last February the National Finance Committee received the federal government estimates and began studying them in accordance with the procedure established over the last ten years. Briefly we considered the Government Expenditure Plan by taking a closer look at Part I of the estimates. Then we shifted our attention to a specific program or activity described in one of the volumes which make up Part III of the estimates. This year the committee chose to examine the Matching Grants Program of the three research granting councils—namely, the Medical Research Council, the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, and the Social Sciences Humanities Research Council.

We decided to study this field for two reasons. First, it is the extension of last year's work on post-secondary education which led to a number of comments on research granting councils and the state of research in Canadian universities.

Second, we knew that the federal government intended to evaluate the Matching Grants Program in 1989-90 and we thought our work on the comprehensive auditing formula might apply to this program. In that context we heard evidence, and I would urge all senators interested in cooperation between universities and industry to read the evidence heard during the proceedings.

The program is aimed essentially at having universities and the private sector work more closely and intensify university research.

The evidence heard by the committee led most members to come to disappointing conclusions:

First, the program is not suited to its objectives;

Second, there was a very negative reaction from the business community;

Third, there is insufficient data for determining whether the program convinced the business community to contribute more to university research;

Fourth, there is no provision in the program as to the cost to users of administering it.

However, we did not conclude that the program should be ended or amended. Rather, we chose to wait for the findings of the more in-depth study to be done next year, to see whether our concerns are justified.

However, we made a number of suggestions to those who will undertake that study:

That study should be very wide in scope, rather than limited to simply determining whether the program is meeting its objectives;

An over-all study of the program should deal with the degree of that program's acceptance in the area it is supposed to serve;

We have found that the business community and university researchers are not favourably inclined to the program;

The study should determine whether the program is indeed designed to reach its official goals. We found that the program is not well suited, as it provides no incentives to the industrial sector and research people.

The study should determine whether the program is generating unforeseen side effects;

And foremost, in my view, it should determine whether the program is geared to the problem or situation it is supposed to solve.

Therefore, honourable senators, I move that the report be concurred in.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION BILL

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

TUESDAY, August 16, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-129, An Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, July 21, 1988, examined the said Bill and now report the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

In 1937, Air Canada, or Trans-Canada Airlines (TCA) as it was then known, was created by the government under the Trans-Canada Airlines Act as a subsidiary of Canadian National Railways to provide coast-to-coast air transportation. The early growth of the company came about largely through government assistance and direction; the most profitable routes were guaranteed and the company's operating costs covered. In exchange, the airline agreed to service unprofitable routes. This allowed Air Canada to grow into a world class-airline. Canadian Pacific, its chief competitor, was denied access to many routes and, in fact, it was not permitted to compete freely with Air Canada on the trans-continental routes until 1979.

In 1977 the enactment of the Air Canada Act established Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation and provided its first commercial mandate "to operate in accordance with sound business principles and in contemplation of profit". Since 1977, the company has not required financial assistance and has not been required to operate unprofitable routes.

On April 12, 1988, the government announced its intention to issue shares in Air Canada to the public. A number of reasons have been cited by both Air Canada and the government for moving the corporation into the private sector at this time. First, and perhaps most critically is that since 1980 the operating environment for North American airlines has changed dramatically. Deregulation has become the de facto environment under which the Canadian airline industry has conducted business, with this being formalized on January, 1988, when the new National Transportation Act was proclaimed.

In the new environment the airline industry is faced with increased competition and must respond more rapidly to changing market forces than had previously been the case. It is difficult for Air Canada to respond to these new conditions due to the restraints placed on it as a Crown corporation. At present, under the Financial Administration Act, Crown corporations are required to seek government approval for corporate and financial plans. Once shares are issued to the public, Air Canada and the local service carriers in which the Corporation has an equity position would be relieved of the reporting requirements of the Financial Administration Act providing the management of these companies with the flexibility required to operate in an intensely competitive environment.

Second, privatization would allow Air Canada direct access to equity markets, enabling it to acquire the capital required to grow and to finance its major fleet renewal program into the 1990's.

Third, privatizing Air Canada places all airlines in Canada on an equal footing. As private companies, Air Canada's competitors must pay market rates of interest on their debt issues and must compete for equity investment in the capital markets. These competitors regard the lower rate of interest carried by Air Canada debt and any increase in equity investment in the company provided by the government as a subsidy.

The major provisions of Bill C-129 include: the transfer of shares from the Minister of Transport to a Minister designated by the Governor in Council; the continuation of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act (CBCA); the imposition of certain restrictions on the company such as the maintenance of operational and overhaul bases in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, as well as retaining Montreal as the head office location; the acquisition, holding and disposition, by the Minister, of shares in Air Canada; restrictions on foreign and individual share holdings; the sale by Air Canada of the shares; and the application of the Official Languages Act to the company.

A significant and unique feature of this privatization is the fact that the government intends to sell only about 45% of its shares in the primary offering to the public and put forth secondary offerings at a later date. While this is not set out in the legislation, the government has made its intentions known on the matter through public policy statements.

In its consideration of Bill C-129, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce heard from eleven groups of witnesses on August 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 1988.

In addition the Committee wrote to a number of municipalities in Canada and to Canadian Airlines International and Wardair. Written submissions were received from the latter two, both of which were filed as appendices to the Committee's hearings. The issues raised during the Committee's consideration of Bill C-129 are addressed in the following section of this report.

ISSUES

AIR CANADA'S PUBLIC POLICY ROLE

Some witnesses expressed the view that once privatized, Air Canada would no longer be able to carry out a public policy role on behalf of the government such as the provision of air service to remote or small communities. Air Canada, government officials and other witnesses contradicted this testimony, noting that Air Canada does not at present serve a designated public policy purpose, particularly since the enactment of the Air Canada Act of 1977, which directed the airline to act "in contemplation of profit".

In response to questions from the Committee, the Minister outlined policy instruments now available to this government to accomplish public policy objectives which in the past were addressed specifically to TCA/Air Canada. With respect to the provision of air transportation services to small and under-served areas, the Minister noted that the National Transportation Act already provides for government subsidies to ensure that such service is furnished while also keeping the cost transparent.

The Minister further noted that support for Canada's aerospace industry was available under DRIE and other economic development programmes and agencies as well as from the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, which brings together researchers, scientists and technologists in industry and universities.

Concerning the use of Air Canada as an instrument to further promote bilingualism, clause 10 of Bill C-129 maintains the application of the Official Languages Act to the Corporation. Also, as a federally-regulated employer, Air Canada will continue to be subject to the application of the Employment Equity Act.

In sum, after Air Canada is privatized, all related public policy objectives may continue to be met through other legislative means.

OPERATIONAL & OVERHAUL FACILITIES

In testimony before the Committee, the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAMAW) voiced concern that the safeguards in Bill C-129 requiring the maintenance of operational and overhaul centres in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg could be undermined once Air Canada is privatized and needs to rationalize its operations. However, testimony from Air Canada officials made it clear that the corporation remains committed to maintaining maintenance facilities in these cities. Furthermore, withdrawal of the facilities from any of these centres would require a change in the legislation, since sub-paragraph 6(1)(d) of Bill C-129 is explicit in this regard.

It should be noted, however, that the legislation does not preclude the establishment of new bases in other Canadian cities.

While the legislation is explicit with respect to the maintenance of operational and overhaul centres in these three cities, a question was raised in the Committee regarding the definition of an "overhaul centre". Some witnesses warned that without an exact definition in the legislation, the Corporation would not be compelled to maintain a certain number of personnel and level of facilities at the overhaul centre in Montreal and Winnipeg. However, Mr. Pierre Jeannot, President and CEO of Air Canada, assured the Committee that the term "overhaul" does indeed have a technical meaning in the airline industry. He stated that in order to constitute an overhaul centre, a base must have the capability of doing "C checks" and "D checks" on aircraft. These checks require heavy overhaul work in which the aircraft is stripped and the various systems re-examined. Mr. Jeannot noted that a "C check" requires about 500 person-hours for a 727-type aircraft, while a "D check" takes approximately 15,000 person-hours. In order to have the capability of doing this kind of heavy airframe work, these centers would need to maintain the expertise and backup support shops required for these checks.

Mr. Jeannot further stated that as overhaul work on the airline's 727s diminishes with the aircraft's gradual phase-out over a period of time, overhaul work on the new A-320s will be building up. The ratio of work carried out in Montreal and Winnipeg on the 727s and A-320s will be unchanged between these two bases.

SAFETY

Another issue raised by labour representatives was that of safety. The Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) felt that once privatized, Air

Canada might be less safe than if it remained a Crown Corporation; that in the pursuit of profit the airline would be tempted to cut corners in the area of maintenance and reduce its margin of safety. The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAMAW) also felt that the current high margin of safety maintained by the airline would not be sustained in the future. According to these witnesses, the general level of safety in the rest of the industry would also be reduced since other private carriers now use Air Canada as the yardstick by which they measure their own safety standards.

The Committee received evidence that Canadian airlines' required safety standards set out in the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act are among the highest in the world. Section 3 of the National Transportation Act requires that the "national transportation system meet the highest practicable safety standards".

The Aeronautics Act and its regulations also cover most aspects of airline safety. The Act was amended in 1985 greatly strengthening the law dealing with safety issues such as standards for airworthiness, air traffic services and navigational aids and medical reports for licenses. In addition, Transport Canada's enforcement powers have been increased and penalties for infractions have been strengthened. The NTA and the Aeronautics Act apply to Air Canada regardless of whether it remains a Crown corporation or becomes a private company. Aside from the legislation covering airline safety, the Committee was assured by Air Canada officials that safety is basic to their operations and that the airline would never compromise it. Furthermore they stated that this country's airlines, whether privately or publicly owned, follow very high safety standards. Indeed, Mr. Claude Taylor, Chairman of Air Canada, noted that he would rate Canada's two large airlines "equally in terms of their attitude, philosophy, and determination towards safety."

When he appeared before the Committee, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, P.C., emphasized that safety is fundamental to transportation legislation and noted that the preamble to the National Transportation Act contains words on the issue. He pointed out that several federal agencies now monitor safety for all federally regulated air carriers.

BILINGUALISM

Under clause 10 of Bill C-129, Air Canada will continue to be subject to the Official Languages Act. Some witnesses stated their belief that Air Canada had tried to gain an exemption from this Act and that these services would be diluted once the Corporation becomes privately held. In response, Air Canada officials stated that while they did have questions regarding the application of this Act, the company actively supports bilingualism. Indeed, according to officials, the bilingualism requirement is seen as a definite advantage to the Corporation.

In an appearance before the Legislative Committee of the House of Commons, an official from the Office of the Commissioner of Official Languages verified that the Official Languages Act will continue to apply to Air Canada after it is privatized.

Board of Directors

Bill C-129 provides for the election of a new Board of Directors at the close of the first annual meeting of shareholders of the Corporation after shares are issued to the public. Under sub-clause 11(2), such a meeting would be required to be held not later than six months following the end of the Corporation's financial year in which the share issue takes place.

Individual shareholders are limited under subparagraph 6(1)(a) of the Bill to holding, owning or controlling a maximum of 10% of the voting shares of the Corporation. According to testimony by Dr. Janet Smith, Deputy Minister, Office of Privatization and Regulatory Affairs, this provision is intended to encourage a wide distribution of the company's shares. However, concern was expressed by some members of the Committee that a widely held share distribution could lead to the company becoming management-controlled. It was suggested that protection of minority shareholders might be enhanced by providing for cumulative voting when electing directors of the corporation. Cumulative voting permits a shareholder to cast votes for a director equal to the number of shares held multiplied by the number of positions to be voted upon. Evidence submitted to the Committee by Dr. Smith indicated that cumulative voting is provided for under the Canada Business Corporations Act (CBCA) and would come into effect if a corporation specifically provided for it in the articles of the corporation. This evidence also indicated that it would not be necessary to provide for cumulative voting in Bill C-129, as it could be provided for when the corporation files its articles pursuant to the provisions of the CBCA. However, during the transition phase previous to full privatization, the government has agreed to vote its 55% share with the majority of the 45% balance of outstanding shares. As a result, a majority of the minority of shareholders will in fact elect the directors and, according to the evidence submitted by Dr. Smith, "it would appear questionable that anything further may be necessary or appropriate". Also, there are provisions in the CBCA which protect the interests of shareholders. Thus, department officials concluded that appropriate protection would be afforded minority shareholders without providing for cumulative voting of shares.

When he appeared before the Committee, Mr. Claude Taylor, Chairman of the Board of Air Canada, stated that the minority shareholders would be represented on the Board of Directors of the Corporation and methods of achieving this goal are being examined. With respect to the question of the balance between management and non-management directors, Mr. Taylor testified that his own suggestion is that there be only two management directors on the Board with the remainder being drawn from outside the corporation. The two management directors would be the Chairman, while the chairman is an officer of the company, and the President.

Privatization in Stages

While Bill C-129 places no limit on the proportion of the Corporation's shares which the government may dispose of in the initial offering, officials have indicated that it is their intention to sell up to 45% of the shares in the first tranche. Subsequent offerings would reduce the government's holding in the Corporation, leading eventually to total privatization of Air Canada. In the interim period between the initial and final offering, the government would maintain an ownership position in the Corporation. Some questions were raised by the Committee regarding the staged privatization process envisaged by the government.

First, officials were questioned on the rationale for limiting the initial sale to 45% of the Corporation's shares rather than offering the total float of the company's shares immediately.

When he appeared before the Committee, the Honourable Donald Mazankowski, stated that a policy decision was made to sell up to 45% of the shares initially, primarily to ensure that the sale was carried out in a prudent and orderly manner. The Minister noted that this distribution is a very large undertaking and the government wants to ensure that all Canadians who wish to participate will be provided with that opportunity. At the same time the government is seeking to obtain the optimum value for the shares that are distributed. Further, the Minister indicated that there was some flexibility with respect to the size of the initial offering. Indeed, if conditions warranted it, the government would look favourably upon the option of expanding the issue beyond the 45% target.

A second question raised by the Committee concerned the effect on share prices in the initial offering of the government maintaining temporary ownership of approximately 55% of the shares. Mr. D. Torrey, Vice-Chairman, RBC - Dominion Securities and the government's adviser in the matter of Air Canada's privatization, addressed this concern. While noting that the expectation of future share sales by the government may have some bearing on the value of the initial offering, he also observed that in a capital intensive industry such as the airline industry, the expectation of additional forthcoming share issues is "not too surprising". Mr. Torrey further noted that the government's publicized intention to vote its shares with the majority of the non-government-held shares will largely dispel concern in the equity market, if any exists, and some Canadians could, perhaps, take some comfort in the government owning a significant block of shares.

Air Canada's financial advisers, Morgan Stanley & Company and Warburg Securities, testified that they believe investors will feel comfortable with partial government ownership since the prospectus will contain the government's commitment to proxy its shares to the Chairman of the Board of Directors to vote in accordance with the will of the majority of private shareholders. The underwriters will deal with this aspect of the sale in the due diligence proceedings.

A final question regarding the staged privatization of Air Canada involved the effect on management decision-making of the government retaining a majority of the shares. Mr. Claude Taylor, Chairman of Air Canada, responded to this concern by noting that the government is committed to being an arm's length shareholder and the prospectus will contain this commitment. Further, Bill C-129 permits, and the government has stated that it intends, the eventual full privatization of the company.

Foreign Ownership

The National Transportation Act limits foreign ownership of transportation facilities to a maximum of 25%. Bill C-129 contains in sub-paragraph 6(1)(b) a similar provision designed to prevent non-residents from holding, beneficially owning, or controlling more than 25% of the voting shares of the company. For greater certainty, sub-paragraph 6(1)(c) of the Bill was amended in the House of Commons Legislative Committee. This would limit the aggregate percentage of votes cast by non-resident shareholders to 25% of the total shares of the company.

Mr. Taylor noted that the government has stated that there would not be a foreign offering of the shares in the first issue. Also, the company's financial advisers indicated to the Committee that they had advised that the company's shares initially be listed only on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges. When foreign shareholdings increase to a sufficient size, consideration would be given to listing on foreign stock exchanges.

A submission to the Committee by the Canadian Union of Public Employees suggested that a future government might change the restrictions on foreign ownership thereby permitting a foreign takeover of Air Canada. The impetus for such change, according to this submission, would come from pressure on the Canadian government as a result of the Free Trade Agreement (FTA).

This Committee received no evidence to corroborate this allegation but the following points should be noted. First, the present government can do no more than codify the ownership restrictions in this legislation. It cannot bind the hands of future legislators should they decide to change the law.

Second, under the FTA, existing restrictions on foreign ownership in the transportation industry are grand-fathered and the sale of Crown corporations is exempt from any national treatment obligations.

Employment Issues

The Committee heard testimony from officials of three of the unions representing Air Canada employees. These unions included the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE), the Canadian Auto Workers (CAW), and the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers (IAMAW). In addition, the Committee heard evidence from the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC).

The officials from these unions were unanimous in their opposition to any sale of Air Canada shares to the public and they raised a number of employment-related concerns. Specifically, it was suggested that the privatization of Air Canada would affect employees adversely if the Corporation took the following actions: the transfer offshore of all financial reporting, invoicing and data processing and the increased contracting out of work to foreign nationals; withdrawal from certain Air Canada routes in favour of regional carriers resulting in lower-paid non-unionized jobs for employees; and use by the Corporation of the employee pension fund surplus.

In response to these charges, Air Canada officials made the following points in testimony before the Committee. First, the finance and accounting department are located in Winnipeg because it is cost effective to operate there and the company is continuing to work to keep Canadian systems and processes efficient in order to maintain jobs in Canada. Also, there are advantages to being a good corporate citizen and the company intends to continue this practice whether as a public or a private corporation.

Second, in the last five years station closings and downsizings have affected a relatively modest number of employees (about 80 people) with between 80%-90% electing to stay at Air Canada and move with company assistance to another station. Some of the remaining number accepted separation packages and retired while less than half a dozen went to another carrier. In many cases the regional carriers which take over Air

Canada routes have unions of their own. According to Air Canada officials, starting salaries at other carriers are comparable with those of Air Canada and in some cases are somewhat higher, although Air Canada's top rates are higher than the top rates of the regional carriers, depending upon the job category.

Third, the company's pension plans have always been separate from those of the federal government and must conform to the same standards and practices as those applied in private sector plans. The Pension Benefits Standard Act of 1985 requires a corporation such as Air Canada to have an actuarial surplus of 25% of the liabilities and obligations of the fund, before applying for a withdrawal of funds. This would amount to about $500 million of true actuarial surplus in Air Canada's case. (At the last evaluation the Corporation had an actuarial deficiency of $127 million). If the Corporation did have an actuarial surplus in excess of 25% it could apply to obtain the amount that was in excess of 25% of the obligations. However, the Corporation would be required to apply to the Department of Financial Institutions, and its employees and the unions would have to be advised of that. Representatives of the employees would have the right to be heard on the matter. It should also be recognized that The Pension Benefits Standards Act, does not permit a reduction in contributions if an unfunded liability exists in the pension plan.

Aircraft Procurement

Several submissions to the Committee suggested that Air Canada still had a public policy role to fulfill in the form of support for the Canadian aerospace industry through aircraft purchases. In the view of these submissions, such a role would be abandoned once Air Canada is privatized.

However, other evidence the Committee heard indicated that Air Canada was not currently receiving any outside direction regarding the type of equipment it purchased. For instance, in considering its recent purchase of A-320 aircraft, Mr. Jeannot, President of Air Canada, stated that the company was not asked by the government to consider industrial offsets for Canada. Mr. Jeannot indicated that requiring such offsets would not be in conformity with the GATT. Subsequent evidence showed that Article 4 of the Agreement on Trade in Civil Aircraft in the Texts of the Tokyo Round Agreements requires that signatories permit purchasers of civil aircraft to be free to select suppliers on the basis of commercial and technological factors.

CONCLUSION

The Air Canada Act of 1977 effectively placed the airline at arm's length from the government by instructing the corporation to conduct its business affairs with prudence, diligence and in "contemplation of profit". The coming into force of the National Transportation Act (NTA) in January 1988 has further enhanced the need for corporate flexibility in order to remain competitive in a deregulated environment. In addition to providing such flexibility by removing from the Corporation the reporting requirements of the Financial Administration Act, Bill C-129 would permit the company to raise in equity markets the capital needed for equipment purchases.

Some of the concerns raised by witnesses such as those respecting airline safety and job security seem to be derived from the competitive conditions fostered by deregulation, rather than from the provisions of Bill C-129. With regard to safety, extremely high standards have been set under the NTA and the Aeronautics Act. Bill C-129 does not change these standards and this Committee was further reassured by the commitment of Air Canada officials to continue to meet and exceed these safety standards.

On the issue of job security, Mr. Taylor, in testimony before the Committee, put it most succinctly when he stated that "the strongest guarantee for job security in any business is growth, and the approval of Bill C-129 will give us the opportunity to grow and to guarantee jobs for people".

With respect to concerns about the company's continuing commitment to bilingualism, maintenance of overhaul centres, retaining the head office in Montreal and foreign ownership of the airline, these restrictions are dealt with explicitly in Bill C-129 and cannot be altered without further legislative action.

Concerning employee pensions, these will remain protected under the Pension Benefits Standards Act. Employees will also be offered the opportunity to participate in the company directly through an employee share offering.

In testimony before the Committee, the Minister confirmed the government's statement of policy requiring the government to proxy its shares to the Chairman of the Board to vote in accordance with the desires of the majority of the private shareholders. The Minister also confirmed that this statement of policy would be contained in the prospectus of the share offering. The Committee feels that this is a skillfull way of managing the issue of government majority ownership in the Corporation which might have been of concern to some investors.

Finally, it is clear from the evidence received by this Committee that relevant public policy objectives can continue to be met once Air Canada is privatized. Provision of air service on uneconomic routes is no longer the exclusive responsibility of Air Canada, and the NTA permits the payment of subsidies to any airline for this activity. Regarding aid to Canada's aerospace industry, a number of policy tools are available, including DRIF and other economic development programs.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, presented the following report:

Wednesday, August 17, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-30, An Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend An Act to amend the National Parks Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, 28th July, 1988, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

EARL A. HASTINGS
Chairman

He said: In presenting this report, honourable senators, I should like to make a brief observation with respect to two drafting errors that were made in the preparation of the bill. They occur in clause 4. Draft section 5(1.1) provides:

The Minister shall, within five years of the proclamation of a park, under this Act or any other Act of Parliament, table in the House of Commons a management plan . . .

et cetera. Draft section 5(1.3) says:

The Minister shall review the management plan of a park every five years and shall table any amendments to the plan with the plan in the House of Commons.

These two sections were drawn to the attention of the minister in our hearings, and he responded as follows:

This is a case of an exercise in stupidity. I do not know exactly how it came about, but presumably it is an error. Those sections ought to have referred to "Parliament".

Later on he said:

In any case, I am advised by my legal experts that all I need do is state here for the record that a mistake was made and that the original intent was to have those subsections use the word "Parliament", not the words "House of Commons"; and that by so stating it is enough to effect the relevant change without the need for an amendment.

Also appearing before the committee was Mr. Michael Porter, Director of Policy Planning and Legislation, National Parks, Department of the Environment. He stated:

We in the department agree that this is an oversight, that there was no intention to draft the clause in that way and that it was done in the heat of committee and passed quite quickly. I have asked our legal advisers to look at the resolution of it. Provided that this committee were to make a statement that it was, in fact, an oversight—and that would have the agreement of our department; we have not briefed our minister, but I do not think there would be any problem—under the next periodic review of the Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendment Act, they would be willing to correct it based on that statement. If that were to happen—and I actually have a prepared statement that I had hoped a senator could make today—it would be sufficient to trigger the revision of the legislation at the next review, which I understand takes place every few months.

Honourable senators, in light of the commitment to the committee that the act will be amended and that it will substitute for the words "House of Commons" the words "both houses of Parliament", your committee is prepared to recommend the bill without amendment and thus avoid any dilly-dallying.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Rossiter, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

"WE GAVE TOO MUCH AND WERE NOT GIVEN ENOUGH"

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Wednesday next, August 24, 1988, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the subject "We Gave Too Much and Were Not Given Enough".

Senator Frith: Another cliff-hanger!

QUESTION PERIOD

UNITED NATIONS

IRAN-IRAQ BORDER PEACEKEEPING CONTINGENT—SHARING OF COST

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether Canada has entered into an agreement with the United Nations, or any other nations, to help pay the costs for the peacekeeping effort that Canada is making on the Iran-Iraq border. I know that all honourable senators will join in welcoming the end of hostilities between those two countries, and I am sure we all agree that Canada will play an important part in the surveillance of the cease-fire. However, with respect to a similar experience in the not so distant past, I think that Canada has been called upon, over the past 23 years or so, to pay a far higher share of that operation than was originally intended.

I am not trying to make the argument that that is sufficient reason to disqualify the effort, but, because I have not seen the matter reported anywhere, I should like to know whether other nations, particularly any of those under the auspices of the United Nations, will help pay the cost of the 500 or so men and of the facilities that will be employed.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have no information on the financial arrangements to which the senator refers. I shall ask for a report on the matter.

JUSTICE

PROSECUTION OF NAZI WAR CRIMINALS—STATUS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, yesterday the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate tabled exchanges of notes, Sessional Paper No. 332-1011 and Sessional Paper No. 332-1012. The first was a note between the Canadian Embassy and the Federal Secretariat for the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia relating to the prosecution of Nazi war criminals. A similar memorandum, dated June 7, which was a memorandum of understanding between the Department of Justice of Canada and the Minister of Justice of the Polish Republic relating to the prosecution of Nazi war criminals, was also tabled.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us when we might expect prosecutions to be commenced against Nazi war criminals in Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, I cannot.

Senator Grafstein: Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate have any indication whether or not prosecutions will happen before the turn of the century?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the present government has nothing to apologize for in its treatment of that matter and has moved forward far more expeditiously than its predecessors did.

The honourable senator will be aware that these matters are under consideration by the Department of Justice. It would be totally inappropriate for me, or any other minister except my colleague the Minister of Justice, to try to extemporize on these matters during the oral Question Period.

Senator Grafstein: Would you ask your colleague, the Minister of Justice, to advise us, through you, what the status is of these prosecutions?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall ascertain what information, if any, the Minister of Justice can properly convey to the Senate on that matter at this time.

Senator Grafstein: For the edification of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I wish to say that I do not raise this as a partisan matter; I raise it as a question of national interest. I do not malign the good intentions of the government. I understand the delicacy of this matter, both as a question of law and as a question of practice. However, I think it is of interest to some members of our national community, and I think it would be of interest to this chamber.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON SUBMISSION TO INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMISSION

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question with respect to the 35 per cent tariff on cedar shakes and shingles, which the United States imposed on Canada unilaterally in June of 1986. Under this order, the tariff is scheduled to fall to 20 per cent in September of this year and later to 8 per cent, before being phased out entirely in 1991.

The U.S. Coalition for Fair Canadian Lumber Imports—that is the name they use for themselves, and I do not take responsibility for it—is now arguing that the tariffs should be continued at 35 per cent indefinitely and has put that submission before the International Trade Commission of the United States, which plans to review the tariff later this month or in early September.

Will the Leader of the Government tell us whether or not the government is taking energetic action to represent the Canadian shakes and shingles manufacturers, most of whom are in British Columbia, in opposing any extension of the 35 per cent level? Has the government been discussing this matter with those manufacturers in British Columbia and with the provincial government, and can a position be disclosed to the Senate at this time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall ask my colleague the Minister of International Trade for a report on that matter.

HUMAN RIGHTS

JAPANESE CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT APOLOGY AND COMPENSATION—STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I believe it was last week that the U.S. Congress—both the House of Representatives and the Senate—passed a bill, which is now before the President, respecting individual compensation to Americans of Japanese descent and an apology by the American government for acts taken by it towards that community during the Second World War.

As I have pointed out to this chamber in the past, the acts taken by the Canadian government of the day against Canadian citizens of Japanese descent exceeded the period of the Second World War and went right on to 1947 or 1948. In light of those circumstances, in light of the fact that the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, made a promise for individual compensation, and in light of the fact that we have still not heard, after four years, any concrete advice from the Leader of the Government in the Senate as to the status of negotiations, if any, is he now prepared to advise us, before the calling of an election, when or if we might achieve some satisfaction on these long-standing questions?

• (1410)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I reported to the house earlier, there have been meetings on this matter within the past while between representatives of the Japanese-Canadian community and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. I can only tell the honourable senator that the entire issue is still under consideration by the government.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS—GRANDFATHERING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate.

I notice from a pamphlet put out by the Department of Industry, Science and Technology that the memorandum of understanding of December 30, 1986, concerning softwood lumber products has been grandfathered under the Free Trade Agreement. It says that the new dispute-settlement mechanism is expected to provide greater protection from any future arbitrary and unfair application of U.S. trade laws.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise why this would be grandfathered in the Free Trade Agreement?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I cannot do that today; I do not have notes on that matter before me. I recall that that was done at the time the agreement was signed, but I shall have to ask for a more comprehensive explanation from the minister.

Meanwhile, I understand that the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate is continuing its consideration of the treaty, and I would invite my honourable friend to take advantage of any early opportunity to try to delve into that matter.

Senator McElman: I appreciate the suggestion of the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I suggest to him that when questions are put here in this house with respect to government policy in the Free Trade Agreement it would be helpful if the answers could be given here.

Senator Murray: I appreciate that, and I will attempt to obtain a statement from Mr. Crosbie.

We will have an opportunity soon, of course, to discuss the matter at greater length when the bill comes to the Senate and receives the careful consideration that it deserves from honourable senators.

Senator Frith: "Greater length"—well put, sir!

COMMUNICATIONS

PURCHASE OF FOSTER ADVERTISING BY U.S. CONGLOMERATE— USE OF FOSTER ADVERTISING IN PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CAMPAIGN

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I am sure that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is aware that an American advertising conglomerate has purchased Foster Advertising.

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Davey: Foster Advertising is a premier advertiser of this government. Will the government sever its advertising relationship with Foster Advertising, which has become an American advertising agency?

Senator Perrault: Advertising American!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I had understood that an American interest to purchase MacLaren, which is an agency—

Senator Davey: They purchased that as well.

Senator Murray: Yes. I wonder if my honourable friends will sever their connection with MacLaren.

The short answer to the question is that I am not aware that that transaction has been completed.

Senator Davey: I will make sure that I send you a copy of the Globe and Mail of this morning, because it is in the "Report on Business" section. I am sure it is accurate.

You might also answer a supplementary question, and that is: Will the government involve Foster Advertising in the impending Progressive Conservative campaign advertising?

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is not a matter to which my ministerial responsibility extends. While I have no official information about the reported purchase of Foster Advertising by United States interests, it is still my impression, and perhaps it is superficial, based upon newspaper reports, that the transaction has not been completed.

QUEBEC COURTS AMENDMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Jacques Flynn moved the second reading of Bill C-145, to amend various acts to give effect to the reconstitution of the Quebec Provincial Court, Court of the Sessions of the Peace and Youth Court as the Court of Quebec.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is neither important nor complex. I would even be so bold as to say it is straightforward, although previous experience has made us wary of making such statements.

The bill amends nine federal acts to allow for changes that were introduced in the structure of the courts in the Province of Quebec by a recent act of the legislative assembly.

As we know, under subsection 92(14) of the British North America Act, 1867, the creation and administration of courts both of civil and criminal jurisdiction is a matter for the provincial legislatures and governments, with the exception, of course, of the Supreme Court and the Federal Court, the latter because it is exclusively concerned with federal, and not civil or criminal matters. The provinces establish all the courts. However, judges of the superior court are appointed by the federal government. As for the so-called provincial courts, whose judges are appointed by the provincial governments, in Quebec these courts covered, until quite recently, three different jurisdictions: the Provincial Court as such, with jurisdiction over civil and criminal matters; the Court of Sessions of the Peace, with jurisdiction over criminal matters only, in large centres; and the Youth Court, which has jurisdiction over family matters and also over offences involving young people.

Recently, the legislative assembly voted unanimously in favour of using these three courts to create a single court called the Court of Quebec. There are divisions, however, since the chief justice of the court assigns judges from the former courts to various jurisdictions within the Court of Quebec, which includes, as I said before, all jurisdictions covered by the so-called provincial courts other than the superior court. When a federal act assigns jurisdiction to one of the courts or one of its judges, the courts are mentioned by name. Now that we only have the Court of Quebec, references to the Provincial Court, the Court of Sessions of the Peace or the Youth Court must be removed to indicate that the Court of Quebec now has jurisdiction.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are there several divisions?

Senator Flynn: No, there are not. From now on, in federal acts the reference will be simply to the Court of Quebec, instead of to the court or courts that are now under the umbrella of the Court of Quebec. This is a purely technical change. For instance, when an act refers to the Court of Sessions of the Peace, the words Court of Sessions of the Peace are replaced by Court of Quebec. When legislation refers to the Provincial Court, this is again replaced by the Court of Quebec. When a federal act refers to the Youth Court, here again, the term is replaced by Court of Quebec.

• (1420)

Nine laws are affected by these amendments, nine laws that refer to the courts as they existed before the Quebec National Assembly passed the bill I just mentioned. So these amendments are being proposed, of course, to conform to the changes that the legislature made to the structure of the so-called provincial courts other than the superior court and the Quebec Court of Appeal.

The purpose of this bill is simply housekeeping. That is why I said at the beginning that it was neither an important nor a complicated bill, but I did not go as far as to say it was simple.

I recommend passage of this bill. If you wish, honourable senators, and it passes second reading, I will move that it be referred to a committee. In fact, I do not really see the need for a committee to deal with this because the amendments are purely technical and the committee would learn nothing more than what one can read in the bill itself.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, second reading involves the principle of the bill. For the reasons stated by Senator Flynn, it seems very clear to me that we should support the principle of this bill on second reading.

As Senator Flynn suggested, this bill is simple and not complicated. The fact that a bill had not been studied at length in the other place was until recently a sort of warning for us. For this reason, I prefer that it be referred to the committee. Sending it to committee is a matter of removing any doubt, more than anything else.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Flynn, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Neiman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Côtteau, for the adoption of the Twenty-First Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei, with two amendments) presented in the Senate on 25th May, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Lang).

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I note that the sponsor of this bill and many of his colleagues are deploring the length of time that this bill is taking to pass through this chamber. However, I should like to remind them that at one time I sponsored a private member's public bill—not a private bill but a private member's public bill—which involved trying to remove an anomaly in the Railway Act, and it took me 12 years and the approbation of four ministers of transport to do so. I beg the indulgence of my colleagues.

Honourable senators, because of the time-lag I should like to review the nature of the institution or person presenting this petition for the enactment of this bill. First of all, we must remember that in the preamble of the bill itself and in the evidence before our committee it was self-declared as a secular—I emphasize the word “secular”—jurisdictional institution. This organization has been active in Canada since 1957 and has been functioning under the Quebec Corporations Act. The reason given by the petitioner for the application was that it required a new status in law because of a change in canonical law. That does not strike me as a very convincing reason for creating a new legislative enactment.

This organization is now asking to be incorporated as a “corporation sole”. I would put those words in quotation marks, because that is an anachronistic form of incorporation. It is petitioning in that form rather than applying for incorporation as a non-profit corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act, which, as it now stands, makes no provision for the so-called “corporation sole”. The petitioner says that the Canada Business Corporations Act requirement that there be three members of the board is incompatible with the canonical law requirements to which it must adhere.

These arguments are brought forward to persuade the Senate to enact this legislation. I would remind honourable senators that the corporation sole is a rather ancient concept from the common law used mainly by the Church of England with regard to its bishoprics. Of course, the idea was that the corporation sole would hold property, sign contracts, incur debts and so on, and that, upon the decease of the officeholder, those assets or liabilities would not adhere to his or her estate but, rather, to the corporation itself. In that sense, honourable senators can see the rationale for it in times gone by.

Corporations sole, for religious or non-profit organizations, are not provided for in any law of Canada of general application. It has been argued before the committee and here in this chamber that we in Canada have incorporated 20 such corporations sole since Confederation. Those 20 corporations sole related to religious or non-profit organizations. It is correct that we have done that, and there is no reason we should not do so again; but in my research I went back and looked at those 20 bills put through the Senate and found that all of them applied to a “recognized church”.

Is Opus Dei a recognized church in the conventional sense of our precedents? My submission is that it is not. Opus Dei, by its petition and by the preamble of the bill, is a secular—I underline the word “secular”—jurisdictional institution. Therefore, what we have done before in this area provides no precedent for our action today. To extend such a dubious precedent to a secular institution, to my mind, and for your consideration, would create a new and dangerous precedent, a precedent which I think, honourable senators, we must try to avoid at all costs.

If the very competent report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs were reread by honourable senators, they would find that, by its words, it does not accept as a valid reason for enacting this bill the necessity of conforming with canon law.

I would love to see what would happen south of the border if such an idea were brought before Congress, so steeped, as they are, in the separation of church and state. In fact, the whole idea of passing such legislation would be absolutely abhorrent to them. I am reminded that there was a third party which ran in a general campaign there, the Anti-Masonic Order. That party created enough interest throughout the United States that there was a change in the presidency from the then federalist party to what we would call provincialists or the southern party.

The Canada Business Corporations Act is not, as it now stands, compatible with canonical law; or, to put it the other way round, canonical law is not compatible with the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The committee is very firm in saying that the Senate's decision in this matter must be made on the basis of Canadian general law and practice. I completely affirm that position. I do not think it is the job of the Senate to permit private persons to evade the general public law by petitioning a public body such as the Senate and the House of Commons for special privileges through special legislation.

● (1440)

I refer to the conclusion of the committee report, where it says:

The Committee feels very strongly that incorporation applications such as the one before us should be dealt with by means of a general statutory framework, not in the exercise of some vestigial jurisdiction of the Senate to pass private legislation.

I might add parenthetically: particularly by such an esoteric means as the corporation sole.

Honourable senators, when I was first appointed to the Senate many years ago, some senators will recall that we had a committee in the Senate called the Divorce Committee. That committee used to churn out divorces by the hundreds every year. We used to start at three o'clock, and I can remember that the dear old chairman of that committee used to come in and start to read them off, and, if he succeeded without being stopped, it would take the first hour of the sitting. It took us years to get out from under the divorce jurisdictional problem in order to have those divorces handled where they originally should have been handled—in the courts. Thousands of man-hours were wasted as a result, but it took us years and years to shake off that problem.

In those days we also had many private bills. We had to incorporate loan companies, mortgage companies, banks and trust companies. Much of our time was devoted to those matters, although at that time, I admit, the volume of public legislation passing through this place was not as great as it is today and because of that we were able to manage. Fortunately, over the years those areas of responsibility have been passed to where they belong, namely, to the courts and to the administrative level.

I would hate to see the passage of this bill taken as a signal to start regenerating a process from which we have been trying to extricate ourselves for the last 20 years, namely, giving to a non-church, a private person or a jurisdiction the ability to shackle us with responsibility for passing legislation to accommodate, of all things, something such as a change to accommodate canonical law.

If we did pass this bill, we would not be following a precedent, we would be establishing a precedent—a precedent that I am afraid might lead to another precedent following on another precedent, and we might find ourselves regressing to where we were 30 years ago.

In short, the so-called precedents given as a reason for proceeding further on this bill are not precedents. Secular jurisdictions, such as this organization, must operate through general legislative enactment like everyone else in this country. A change in canon law cannot justify abrogating that principle through the enactment of private legislation.

I am sure that the officers of Opus Dei, who have operated very successfully in this country for some 30 years, are sufficiently ingenious to continue on as they have in the past under one form or another that does not require legislative action by a public body such as the Senate of Canada and, ultimately, the House of Commons.

Accordingly, from my examination of the procedures of this house and the committee, I strongly urge the Senate to reject this legislation, both in the interests of the rule of law generally as it applies to all people and also in the Senate's own interest, so that we are not made use of by private interests, who, in fact, should be able to operate without our legislative blessing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

LATIN AMERICAN PARLIAMENTARY MEETING ON ENERGY AND PETROLEUM

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING, BOGOTA, COLOMBIA—DEBATE
ADJOURNED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, July 13, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Second Annual Latin American Parliamentary Meeting on Energy and Petroleum, held at Bogota, Colombia, from 3rd to 10th July, 1988, and to the participation of the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

He said: Honourable senators, in speaking to the inquiry in my name, I wish to draw to the attention of honourable senators the participation of the Canadian delegation from the Canadian Senate at the Second Annual Latin American Parliamentary Meeting on Energy and Petroleum. The attendance of the Canadian delegation was triggered by an invitation extended to the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources by His Excellency the Ambassador of Argentina on behalf of Dr. Guillermo Tello Rosas, National Deputy and President of the Commission on Energy and Petroleum of the Honourable Chamber of Deputies of the Argentine Republic.

The conference was held in Bogota, Colombia. The delegation of the Canadian Senate consisted of the chairman of the committee, myself, with the Honourable Senator Thomas Lefebvre and the Honourable Senator Gerald Ottenheimer, accompanied by Timothy Wilson acting as clerk. Honourable senators, I think I can modestly say that it was a singular honour to this chamber that one of the committees of the Senate of Canada should have been invited to participate in this conference, invitations having been extended only to the Organization of American States, the United States of America, Canada and the countries of the European Common Market.

The purpose of the conference was to afford parliamentarians an opportunity to review current energy issues from the world viewpoint, especially with respect to the Latin American framework and with particular reference to future impact on regional economies. The conference did attempt to prepare a comprehensive assessment of the possibilities of future cooperation between countries with respect to commercial relations, technology, legislative proposals and investment opportunities.

There are serious problems facing the region, as there are facing all regions, with respect to energy. In these countries it is the outflow of capital used for debt servicing that may deprive them of investment funds. Stagnant economic growth could raise unemployment and result in a shortage of basic goods and in severe inflation. In addition, political rivalries may pose an increasing threat to the merging democracies of the region, notably in Peru and Argentina.

The work of the conference was accomplished in working sessions held in the Chamber of Deputies of the Capitole, with resource people and parliamentarians sharing their views and concerns through debate and discussion. Cooperation and consensus was the theme as parliamentarians with different political philosophies from countries of different interests came together. As a result, notwithstanding the differences in political philosophy, there was an appreciation of each other's problems and, more importantly, the establishment of bridges of understanding.

Honourable senators, the region we are discussing extends from Mexico in the north to Argentina and Chile in the south, and it includes numerous, small, Caribbean island-states. It covers a total of 20.5 million square kilometres, or 15 per cent of the world's surface. The total gross national product of the region was approximately $630 billion U.S. in 1984, or 6 per cent of the total world GNP.

The largest economy in the region is that of Brazil, with a gross national product of $198 billion, or 31 per cent of the region's total GNP, followed by Mexico, which had a GNP of $165 billion in 1984. The four leading economies in the region are those of Brazil, Mexico, Venezuela and Argentina, which amount to 78 per cent of the region's total GNP. The same four countries are also the region's largest energy producers.

This region, in 1984, had a population of over 380 million, which is approximately 8 per cent of the total world population. These countries are well endowed with oil, natural gas, hydro, coal and bio-resources. Latin America as a whole is basically self-sufficient in commercial energy resources, with a surplus of oil of over 2 million barrels of oil per day. However, as is often the case, the balance of self-sufficiency is uneasily distributed, with Mexico, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Trinidad and Tobago, and now Colombia, the net energy exporters, and the remainder of the Latin American countries the net importers, to differing extents.

At the end of 1986, of the total of 697 billion barrels of recoverable, proven crude oil reserves in the world, 89 billion barrels, or 12.7 per cent, were located in Latin America. The region thus has the second largest reserves in the world after the Middle East, which has a total of 57.6 per cent. The largest reserves in the region are to be found in Mexico and Venezuela.

Recently, significant new oil reserves have been proven in Brazil and Colombia, and development activities have led to a dramatic increase in production. By 1990 Latin America—in particular, Mexico and Venezuela—will have the potential and financial incentive to expand capacity quite rapidly, thus making the region an even more important oil supplier to world markets, and in saying this I pay particular attention to the U.S. market. The oil exports of this region will be in competition with Canadian crude entering the same market. Not surprisingly, the U.S. is the major market for Latin American crude oil. Of the total U.S. crude imports since 1983, 3.4 million barrels per day, Mexico, Venezuela, Trinidad and Tobago, Ecuador, Peru and Colombia have supplied about one-third.

At the end of 1985 the proven natural gas reserves of Latin America amounted to 5,538 billion cubic metres, or 5.7 per cent of total world reserves. The largest reserves are in Mexico and Venezuela, and an upward revision of reserves is likely to occur as exploration continues.

Coal has thus far played a minor role in the region's energy picture, supplying less than 7 per cent of the TPER in 1985, with production amounting to 25 million tonnes. The major producers, of course, are Brazil, Colombia and Mexico.

Electricity consumption in the region virtually doubled in the period between 1973 and 1984. In 1984 Latin American consumption was 12.8 per cent of total world electricity consumption.

Despite the fact that many countries in the region carry on activities in the nuclear power sector, only Argentina, Brazil, Cuba and Mexico have actually implemented or started to implement nuclear power generation plants. A second group of countries, comprised of Chile, Peru, Venezuela and Uruguay, is studying the possibility of introducing nuclear power into their systems, although at the moment they place priority on hydroelectricity, coal or geothermal energy sources.

In most countries of the region rigorous reviews and the resulting adjustments to plans to explore for and develop energy resources are under way. These aim to streamline investment priorities, modify contractual arrangements and revise regulatory and fiscal regimes. The Latin American region as a whole is well endowed with various energy resources, particularly hydrocarbons and hydro power. There are still large areas that have never been explored thoroughly and intensively. Prospects for an eventual upward revision of hydrocarbon resources are thus significant. A flexible and realistic attitude by the governments in the region with respect to foreign companies' participation will be needed in the future.

After the conference, the delegates were taken to visit two areas and view two important megaprojects in Colombia. One was the El Cerrejon-Zona Norte, which is the largest open pit mine in Latin America, and Port Boliva, located in the province of La Guajara. In viewing this project, any Canadian would have been proud of Canada's contribution in terms of machinery and mining equipment used in the storage and shipment of coal in this $3 billion megaproject. It is operated by the State of Colombia and by Intercor on a 60/40 basis. Intercor is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Exxon. The project, which will certainly increase the capacity of Colombia with respect to coal exploration and exportation, is being operated by Intercor over a 23-year period. At the end of the 23-year period, all equipment and assets acquired in operation revert to the State of Colombia.

● (1500)

We then had an opportunity to visit the second-largest floating petroleum storage terminal in the world, located at Covenas on the Gulf of Morrosquille. The terminal is 17 kilometres seaward and has a capacity of three million barrels of oil. It is well equipped with state-of-the-art technology. It was constructed in Japan in 1976, converted to a storage terminal in France and Holland, and transported to Colombia in 1986. The terminal is supplied by a 500-mile pipeline from Cano Loman Field, which has proven reserves of two billion barrels.

This project is owned 60 per cent by Ecopetrol, which is the State oil company, 20 per cent by Occidental de Colombia and 20 per cent by Shell de Colombia. Occidental operates the production and transportation facilities and Ecopetrol operates the terminal facilities.

Bilateral relations between Colombia and Canada are excellent. They are based on common hemispheric interests, democratic values and the complementarity of resource base. Canadian bilateral development assistance to Colombia has averaged approximately $18 million Canadian per year for the period 1983 through 1988.

Major projects undertaken by the Canadian International Development Agency include the establishment of a national furniture manufacturing training centre and a Canadian $30 million line of credit for implementing public investment projects.

The Industrial Cooperation Program continues to be an active component of CIDA's activities in Colombia in a number of sectors.

The International Development Research Centre has its regional office for Latin America in Bogota.

Colombia has traditionally been one of Canada's more important trading partners in South America and currently ranks third as a market for Canadian exports to the region. In June 1986 Canada and Colombia signed a Memorandum of Understanding on Agricultural Cooperation.

There is also bilateral cooperation in the energy sector, with the Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation providing technical assistance to the Colombian state petroleum corporation for exploration activities.

There have been discussions between Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and its Colombian counterpart concerning nuclear cooperation.

The development of Colombia's mining sector is of particular interest to Canada and there is an ongoing dialogue between Canadian and Colombian authorities on mining policies and legislation.

Among recent senior level visits between the countries, Dr. Fernanco Cepeda, then Minister of Government, visited Canada in December 1986. Mr. Masse, our Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, visited Bogota in April 1987. In September 1987 Dr. Fernando Alarcon, Minister of Finance, made a brief trip to Canada, and in the same month Dr. Luis Parra, Minister of Agriculture, attended the Ninth Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Agriculture, which was held in Ottawa.

Official-level meetings of the Canada/Colombia Commercial Consultative Committee took place, for the first time, in February 1988.

In May 1988 Dr. Alvaro Tirado, the recently-appointed presidential adviser on human rights, made a week-long visit to Canada to study our organizational structures and approaches in this sector.

Canada will continue to search for opportunities to strengthen the ties between the two countries through various means, including exchanges of visits at both the political and official levels. I respectfully submit that the attendance of the Canadian delegation at the conference in Bogota was evidence of that continuing interest in establishing those relationships with the State of Colombia.

In conclusion, on behalf of the committee I should like to record our appreciation, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to officers at the Canadian Embassy in Bogota, including Mr. Percy Aboles, counsellor, Mr. Jim Graham, counsellor, and Mr. Grant Menuge, secretary. Of particular interest to honourable senators is the fact that the secretary, Mr. Grant Manuge, was a page in this chamber from 1982 to 1984.

We should also like to thank Mr. Roger Wilson, of the South American Division of External Affairs, and Mr. J. Reid Henry, of the Energy and Environment Division of External Affairs, for their services in briefing the committee prior to the visit.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Ottenheimer, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

ORDER FOR DIVISION OF BILL RESCINDED

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask leave at this time to introduce a motion dealing with Bill C-103.

Honourable senators will recall that a motion had been made and approved by this house asking that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance split this bill. In light of current events, it would be appropriate, I am told, that that order be rescinded.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Then, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 47(2), I move:

That the Order adopted by the Senate on 7th June, 1988, with respect to the division of the Bill C-103, An Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, and the proceedings of 7th July, 1988, with respect to the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance and third reading of Part I of the said Bill, be rescinded.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and order rescinded.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. William M. Kelly, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

Thursday, August 18, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-103, An Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, May 31, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM M. KELLY
Deputy Chairman

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I wish to say a few words on the motion for third reading of Bill C-103. When it receives Royal Assent, this bill will produce two distinct acts of Parliament. Part I is to be called the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act. Part II is to be called the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation Act. What we have here are two bills that have been cobbled together.

From the very beginning two facts have been evident. First, there was little objection in the Senate to Part I, which will produce the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act. That legislation could pass quickly. Secondly, in sharp contrast, there were senators who thought that Part II was seriously defective. It was thought that the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation legislation required careful consideration, consideration that would probably result in amendments being proposed.

To permit the speedy enactment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act the Senate divided Bill C-103. On July 7 it gave third reading to the ACOA act. Then, on July 18, the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons voted that the clauses relating to the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation be cobbled back together again with the clauses relating to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act. All those who regard the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation bill as defective, as bad, know how to interpret that vote by the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party. They see it as a vote against the interests of Cape Breton.

On what ground did the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party reject the division of the bill by the Senate? They rejected it on the ground that, by dividing Bill C-103, the Senate had:

... altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill ...

They asked that the Senate return Bill C-103 to the House of Commons in an undivided form—whatever that means—after third reading.

Honourable senators, we know that a royal recommendation is required by section 54 of the Constitution Act of 1867 for any bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost. The argument was made that, since Bill C-103 had been introduced in Parliament with a royal recommendation, it must be a bill that appropriates a part of the public revenue or a part of a tax or impost. That explains the reference in the message that came to this house concerning grants of aid or supplies set out in the bill.

When we go through the bill clause by clause we find not a single clause that makes a grant of aid or supply. On July 27, 1988, the Comptroller General of Canada appeared as a witness before the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. He did not point out a single clause in Bill C-103 that appropriates money. Not one dollar, not one cent, can be withdrawn from the Consolidated Revenue Fund on the authority of Bill C-103. Every dollar already expended for the purposes of ACOA was provided in a separate appropriation act. Every dollar to be expended will be provided in a separate act or in separate acts that appropriate money.

Despite that fact, undisputed in the committee, the government has made it clear that the ACOA legislation will not become law without the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation legislation. That was, and remains, the government's position.

All the witnesses heard by the committee, apart from the minister and his assistants, told the committee that the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation legislation should be amended. We were told that by Dr. Teresa MacNeil, appointed chairman of the board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation by the present government; by Mr. Charles Campbell, chairman of the Sydney Area Communities Futures Committee; and by Mr. Tom Kent, sometime Deputy Minister for Regional Economic Development and sometime president of Devco.

In the National Finance Committee I put forward proposals as to how the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation legislation could be corrected. Honourable senators who have been following this bill know that the president of the corporation is to be part of the Ottawa bureaucracy. He is to be a deputy minister based not in Cape Breton but in Moncton, New Brunswick.

One of the amendments I had in mind would have given the corporation an independent president. I am sure that the present government could have found an acceptable person in Cape Breton to serve as the president of this new corporation.

Then, as if having his deputy minister as president is not enough, the minister is to be given special power to direct the corporation. Clause 34(3) reads:

The Corporation shall comply with any directions from time to time given to it by the Minister respecting the exercise of its powers.

Another amendment would have struck out that clause.

Neither of those changes was acceptable to the government. Both, we were told, were contrary to settled government policy.

Honourable senators, I raised another point, one that cannot be dismissed as contrary to government policy. It relates to the definition of "Cape Breton Island".

Some honourable senators may know that about 200 years ago George III was delighted to learn that Cape Breton is an island.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: For days after receiving that information, that intelligence, he buttonholed acquaintances around the palace, saying to them, "Do you know that Cape Breton is an island?" When they confessed that they did not, he enlightened them by saying, "Cape Breton is actually an island!"

Under this legislation Cape Breton Island will include part of the mainland of Nova Scotia. It includes a large area on the western shore of the Strait of Canso. That area extends up through Sand Point, Melford, Pirate Harbour and Mulgrave to the Antigonish-Guysborough County line.

It happens that the Antigonish-Guysborough County line cuts through the last village on the mainland of Nova Scotia, a village through which there passes the TransCanada Highway and the Canadian National Railway leading to Cape Breton. That county line is an artificial line. There is no good reason why enterprises presently located in that village, Aulds Cove, or any prospective enterprise, should be deprived of the benefits of this act simply because they are located north of an artificial county line.

That proposal did not succeed in the committee. However, I did not detect the same stubborn resistance to the proposal as I found in the case of the other proposals.

Honourable senators, it now appears that Bill C-103 will be read the third time this afternoon, and I hope that it will receive Royal Assent immediately.

• (1410)

Back in 1865, when John A. Macdonald was explaining to his colleagues the agreed plan for the proposed Parliament of Canada, he stated something that I think we should remember.

Therefore, I would like to quote a few sentences from that distinguished authority:

There would be no use of an Upper House, if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the Lower House. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the Lower House. It must be an independent House, having a free action of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself in opposition against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people.

In the case of Bill C-103, some senators have seriously questioned Part II, the legislation concerning the Cape Breton Corporation. A bad act, I suggest, relating to Nova Scotia has been tacked on to a good act relating to all four Atlantic provinces. Given the stubborn resistance of the government to all proposals to remedy Part II of the legislation, I can see no alternative but that we should agree this afternoon to the third reading of Bill C-103.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I wish to thank the members of the committee for the care, attention and study that they have given to this bill. In particular, I think the house will understand if I express a special appreciation to those supporters of the government from the Atlantic provinces who carried my brief and the brief of the government so ably into the committee during all of the committee hearings: my friend from Halifax, Senator Finlay MacDonald, Senator Robertson, Senator Ottenheimer, Senator Rossiter, Senator Macquarrie and others.

As minister responsible for ACOA, as well as the Leader of the Government in the Senate, I do want to express my satisfaction that the Liberal majority on the committee desisted in a course of action which had already caused an undue delay in passage of the bill and which, if persisted in, would have imperilled the bill by sending it to the House of Commons for the third time at this stage in the lifetime of this Parliament.

Senator Frith: Perhaps having it before them for the third time, but not sending it for the third time.

Senator Murray: It would have had the effect of placing the bill before the House of Commons for the third time. The decision of the Liberal majority on the committee is demonstrably in the interests of the Senate, of the legislative process and certainly of the Atlantic region. This was a very sensible decision, and I cannot help but observe that it gives rise to the hope that honourable senators might see the error of their ways on the free trade legislation, or—

Senator Haidasz: We haven't got it yet!

Senator Murray: —or, if they do not see the error of their ways, that they might at least realize that they are getting bad advice from Mr. Turner and will give some sober second thought to that.

[Senator Stewart.]

Senator McElman: You had better practise holding your breath!

Senator Murray: But I digress. One cannot blame Mr. Turner for giving bad advice. It is all he ever hears over there.

I take some satisfaction, and I think all honourable senators, especially those from the Atlantic provinces, can take considerable satisfaction, in the passage of this bill through third reading today. This is a good bill. It gives unprecedented authority, flexibility and resources to an agency dedicated to regional development. As I told the house when I opened debate on second reading, this is a nation-building measure. From this government's perspective, the reduction of regional disparities is as vital a part of our national agenda as free trade, constitutional reform, tax reform or deregulation.

In order to achieve our goal of reducing regional disparity, the government has undertaken an historic and evolutionary initiative. It has decided to replace a centralized decision-making structure and the national development policies by truly decentralizing authority to the regions in order to let the regions of Canada decide on their own economic development future. Bill C-103 relies on the self-confidence of Atlantic Canadians to solve the economic problems of their own region.

Honourable senators, a question relating to the constitutional validity of Part II of Bill C-103 was raised at the committee by Senator Frith. The record should show that the Department of Justice has advised that Part II of Bill C-103, creating the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, is a valid exercise of federal power under the Constitution. Last night this view was supported by the Senate parliamentary counsel at a meeting of the National Finance Committee.

There is certainly no doubt in my mind that the federal government has the jurisdiction, as well as the responsibility, to provide economic development programs to the regions of Canada through whatever instrumentality it thinks would serve best. It has done this in Cape Breton for 20 years through Devco and will continue to do so through the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

Senator Frith: And it did so using the declaratory power!

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is wrong about that. It used declaratory power in 1968 to take on the management of the coal works in Cape Breton. The invocation of the declaratory power was not necessary in order to carry on the activities of the Industrial Development Division of Devco.

I do believe it was somewhat unfair of Senator Stewart and others to speak of the alleged stubborn resistance of the government to changes in this bill. I remind honourable senators that a legislative committee in the other place gave Bill C-103 a very lengthy and thorough review during hearings that were held not only in Ottawa but throughout the Atlantic region.

Amendments were proposed by the opposition and some were accepted by the government. For example, the government agreed with an amendment proposed by the NDP that the agency should produce, after each five years, a comprehensive report providing an evaluation of all its activities and the impact those activities have had on regional disparity. I mention this simply to point out that the government has not adopted a rigid, "know it all" position with respect to this bill.

Another amendment accepted by the government is to include the Mulgrave area of the Strait of Canso in the definition of Cape Breton Island in Part II of the bill so that this extremely important growth area can benefit from the generous program authorities applicable to Cape Breton. I want to inform honourable senators that the area actually included in the amendment is co-extensive with the definition of Cape Breton in the Income Tax Act with respect to the investment tax credit, and that is why this amendment to this bill was accepted.

Senator Stewart has raised certain concerns that the area included in this amendment did not extend far enough to include all of Aulds Cove, which would not be co-extensive with the definition of Cape Breton in the Income Tax Act. I assure him that there is no intention of slighting the residents of Antigonish County, who will be able to have full access to ACOA programs that are generally available to Nova Scotia.

I do not think it is necessary to change the wording of clause 9, as suggested by Senator Stewart. The clause as worded adequately reflects the government's policy with respect to the power to co-finance, and the proposed amendment would not have constituted an improvement, at least not in my view.

The government did not agree with the amendments suggested by Senator Stewart with respect to Part II of the bill, which deals with the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation Act. The amendments proposed are substantive. As I noted in my presentation to the Standing Committee on National Finance, the thrust of this government's strategy with respect to regional economic development is significantly different from that of our predecessors, as reflected in the DRIE organization and programs. It is clear that the Coal Division of Devco should report to the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology and that the Industrial Development Division should be closely associated with the federal department responsible for economic development in the Atlantic region—that is to say, ACOA.

The option chosen by this government to achieve this close association is to link statutorily the two economic development institutions by requiring the president of ACOA to be the president of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. This option ensures that the new ECBC will be connected to the mainstream of federal economic development initiatives while, at the same time, continuing the historic federal policy of providing a unique development institution for Cape Breton. There will be a board for the new crown corporation. That board will have decision-making powers. Indeed, the act provides that the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation consists of the president, the vice-president and members of the board; so they will have all the autonomy that Devco now has.

The ministerial power of direction over the ECBC is, in my view, a necessary measure to ensure that the corporation remains accountable to the government with respect to the fulfilment of its legislative mandate. The proposed legislation and the Financial Administration Act provide very considerable safeguards against the unfettered exercise of this ministerial discretion.

Honourable senators, during the course of debate much was said about the contribution of the Industrial Development Division of Devco to the economic development of Cape Breton. I want to assure Cape Bretoners that the intention of the government is not to do away with the programs of the IDD but to continue these types of programs through the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, the ECBC. This corporation will have the same object and powers as the IDD. It will have its headquarters in Sydney. There will be a vice-president in Sydney who will be the chief operating officer. As I have said, there will be a board of directors in Cape Breton and they will have decision-making powers and a strong say in how the corporation is run.

Earlier today I spoke with Dr. Teresa MacNeil, the chairman and acting president of DEVCO; I asked her to convey the assurances that I have just given to the Senate to the people who are working in the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO, with whom she will be meeting later today. As I have told the Senate in the past and as I repeated to Dr. MacNeil this morning, there is no hidden agenda here. I assured her, as I assure the Senate, that I am not rushing, nor is the government, into any decisions concerning the ECBC. When this bill receives Royal Assent, there will be time for me and my colleagues to consider the composition of the board and the management, the mandate and the future activities of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation.

The people at the Industrial Development Division know that there has been a transition team working for some time. I have not yet received a report from them. I will receive one in due course, and when I have received it I will consider what the future course of action should be. I assured her, as I assure the Senate, that I will consult those who are responsible for the IDD, and others in Cape Breton, before making or recommending to my colleagues any final decisions about the future activities of this corporation.

In addition, the government intends to continue its not inconsiderable efforts to improve the economic climate of Cape Breton. I remind honourable senators that since Enterprise Cape Breton was created in May 1985 the ECB has made over 325 offers for projects, with a total value of $294 million, of which the federal contribution will be $157 million. This has helped to create 2,200 new jobs and maintain 1,200 existing jobs. All agree that the Cape Breton investment tax credit has been instrumental in improving the economic climate in Cape Breton. Unemployment on the Island has been reduced from 23 per cent in May of 1985 to 13.4 per cent in July of 1988—still too high, but a remarkable improvement and an encouraging trend. I say that this is a record of which the federal government and the private sector in Cape Breton can be proud. It should demonstrate the government's commitment to promoting the economy of Cape Breton.

The Atlantic region as a whole has experienced strong economic output and employment growth during the period from 1984 to 1988. Real gross domestic product has been very strong, averaging over 3 per cent in every province of Atlantic Canada. Employment increases in the Atlantic region have also been impressive, with an overall gain of 95,000 new jobs from July 1984 to July 1988. The number of unemployed has declined by 12,000 during that same period. I think these figures demonstrate that the economic policies of the government have been, and will continue to be, effective and that with ACOA in place the Atlantic region will continue to grow, particularly when the Free Trade Agreement takes effect.

Honourable senators, I take pride, as I know the staff of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency does, in our record of achievements in the first 15 months of our existence. The greatest achievements of ACOA lie ahead and will consist not only in the incentives and assistance that we can provide to private enterprise but in the success that we achieve in changing the whole economic landscape of the Atlantic provinces. Our success will be measured in terms of the impact we have on the policies of the federal and provincial governments and on the decisions of the private sector, which will make ACOA a key agency of economic change in the region.

If this legislation needs to be amended in the future, if our policy needs to be improved upon to achieve those goals, we will do it and we will be attentive to the views of parliamentarians from the Atlantic region. I am confident that all Atlantic Canadians will recognize that honourable senators, particularly those from Atlantic Canada, have joined with us in this act of nation building. This is an accomplishment that I am sure all honourable senators can be proud of.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: It is not really our pleasure, but, yes.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, presented the following report:

Thursday, August 18, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-92, An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, 27th July, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comments:—

[Senator Murray.]

An Hon. Senator: Dispense!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Barootes is going to ask for third reading of this bill now, whereas, under the rules, he should move third reading at a later date. We are inclined to allow third reading today because Royal Assent is scheduled. That was the reason we did not insist on one day's notice for the bill dealing with ACOA. Since the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has reported the bill with some comments, I think the complete report should be read.

[Translation]

A Clerk at the Table:

Clause 8 of the Bill allows the Canadian Wheat Board, with the approval of the Governor in Council and subject to such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may prescribe, to fix and pay a sum per tonne to each producer who has sold and delivered grain to the Board. These payments, which could be all or a portion of the storage and interest carrying charges deducted from pool accounts, would be in addition to any payment authorized by section 25 of the Act and would be made in respect of any pool period. Carrying costs depend in part on the volume of grain shipped. Given that these volumes are not known with certainty until the end of the year, the payment would not be remitted until that time. We understand that the Canadian Wheat Board would make recommendations to the Governor in Council, who would then consider the recommendation and set the percentage of the carrying costs to be rebated. The Minister, in testimony before the Committee, estimated that the amount of the additional rebate would be less than half of the total value of the carrying charges, which would amount to between $50 and $75 per car of wheat.

[English]

The Committee, in its examination of this Bill, heard from witnesses, both for and against Clause 8. Those opposed suggested that the added incentive this clause would give to the use of producer cars would result in an increase in their use such that the orderly marketing system for grain would be jeopardized. They emphasized that increased producer car use could lead to a more rapid rate of elevator closure and increased average charges as fewer producers would share the costs of maintaining the country elevator system.

[Translation]

The supporters of Clause 8 were concerned about the inequity associated with producer car users paying for services they are not using. They emphasized that the existence of the producer car option provides producers with some choice as to how their wheat is to be delivered to the Canadian Wheat Board.

● (1440)

[English]

The Minister of Grains and Oilseeds, Mr. Charles Mayer, told the Committee that he supports the Canadian orderly marketing system for grain and feels that it is in no one's interest to have that system threatened or destroyed.

[Translation]

"I happen to think that the wheat board system for a country the size of Canada is the best system we can have, and I think it has worked well. I do not believe that this kind of amendment is any kind of a threat." (The Honourable Charles Mayer, appearing before the Committee, 17 August 1988)

[English]

The Minister is prepared to fix the percentage for the rebate in such a way that the system would not be undermined by a dramatic increase in the use of producer cars.

[Translation]

"In conversation with the wheat pool, we have said, 'Look, we are all adults. This is a serious business, and we are talking about a major industry in an important part of the country. We are not going to stand by if in one year the use of producer cars jumps dramatically and causes all kinds of problems. We will sit down around a table and approach the matter as people with common sense. We are not interested in doing anything that will damage the overall system.' " (The Honourable Charles Mayer, appearing before the Committee, 17 August 1988).

[English]

Some Committee members feel that the Canadian Wheat Board should have the benefit of adequate inputs from interested parties prior to making recommendations to the Governor in Council, and they are concerned about the lack of a clearly-defined, statutory methodology to be used by the Canadian Wheat Board in arriving at its determination of the percentage to be rebated.

Respectfully submitted,

E.W. BAROOTES
Deputy Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this bill be read the third time, honourable senators?

● (1450)

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Flynn, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I ask that this bill be read the third time now—once again because Royal Assent is scheduled for later this afternoon.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "A", p. 4205.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the report?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That, when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 30th August, 1988, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Explain!

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I simply want to say that, since we have fairly well cleared the order paper of government business at this point and are now awaiting more legislation from the other place, I thought it appropriate that the Senate not sit next week. However, I should point out to honourable senators that various committees will be meeting next week.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I understand, has meetings scheduled for at least Tuesday and Wednesday, and perhaps other days as well, to deal with Bill C-110, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal Bill.

I understand that the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will be meeting to further its study of Bill C-61. As well, that committee has work to do on Bill C-82, respecting lobbyists.

I should also remind honourable senators that the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration will meet on Thursday morning at nine o'clock.

I should not have to say this, but I will: I feel that our duty to attend committee meetings is every bit as important and as much our responsibility as our duty to attend sittings of the Senate. I urge all honourable senators to make every effort to attend these committee meetings, particularly the one on

[Senator Marshall.]

Thursday morning. This is a matter of grave importance and I urge full attendance by my colleagues.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SECRET PROTOCOL OF RIBBENTROP-MOLOTOV TREATY OF AUGUST 23, 1939

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, may I just have a few moments to make a short announcement, because we will not be sitting on Tuesday next?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no problem so long as it is not a lengthy announcement. We have one more third reading, Question Period and Royal Assent scheduled for 3.30.

Senator Haidasz: Thank you, honourable senators.

Honourable senators, a black event in history, the infamous "secret protocol" of the Ribbentrop-Molotov Treaty of August 23, 1939, is being marked in 34 cities throughout the world and on Parliament Hill on Tuesday next. That protocol was the one that partitioned Europe just before the end of September 1939, when World War II was unleashed.

As co-chairman of the sponsoring committee, along with the honourable member for Parkdale-High Park in the other place, I call upon all honourable senators to attend, either in their home cities or on Parliament Hill, this event sponsored by the Black Ribbon Day Committee.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING DEBATE—SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. William M. Kelly moved the second reading of Bill C-210, to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to speak to Bill C-210, to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act. This is a very short bill, the central purpose of which is to indemnify the Canadian members of the bridge authority against personal liability for:

... any injury or loss ... as a result of an act of terrorism or the fault, neglect, want of skill or wilful and wrongful act of any other person.

I should now like to give you some brief background on this whole matter. The Blue Water Bridge was constructed in October 1938 and links Point Edward, Ontario, and Port Huron, Michigan. In 1964 the Government of Canada passed the Blue Water Bridge Act. The mandate of the Blue Water Bridge Authority was, and is, to operate and maintain the Canadian half of the bridge. The act established eight members, or commissioners, four of whom must be Canadian citizens. They are appointed by the federal government by order in council. The commissioners serve at pleasure and without remuneration.

During the past several years traffic on the Blue Water Bridge has increased significantly year by year. In 1987 nearly four million vehicles crossed the bridge, with the heaviest traffic occurring during the summer months. July and August last year saw nearly one million vehicles crossing the bridge. As we all know, Sarnia-Lambton is the petrochemical centre of eastern Canada, as a result of which truck traffic and trucks carrying hazardous goods form a significant portion of the traffic using the bridge. A short time ago the Windsor Tunnel and the Ambassador Bridge, linking Windsor and Detroit, banned trucks carrying hazardous or toxic goods. This traffic is now filtered through the Blue Water Bridge link. The completion of I-94, the Michigan state highway, contributes very substantially to the increase in the volume of traffic through that same link.

Commissioners of the bridge authority have a very real concern that, in the event of a major disaster on the bridge, the current liability insurance arrangements may not be sufficient to cover all claims and that they could become personally liable. Counsel for the Blue Water Bridge Authority has acknowledged before a committee in the other place that the commissioners are aware of section 7(3) of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, which states:

For greater certainty, it is hereby declared that section 30 of the Interpretation Act applies to the Bridge Authority.

At the time the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act was passed in 1964, the Interpretation Act provided, by its section 30(1)(c):

In every Act, unless the contrary intention appears, words making any association or number of persons a corporation or body politic and corporate shall

(c) ... exempt individual members of the corporation from personal liability for its debts or obligations or acts, if they do not violate the provisions of the Act incorporating them.

Under the current Interpretation Act, section 20 provides what amounts to basically the same thing. Section 20(1)(d) reads:

Words establishing a corporation shall be construed

(d) ... to exempt from personal liability for its debts, obligations or acts such individual members of the corporation as do not contravene the provisions of the enactment establishing the corporation.

It would seem to me, honourable senators, that the members of the authority already have the protection they seek. Nonetheless, they are still left with a sense of uncertainty. If you like, this bill could be regarded as being for greater certainty. Passage of this bill will provide peace of mind for the bridge authority commissioners. The bill before you will provide, with greater certainty and clarity, protection to the members of the authority. The work these men do in managing this installation is important and they serve without remuneration. Insurance will continue to be purchased to the highest amount possible and the bridge authority will continue to enhance and improve safety measures. Passage of this bill will provide an explicit and direct release of personal liability for the Canadian members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority in the event of an act of terrorism or of a major disaster beyond their control.

Honourable senators, I urge speedy passage of this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have read this bill and the debates in the other place and I have listened to Senator Kelly, hoping to be able to find a reason to support this bill at second reading. My problem is that I cannot figure out what the principle of the bill is. I know it is for greater certainty. When I first glanced at it, I thought the intention was probably to update the Interpretation Act and to clarify the provisions of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act and the Interpretation Act, and, if I am not mistaken, perhaps even another act that would apply, the act protecting public authorities, by making it clear that acts of terrorism should be included. When I saw that Senator Kelly, our resident expert on the subject of terrorism, was sponsoring the bill, I thought perhaps I had found what the bill's principle was. However, as he has pointed out, the bill provides that the members of the bridge authority will not be personally liable for any injury or loss suffered by any user of the Blue Water Bridge resulting from an act of terrorism. But it then goes on to say:

...or the fault, neglect, want of skill or wilful and wrongful act of any other person.

That goes quite a bit beyond the idea of terrorism. So I am still left with the question of what the principle of the bill is.

When I consulted the House of Commons Debates on the matter, I was not helped very much. As a matter of fact, most of the debate in the other place dealt with the satisfaction felt by the representatives of the various parties over there that such progress had been made in the advancement of private bills.

We must remember that this is a private bill; so any criticism I have of it is not criticism of the government. It is not a government bill. However, in looking at the interventions made in the Commons, I found, as Senator Kelly has said, that insurance is purchased to cover responsibility under the act, and, as he says, will continue to be purchased. I am a bit sorry to hear that, because, when I read the provisions of the bill, I was hoping to be able perhaps to bid on that coverage myself. Personally, I would be prepared to accept quite a reasonable premium to protect someone against liability, knowing that the laws of the land provide that they will not be responsible for an act of terrorism or for the fault, neglect, want of skill or wilful and wrongful act of any person. So, if this is ever passed, I hope that the insurance company's premiums will be reasonable. If not, I may be able to put together a group that would be prepared to go on that risk.

The other point I want to make, honourable senators, is that I think the Senate has a duty to keep an eye out for what we might call a pernicious piggybacking—even though piggybacked in a worthy cause—of changes in the general law of the land. It may be that the fact that the directors of this corporation serve without remuneration is a reason to protect them against damages as a result of an act of terrorism. But to piggyback this additional and unnecessarily wide protection raises the question as to whether this bill should receive our approval or whether even its principle should.

● (1510)

We have seen this pernicious piggybacking in various recent bills. I cannot say that this government is the only government that has done that—it has been happening for some time—but I give as an example, first, Bill C-61, which was billed as the means of seizing drug moneys and enterprise crime proceeds, but was drafted in such a way that it is broad enough to cover shoplifters. The powers of seizure and presumption of guilt in it deal with quite a subversion of public liability for police mistakes—far beyond other powers in the Criminal Code—and affect general rights. However, it is hard to vote against a bill that provides for the seizing of moneys and proceeds of crime, particularly that of drug pushers.

Then, take Bill C-82, dealing with lobbyists. It has a worthy objective, to regulate lobbyists. The impression is that it is there to control the big lobbyists, but if it comes into effect any individual who might be compensated for writing a letter, or having a phone call with anyone in public office, would be covered by the terms of the bill and would, for each occasion, have to file a form with the name and address of the lobbyist, the client, the matter or person lobbied, and so on. Again, it is hard to vote against the concept of registering lobbyists—that is, the so-called big boys. On the other hand, to change my metaphor, why is it necessary to “Trojan horse” these other provisions in under that banner?

That is now also a mixed metaphor, Senator Doyle.

Senator Roblin: We are with you; we follow you.

Senator Frith: We did the same thing on Bill C-84, the Immigration Bill. I know that there was not full agreement on that, but it was alleged that that bill, which was meant to address a serious immigration problem, a problem that we all agree was a serious immigration problem, went so far as to catch in its net certain church groups, whose activities and objects probably many of us, if not all of us, would not categorize as helping in illegal or undesirable immigration.

Honourable senators, I suggest, because I find it difficult to be sure of what principle I am supporting in this bill, that we not read it a second time but send the subject matter of the bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs so that they can hear some evidence on it and report back to us to ensure that we understand exactly what we are doing with the principle of this bill.

If we get the reassurances I hope we will get, there is no reason not to give it passage. But I hope that that committee will be able to help us even at second reading debate.

I want to make it clear that there is no intention to delay this bill unduly, but Senator Kelly himself admits that it is cast in very broad terms. I think it will help us considerably at second reading, and eventually at third reading of the bill, if we receive a report from that committee before we give it second reading.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Kelly would like to make a comment or answer a question. However, he does not, obviously, want to close second reading for the reasons that Senator Frith has just said.

Senator Frith: Yes, that is agreed. He would not be closing the debate on second reading.

Senator Doody: Thank you.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, I wish to address two points that were raised by Senator Frith. Most of the comments I made outlined the view I have, but I would like to draw Senator Frith's attention to clause 21.1(1) and the underlined word "other".

Senator Frith mentioned that this would seem to clear the commissioners themselves of any wrongful act committed by them. The insertion of the word "other" took place at the committee stage in the other place for the very reason outlined by Senator Frith. Originally, it did do just as Senator Frith suggested. It looked as though they had carte blanche. The word "other" was an attempt to isolate them. They remain liable for any wrongdoing on their part, but are free from liability as a result of acts of others.

Secondly, concerning the question of insurance, I want to remind Senator Frith that the insurance premiums will not go down, in that the authority is the insured party. The authority will still have to be insured and would face considerable liability in the event of a disaster of some sort; but this frees the commissioners from personal liability. However, the overall insurance policy will still cost quite a bit.

Senator Frith: And they will not be included in any such coverage, then?

Senator Kelly: No.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I understand the point made. My original reading of the bill had been before the committee change. In other words, I was reading the first reading copy.

But that does not change the problem of the principle of the bill. I hope that we will get a good explanation, but I do not think that we have enough evidence before us to give this bill second reading. Even on the question of adding the word "other", the responsibility of the directors would normally be a vicarious responsibility for the acts of others anyway. I had rather assumed, in fact, that they were not asking for protection against fault, neglect, want of skill or wilful and wrongful acts of themselves in any event.

I believe that this is one of those rare cases when we should ask a committee for a report before we give it second reading.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that this bill be not now read the second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should probably put on record—and I think there are precedents to support this—that this motion in the Senate does not kill the bill, as some in the other place argue it does. We did this with Bill C-83 and the Caisse de Dépôt Bill. It is clear that this does not kill the bill, according to Senate procedures.

On motion of Senator Frith, subject matter of bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that all remaining orders, inquiries and motions stand.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

THE LATE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND, P.C.

TRIBUTES

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, at the request of Senator Lowell Murray, on his behalf and on behalf of the government, I pay tribute to the memory of the Honourable Jean Marchand, who was a member of this house for seven years and its Speaker for four years.

Personally, I pay tribute to him first and foremost as a friend. We quickly became friends when we went to Father Lévesque's École des sciences sociales in 1939 and this friendship lasted through the years.

As the years pass, one fully realizes that few friendships—two, three, maybe four—survive the different career paths one takes. I had the inestimable good fortune that our friendship, Jean's and mine, was one of those. I am fortunate that it remained intact after almost 50 years. I thank Providence for such a gift, such a grace.

Obviously, it is impossible in a few minutes to do any justice at all to a career like Jean Marchand's. So I will mention only a few of the many memories that have come to mind in the last two days.

The first goes back to the late '50s, to a conference on education held in February 1958 at the University of Montreal. This was a major gathering of all those interested in education. Attending this conference were over 1,000 people representing not only the schools but other groups as well. The Saint-Jean-Baptiste Society had initiated this conference. We were at the closing session, where resolutions were to be passed. The situation was as follows: a dais had been set up in the great amphitheatre of the University of Montreal, a real panel of "establishment" figures from the world of education as it then was, before reform had really begun.

We entered the hall, Jean and I, and he said to me, "Come sit next to me. I'll tell you what to do." There was a resolution divided into two parts, a very general resolution for immediate action and all the rest, the important questions for later consideration. Thus, discussion of free tuition, compulsory school attendance and a whole series of measures affecting many aspects of education was postponed.

Jean Marchand's strategy, gained from his long union experience, was to have someone from the floor, facing this august panel, propose that everything for future consideration be brought into the resolution for immediate action. He was in charge of strategy. When he wanted technical explanations, he said: It's your turn. But when it was a matter of strategy, of manoeuvring the crowd and getting a consensus on a subject that had not been put forward by the panel, it was Jean who intervened.

Why do I mention this? First of all, to show what I would call the union leader at work, and also to illustrate the kind of unionism practised by Jean Marchand. His unionism did not focus exclusively on collective bargaining but was sensitive to the broader issues of society. At the time, education was one of those issues, and could not be ignored by Jean Marchand. So he registered, and he saw his demands materialize when the Department of Education was established several years later. We were talking about the conference of 1958 just a few weeks ago.

Another memory goes back to the time when the Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission—a name familiar to our colleague Senator Frith—was being established. Prime Minister Pearson had asked Jean Marchand to sit on the commission. I think Jean was willing to accept but did not want to go alone. He insisted that André Laurendeau be joint chairman as well as a member of the commission. Laurendeau had some reservations. He was very reluctant to leave journalism and get involved in the federal scene, which was understandable considering his past history and his philosophy.

• (1410)

I remember one evening in Cap Rouge when Laurendeau came to meet Marchand. I think that was when Marchand managed to convince Laurendeau to become a member and joint chairman of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission. This was another instance of Jean's intervening at a crucial moment and doing so decisively, without necessarily playing a leading role himself.

I think I can say, at least that is my interpretation, that on that occasion, following the inquiry conducted across this country, he suddenly became aware of the problems that existed with respect to relations between French and English in this country. I think that was when Marchand realized something had to be done.

He found a mission in life, as it were, and when Mr. Pearson asked him to come to Ottawa, I think he had already given the idea a great deal of thought and was ready to get involved in a struggle where the future and unity of Canada were at stake. Again, he was prepared to accept, provided he did not go alone, and so he more or less negotiated Mr. Pearson's approval of two more candidates, Gérard Pelletier and Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

I think we can say the negotiations with Mr. Pearson went smoothly in the case of Gérard Pelletier and not so smoothly in the case of Pierre Elliott Trudeau. In any event, they went to Ottawa, and you know the rest of the story.

I mention this to show once again how Jean Marchand was present at certain strategic moments in this country's history.

A third story, similar in a way but not as important, and that will be the last example I shall give today, was the role he played in getting the enabling legislation for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion through Parliament.

Jean was well aware that if development programs were to have any hope of succeeding, there would have to be consultation between both levels of government, at least at the planning stage. There was no such provision in the first version of the bill. It was Jean who, after talking it over—I was there—with Marcel Masse, minister of state responsible for the planning board in the Quebec government at the time, ordered the inclusion of a provision that provided for harmonization of regional development plans and for the implementation of programs within the framework of a joint planning process. Development activities that took place over the years may not have produced the expected results in every case, but at least the concept has survived, the concept of harmonizing the activities of both levels of government, at least at the planning stage.

There are so many more instances I would have to recall to reflect accurately the dimension and importance of the role played by Jean Marchand in building the Quebec and Canada of today.

There was also the style and the depth of his commitment. I would like to put it this way: Jean Marchand was always a Quebecer through and through, a Quebecer down to his roots, but at the same time he was a Canadian who owed his allegiance to Canada. In him, the two were not contradictory but strove to harmonize.

We talked about this quite often, but as far as I know, he never could decide to write down his own story, so we would at least have his perception of the significance of what he did. He was not a writer, but it was not that he lacked the skills. From time to time, he would produce a text that was a model of composition. However, it would have taken time and especially a great deal of patience, and the latter was not his strong suit.

We can only hope that others will do it for him, using the quite considerable number of papers he kept at Cap Rouge where he had started to put them in some semblance of order, with difficulty and not very regularly.

What we have heard on radio and television and what we have read in the media in the past two days demonstrates that Jean Marchand put his stamp on our time as very few Quebecers and Canadians have done. The tribute we pay to his memory, which is echoed across the country, is the tribute we pay to great men. He was a great man.

May his soul rest in peace, awaiting the Resurrection. On behalf of my colleagues and on my own behalf, I wish to extend my heartfelt condolences to his only daughter, Marie-

[Senator Tremblay.]

Ève, to his grandchildren, Emmanuel and Melissa, and to the other members of his family.

[English]

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, these occasions are difficult when we want to take the opportunity to remember both the public and the private lives of former colleagues. The temptation to do a mini-biography is always present, because we have so many rich memories and so many admiring recollections and we do not want to leave any out. However, of course, consistent with the nature of the occasion, we do.

The public Jean Marchand is well known. He went straight from high school to the Catholic Workers of Canada as an organizer. He then became the first elected President of the CNTU. He figured in the asbestos strike, and I believe that is when he first met Mr. Trudeau. He was involved in the Radio-Canada producers strike and worked there with René Lévesque.

I met him first in 1963, when he and I sat at the first meeting of the B & B Commission under the chairmanship of Mr. Laurendeau and Mr. Dunton. It was not long before I realized that I was sharing that commission's activities with a real patriot and a very unusual man. He soon established the reputation that lived with him all his life. He was very direct, very intelligent, very experienced, very hard-nosed, courageous and candid. He had a great sense of humour, loved a joke, and, as many of you may remember, also loved to sing and had a more than acceptable voice.

Senator Tremblay has told us about his recruitment to the federal political scene. I understand it was René Lévesque who told him not to take the step to the federal scene by himself, saying that, if Trudeau and Pelletier had said they were going to go, then he should insist that all three of them go, citing some problems that Lévesque himself had had in another context.

Moving on to our private memories of him, he was a remarkably effective person and, although determined and realistic, very warmhearted. He was perhaps occasionally wrong, although I do not remember him ever being in doubt.

In his maiden speech in 1977 he made it clear that, although he had played a major role in federal politics, his roots were still firmly entrenched in the labour movement. He was speaking on an inquiry into the problems of labour relations in the country and certain related problems of economic order. He dealt at length with the union movement in Canada and the relationship between organized labour and government. He said:

I have been in public or semi-public life for 35 years, and what has struck me most is that Canadians do not know Canada; we do not know each other. We know our region; we know our community; sometimes we know a little about our province, but we do not know each other. We cannot have a united country if we do not understand the problems of others.

Senator Marchand not only recognized the problem but worked diligently for a united country by promoting the understanding that he felt was so essential. He did it in the union movement, he did it with the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and he did it in provincial and national politics. In particular, he certainly did his part by raising the consciousness of English Canada when it came to the new dynamics of Quebec society.

● (1420)

There was one line in Senator Marchand's maiden speech that particularly struck home. After he described the relationship between the various regions of the country, he said, "In this country we all need each other."

Well, when Canada needed Jean Marchand, he was there.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, Jean Marchand had a lot of panache, both morally and physically. His mop of unruly red hair perfectly reflected his personality which was both fiery and resolute, with at times a touch of extreme sensitivity and melancholy.

Both his careers, of almost equal duration—as a union leader from 1942 to 1965, and as a politician from 1965 to 1984—are evidence of his determination to achieve objectives which are both idealistic and realistic.

The union leader, who had received his training at the École des sciences sociales under Right Reverend Father Georges Henri Lévesque, had greatly contributed to a necessary reform of employer-employee relations in the province of Quebec. From an aggressive fighter at an early stage, he had become less dogmatic and more flexible, as progress was being made. A parallel development could be found in the management's outlook.

The great battles of the union movement having become less attractive to him, he had turned to federal politics where for some years the recognition of the French fact had been the main issue. We know the rest: As leader of the Quebec wing under Prime Minister Pearson, he decided not to succeed him as leader of the Liberal Party (just a nod would have been enough) and instead threw his weight behind Pierre Trudeau. Thus was born the French Power which was going to express itself in various ways, but especially through the Official Languages Act. Alas! Dark clouds were going to darken the skies in 1976 with the air traffic controllers' crisis. Unable to accept the government's surrender, Marchand resigned first from Cabinet, and then from the House of Commons, only to charge head on against separatism during the provincial election which resulted in René Lévesque being elected Prime Minister of Quebec and Marchand himself facing personal defeat.

Back in Ottawa, he was appointed to the Senate, but he was no longer the same. On a few occasions, he had given signs of his former fiery spirit. Appointed Speaker of the Senate in 1980, he took part in the referendum campaign the same year and demonstrated his power as a powerful orator. Because of his position as Speaker of the Senate he could not therefore be involved in the debate on the patriation of our Constitution and had to remain neutral.

The Trudeau era was coming to an end. Perhaps for our friend Parliament had no more challenge or interest. He resigned to become chairman of the Transport Commission, a position which had lost some of its importance. Marchand decided then to return to Quebec City, the only place where he felt completely and truly at home.

I had called him following his recent accident. "It is very painful, and my body is literally covered with bruises but I am starting to feel better. By the way, I can tell you that perhaps it was a mistake to leave the Senate". I told him that the Senate might not be the same today if he had chosen to remain—

As is the life of any other individual, that of Jean Marchand is a picture of lights and shades. The lights are what make it beautiful. His were so bright, so generous, that they raised in us a feeling of well-justified admiration, but also a moving affection.

To his daughter, his sister and to the relatives of a friend, I offer my deepest sympathy.

[English]

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to be associated with the tributes that have been paid to the Honourable Jean Marchand this afternoon. I do not want to repeat them, but I wish to comment on one other aspect of Jean Marchand's career, because I served in the same cabinet with him for nearly five years, from 1968 to the end of 1972. It was my privilege to travel with him to many parts of western Canada—Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Winnipeg and many other places—when he was minister of what was then known as DREE, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. He will be remembered and appreciated by Canadians far beyond the borders of Quebec, although he claimed that he was fundamentally a Quebecer with a great respect and admiration for Canada.

On a number of occasions, honourable senators, when he had a specific message to give or an announcement to make, he would read from a prepared text or from notes that he had. But I remember in particular that in Regina, before a very large crowd, he set his notes aside and explained his vision of Canada. Of course, when speaking publicly he would always apologize for his inadequacy in the English language, although I thought he could explain better in English what the real meaning of Canada was than many people with a considerably better command of the language.

Indeed, the one question that was very often raised in the editorials and various other places in English Canada during those years was: "What does Quebec want?" They heard of the difficulties in Quebec when Quebec was going through what I think Senator Frith described as a new dynamism. In any event, whatever you want to call it, there certainly was a transition taking place in Quebec.

When Jean Marchand explained his view of what Quebec not only wanted but needed to cope with the changes that were taking place there during this transition—in other words, what Quebec was going through—everyone who heard him, no matter where he spoke in Canada, both understood him and agreed with him. It was completely clear that they endorsed his vision, not only of Canada but of how Canadians should treat each other in order to become a stronger nation. He would then talk about the national unity that was so absolutely essential in order to achieve that.

Honourable senators, I thought I should add that today, because I believe that Canada has lost one of its outstanding leaders. We have lost a good friend and indeed a great human being.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I had the honour of being appointed to this chamber when Senator Jean Marchand was still its Speaker. Therefore I was delighted, as I was making my début here, to meet again with an old friend who at the same time would prove to be a generous counsellor. Being new in this chamber, I greatly appreciated benefitting from the advice of such an experienced politician.

For me, Jean Marchand has always been a ball of fire. That is why today I find it difficult to accept, to understand that he is no longer with us.

Since last Sunday, a great many personalities from Quebec and the rest of Canada have paid tribute to this unique man who has left an indelible mark on his generation and his time, as Senator Tremblay was saying a moment ago.

I met him for the first time when he was the leading figure in the labour movement which was still in its infancy in Quebec and constantly in conflict with the then provincial premier.

Undoubtedly, Jean Marchand will go down in history as one of the greatest union leaders that Canada has ever known. He not only transformed and modernized the great labour union that the CSN has become, but he was also one of the main architects of the so-called Quiet Revolution that saw the province of Quebec emerging from the dark ages.

● (1430)

Others, more competent than I, have talked about his long and productive political career in Ottawa culminating with his appointment as Speaker of the Senate.

In conclusion, I would like to mention some of his personal qualities that endeared him to his friends and which made him respected even by his political opponents.

Jean Marchand was a remarkably kindhearted and highly intelligent man. He was a passionate man with a remarkable sense of humour. He showed a fierce determination when defending causes that he felt strongly about, while remaining at all times a warm and considerate man. He could lash out in the course of political debate, but his bark was worse than his bite. He was called a man of the left, whatever that means. I agree if it means that his heart was in the right place.

To my mind, the word that would most aptly describe Jean Marchand is truthfulness. He was an upright man, the kind of man one seldom has the opportunity to meet in a lifetime. He will be sorely missed by myself, by his relatives and his close friends. All those who had the opportunity and the privilege to know and appreciate him will miss him, including many honourable senators here in this chamber. The province of Quebec will miss him. Canada will miss him.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourables senators, I too would like to join my colleagues in the House of Commons and my fellow senators in expressing my sorrow at the loss of a great Canadian, a masterful politician and a French-Canadian who played a leading role in the advancement of bilingualism in Canada.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport in 1972 and then as a fellow cabinet minister, I came to admire greatly this warm and courageous politician who was deeply committed to his many endeavours.

The Honourable Jean Marchand was well liked, well known and admired by the people in western as well as eastern Canada. He was an eloquent man who sought to build a strong Canada and, for this, he will go down in our history.

These few words do not do full justice to the numerous accomplishments of this great Canadian, but I wanted very much to say how proud I am at having known this wonderful man and for having worked side by side with him.

To his family, to his daughter Marie-Ève in particular, I offer my sincerest condolences.

[English]

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I too would like to add a few words about a very old and dear friend, the late Jean Marchand. In the House of Commons, where I worked for many years, there was a saying, "If you want heart and passion for Canada in a debate, ask Jean Marchand to give a speech." And so he did time and again. For many years he mesmerized those who heard him speak about Canada as a Quebecer.

It is difficult to overemphasize the importance of the effect Jean Marchand had on the course of national unity in our country. Sometimes we tend to forget the uneasiness that existed on Parliament Hill in the sixties, as French and English tried to find an accommodation with each other. It took a great deal of very special courage and commitment on his part to come from his beloved province to Parliament Hill and into a situation which must have seemed cold and sometimes lonely to this vibrant, gallant gentleman.

I have recalled many times over the last few days memories of Jean. I will remember most particularly, as will all of you, those twinkling eyes, the little laugh and the incredible loyalty he had to his province, to his country, but, most importantly, to his friends. He was truly a splendid gentleman and a great Canadian. We shall miss him.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, let the Chair join you all in extending my most sincere sympathy to the Marchand family, bereaved by the demise of Senator Marchand, a former Speaker of the Senate.

Parliament will long remember his major stands on bilingualism, the French fact and Quebec's role within the Canadian federation.

As others have said, he was a fighter, always ready for battle when convinced of a just cause. A man of commitment, he seldom minced his words, and Quebecers always will be grateful for the tenacity he showed in his labour struggles.

Honourable senators, Canadians today realize that Senator Marchand made an exceptional contribution to his country's political life.

[English]

I think it appropriate that we remain silent for one minute in his memory.

The members of the Senate then stood in silent tribute.

AIR DISASTER

RAMSTEIN AIR BASE, WEST GERMANY—COLLISION OF ITALIAN AIR FORCE DEMONSTRATION TEAM AIRCRAFT—CONDOLENCES

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to offer my condolences, and the condolences of the Senate of Canada, to the families of the victims and to the survivors of the terrible disaster that took place at Ramstein Air Base in West Germany. Participating in a public air show at the base, three jet aircraft of the Italian Air Force demonstration team, Frecce Tricolori, collided. Tragically, one aircraft crashed into the crowd, killing more than 40 spectators and injuring hundreds.

● (1440)

Honourable senators, I was very much involved for several years in promoting a tour of the Frecce Tricolori to Canada. They came here in 1986 and performed flawlessly and thrillingly in different parts of Canada, including the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto, where over 300,000 spectators attended. I came to know most of the members of the Italian team and to appreciate their professionalism, expertise and sense of responsibility.

As a school of aerobatics, the Frecce Tricolori is more than 50 years old, and the team is one of the best in the world. Three members of the team were killed in the tragedy, and I knew them all: Lieutenant Colonel Mario Naldini, Lieutenant Colonel Ivo Nutarelli and Captain Georgio Allesio. I am sure honourable senators will join me in offering condolences to the families of these men as well as to the families of the victims who died while attending the show.

THE SENATE

DELAYS IN CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, on Thursday next, September 1, 1988, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the question of delays in the consideration of legislation in the Senate.

Senator Olson: Do you think you have a case?

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Murray is not here today, but I shall be pleased to take as notice any questions honourable senators wish to place.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN CIRCUIT BOARDS BY UNITED STATES CUSTOMS—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Honourable Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate to remind the Honourable Leader of the Government about my question with regard to the harassment of Canadian hi-tech exports at crossing points along the border. This issue was raised in a program aired on the CBC show The Journal, which indicated that Canadian exporters were being accused, according to them wrongly, of having stolen U.S. patents and using them in their products. The Honourable Senator Murray had promised to look into this issue and to let me know what he had found. I should be grateful if I could be given a progress report.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I shall certainly pursue the matter.

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—DROUGHT RELIEF PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR QUALIFICATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Doody would be good enough to ask again for a report from those in the administration responsible for the drought relief program announced by the government back in June. I have asked several people for information, including representatives of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Association, which, I understand, is administering the program for the federal government. I have asked a number of times if producers could be given some idea of what the criteria are to qualify for the various aspects of the drought relief program.

For example, it was announced that there would be a payment of up to $60 per head on cattle, but so far we have been given no indication of how that payment will be arrived at. We have learned that "up to $60" does not mean that the producer will necessarily receive $60; it means that he may get from one cent to $60. There will be a formula of some kind to determine the amount. It was also announced, or indicated, that there would be some kind of acreage payment. Obviously the payments would be different for different areas, depending on the severity of the drought. So far I have been unable to get an answer from the administration as to what is involved.

Another reason it is important to know the criteria is that some of the assistance, I have been given to understand, will involve an initial payment and a final payment contingent upon certain actions taken by producers some time in the spring of 1989. For example, producers of livestock will be obliged to apply for forage insurance if they want to get their final payment.

Honourable senators, I will not go into the remainder of the details. I merely wanted to give a couple of examples so that the deputy leader could communicate with the Department of Agriculture and, using his great influence and persuasion, obtain the answers. Now, at least, he has some indication of the kind of reply we need. In other words, because we are approaching the stage where producers of livestock have to know what management decisions they should be making from here on to the end of the year—such as how many cattle to carry through the winter, it would therefore be well if we could know now what the qualifying criteria for these benefits will be.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly bring the honourable senator's comments to the attention of the appropriate authorities and try to get the information. I sincerely hope that the examples the honourable senator gave are more accurate than his description of my influence and powers of persuasion.

TRANSPORT

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relates to the Port of Churchill. As he is probably aware, many people in Manitoba, including the Government of Manitoba, are most concerned about the fact that no grain is being shipped through the Port of Churchill at the moment.

Therefore, I would request, through the Deputy Leader of the Government, that the Leader of the Government in the Senate make representations on behalf of the western grain farmers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to give serious consideration to the possibility of shipping grain through Churchill. This would be a golden opportunity for benefiting farmers, because it is cheaper to ship through that port than elsewhere. I am sure western Canadians would certainly appreciate it if serious consideration were given to this proposal.

Will the Deputy Leader of the Government make appropriate representations to the Leader of the Government in the Senate?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I certainly will, senator. I shall also try to get the information requested.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the second reading of Bill C-264, to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use).

He said: Honourable senators, this particular piece of legislation is a private member's bill introduced in the other place by Dr. Bob Horner, the MP for Mississauga North. I would emphasize that I was pleased when he contacted me and asked me to present it in this chamber.

The bill deals with the sale of paraphernalia associated with the consumption of illicit drugs and with the reading material that is also available in certain shops.

I should say at the outset, to answer those who generally would raise the question, "Will this particular piece of legislation completely stop the sale of this sort of material?", that the answer has to be, "No, it will not." Much of this material, or at least some of it, such as cigarette papers, paper clips, razor blades or any one of a dozen other commonplace items that are used in this trade, will still be available in other stores.

What is important about this particular bill is that it will remove the very obvious endorsement, as it were, of society's willingness to supply the equipment used in the consumption of illegal drugs, while at the same time banning the substances themselves. As has been pointed out to me and to others, it is a very difficult selling job to convince people that the legislators, the authorities of this country, take seriously the problem of illicit drug use by young people and by adults as well, when they openly condone the sale, on any street corner, of materials that are clearly meant for use in the consumption of the products.

I am told that one can walk into one of these stores and buy a recipe book, as it were, which tells one how to manufacture crack. Like buying a package of cake mix, the recipe is on the side of the package. You can also buy marijuana seeds with instructions on how to grow your own. I am told that it does not take any great agricultural genius to be able to produce a very tidy crop in one's own basement or backyard with the assistance of the instructions that come with the package of seeds.

This sort of thing is clearly unacceptable. I am told that for nine years local and other police forces have been asking legislators to pass a bill to ban the sale of these appliances and of this literature with a view to sending a clear signal across this country to the parents and to the potential users that the legislators are concerned about the problem and are willing to take steps to correct it. I think the message itself is probably just as important as the legislation. For far too long the problem has been one to which lip service has been paid by the authorities in Canada. Serious application of this disapproval has never really come forth.

This morning two gentlemen from Carleton University gave me some material on the use of drugs in this country. Quite frankly, much of the information is quite startling to me. Perhaps, living in Newfoundland, I do not see the problem as clearly as those who live in other parts of this country. These people work with the Drug Awareness Program in the Faculty of Social Services and are taking positive steps to create a focus for the various groups who are concerned, and who have good reason to be concerned, about the use of illicit drugs in this country.

I note here that there are approximately 2 million to 2.5 million Canadians using illicit drugs in Canada on a regular basis. Of those, 300,000 to 500,000 can be defined as addicts. It is estimated that there are 75,000 cocaine users in Toronto and 20,000 heroin users. In Montreal law enforcement agencies estimate that there are 65,000 cocaine users and 5,000 to 10,000 heroin addicts. In Vancouver heroin is a major problem, with an estimated 16,000 to 20,000 hard-core addicts; up to 20,000 casual users; and some 40,000 cocaine users.

Another rather frightening and tragic statistic is that experts estimate that more than 50 per cent of teenage suicides are drug related. The use of cocaine among Canadian youth has doubled in the last five years.

It should be emphasized that, although much of the attention and many of the articles I have read seem to suggest that this is a youth problem, I am told, nevertheless, that over 60 per cent of the regular illicit drug users in our country are adults—that is, people who are well over the defined age of youth.

This information indicates that now in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver—and presumably it will spread to other cities in our country—the use of give-away drugs to young children in schoolyards is a common practice to encourage young kids of 8, 10 or 12 years of age to use these drugs on a free basis so that they can build up an addiction or a habit and become regular users. There has been a tremendous increase in the use of children under 12 years of age as runners, dealers and distributors of these drugs, because, of course, under the Young Offenders Act the risk of punishment is not nearly as great. Therefore, the runners use these kids quite regularly.

Honourable senators, the list of statistics and facts that these people were kind enough to give me is one of the most tragic pieces of literature I have had to read in some time. I think it is high time, indeed, as I said a few moments ago, for legislators to demonstrate their concern to the police, to the parent-teacher associations and to the various groups who are operating in a positive way across this country in trying to combat this terribly tragic situation.

The chairman of PRIDE called me this morning. I have also been called by various school board presidents and members, by the Canadian Home and School Association, the Canadian Parent-Teachers' Association, the Ontario Association of Principals, and the Ontario Secondary School Principals' Council. There is an ongoing list of people who have suddenly taken a great deal of comfort and heart from the fact that a bill has finally been introduced, and appears to be in the process of passage, that will demonstrate the legislators' endorsement of their efforts over the years.

• (1510)

Honourable senators, if this bill does go to committee, and I suspect that it will probably go to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, I would urge that it be dealt with as quickly as possible, because the message of having the legislation passed by Parliament is almost as important as the legislation itself. For too long these people have been working on their own to combat this terrible situation in our country, with very little endorsement by the various levels of government in Canada.

Although Jake Epp, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, introduced for the first time a little while ago a drug combat strategy for government, very little has come from that as yet. It is a relatively new concept, but one that is very welcome. However, this piece of legislation of Dr. Horner's certainly complements that initiative. He is to be commended for it, and I commend the legislation to your attention.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we support this legislation.

Last Thursday I had a telephone call from Fred Burford, who was at Victoria College, University of Toronto, with me many years ago. He told me about this private member's bill that had been passed in the House of Commons, and, when I told him that I was going to be in Toronto on Friday, he suggested that he show me one of these head shops. So he picked me up downtown about noon. We had lunch with Chief Superintendent Dickins of the RCMP at "O" Division Headquarters, with an inspector in charge of drug enforcement, and with a female plainclothes member of the mounted police. I received quite a briefing, including a lot of documentary evidence from Fred and from the RCMP personnel with whom I lunched.

Those of you from Toronto know that the "O" Division Headquarters is not very far from Yonge Street; it is at the corner of Jarvis and Dundas. Yonge Street north of Dundas is a popular area for these head shops. So we went over to a head shop and I was shown some of this material.

Now, it is pretty hard for the uninitiated—and I assure you I am among that group—to see exactly how these things can be used. The young policewoman tried to show me, in the case, how a glass pipe is used. The most serious things seem to be the paraphernalia that enable cocaine to be reduced or distilled, whatever the right verb is, into crack. We know, particularly from watching American television programs, how serious the crack problem is in the United States. Obviously, as Senator Doody has said, it is a real problem here as well. I then spoke to the proprietor and told him that this legislation was coming up, and, in the tradition of audi alteram partem, listening to the other side, I told him that I expected that the bill would be passed this week and that it would be going to committee, and that if he wanted to make representations he should call me, and I gave him my phone number. At that point the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television crew came in.

Senator Barootes: You looked good on TV!

Senator Frith: They had just been across the road at another head shop and they asked if they could interview me, the mountie and Fred Burford. They did not interview the mounted policewoman, but they did interview Fred and me. I did not see the program, but I did watch it on our demand video. As it came out, I am sure that many of my friends across the country thought I was in there stocking up before the place got padlocked. However, what really happened is what I have told you.

As a result of this research and a number of phone calls, as well as a meeting I had yesterday with the two gentlemen from Carleton University who went to see Senator Doody, I have reached the following conclusions:

First, it is indeed bizarre that it should be legal to sell paraphernalia to create narcotics that are illegal and to sell books to show how to do so.

Second, society is sending a dangerously mixed signal to young people and other potential drug users by saying it is illegal for them to use this drug because it is immoral, but it is perfectly legal, and therefore moral, to sell paraphernalia for the production of the drug.

Third, we must consider the other side of the question. The businessman I spoke to, who was also interviewed on the program, said simply, "I hope you will make it clear what we can sell and what we cannot sell. What we cannot sell, we will not sell. What we can sell, we will." The shop I saw sold many other things, such as T-shirts and so on; so I take it that no one is in this business solely and that no one will be put out of business. The merchants do not seem to be concerned that they will be. If they were, I suppose it would be desirable anyway. However, it is important that the legislation be examined by a committee, because, looking at the other side of the question, we certainly do not want to pass legislation that is unnecessarily broad and that could result in unfair and unreasonable harassment.

Fourth, is there any direct link between passing this bill and eradicating drug use? As Senator Doody has said, the answer is no, it will not have that effect. I suppose that is one of the arguments against the bill. I understand that the New Democratic Party in the other place opposed the bill. Perhaps that is the reason they did. However, that is not the raison d'être or the justification for the bill. The justification arises from the points that I think Senator Doody made and that I hope I have made.

Perhaps some of the most important work is done by all the citizens out there who are like Fred Burford. Fred is a retired high school principal. He has been active in this field his whole professional life and particularly for the nine years that this legislation has been sought. He is president of the Council on Drug Abuse, a volunteer group. PRIDE, the group that called Senator Doody, also called me. There are also the Parents Against Drugs.

It seems to me, honourable senators, that we have to see this bill in context. Drug enforcement police work, effective though it can be, will never stop or even substantially reduce drug use. Arresting the pushers is not going to do that if the market is still there. There will always be another pusher ready to sell to an eager market. What can reduce it, perhaps not completely eradicate it but reduce it and prevent it from becoming the problem that it is in many countries, is action by volunteers, parents, workers all across this country, fellow Canadians, who are prepared to spend the time and effort that they are obviously prepared to spend to try to arrest, reduce and even come close to eradicating this pernicious practice. It is for them, who have worked for nine years to get this small bit of encouragement and who need the encouragement to go on to climb the much more difficult mountains that lie ahead of them, that we should pass this legislation.

I think we should record our gratitude to them for the work they have done and for the work they have promised to do.

I believe this bill should be examined by the committee. I believe the committee is prepared to examine it this week. Certainly, if it is ready to report later this week, we would support giving this bill third reading and Royal Assent.

Two questions occur to me to ask in committee. The main one is: Why is this bill not a government bill? I am sure that someone—Dr. Horner or whoever appears—can explain that. Secondly, can someone from the Department of Justice assure us that there are no reservations on the part of the Department of Justice or the law enforcement agencies about this bill?

The other reason for having this bill referred to committee is to give anyone who wants to present the opposite side, if there is an opposite side, an opportunity to do so.

Honourable senators, I hope the committee can find a way to conduct an adequate study this week. If it can, then I believe the bill should be given third reading later this week and receive Royal Assent in due course.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I only want to raise one matter with respect to Bill C-264, and that relates to the proposed prohibition of the sale of what has been described as “drug paraphernalia”. In the bill itself that comes under the interpretation clause, the new proposed section 420.1, with the definition of “instrument for illicit drug use”. It states in the proposed section:

“Instrument for illicit drug use” means anything designed primarily or intended under the circumstances for consuming or to facilitate the consumption of an illicit drug, but does not include a “device” as that term is defined in section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act;

Unfortunately, I am in the position of not knowing what is “a ‘device’ as that term is defined in section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act”.

What I am concerned about is that there are paraphernalia, particularly hypodermic syringes, used extensively in veterinary use. Those are also sold, from time to time, by these so-called “head shops”. I hope that there is careful drafting of the regulations so that passage of this bill does not severely inconvenience people who need hypodermic syringes for veterinary use.

Senator Frith: Or pharmaceutical use.

Senator Olson: I think that that is included in the term “as that term is defined in section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act”.

I really ought to be better informed than I am, but I am not sure that veterinary use of these devices is covered under section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act. I can tell honourable senators that in a few minutes I will check the act to determine that, but I am not sure of that right now.

Senator Frith: That is something that can be raised in committee.

Senator Olson: I also raise the point so that those who will draft the regulations will be careful to achieve the desirable aspects of this bill without imposing severe inconvenience on people who need such things.

Senator Flynn: It does not say anywhere that regulations will be enacted.

Senator Olson: Senator Flynn will recognize that what Bill C-264 does is amend the Criminal Code. What it is doing is changing some of the interpretations in the Criminal Code and making it an offence to sell certain types of instruments—instruments which have been referred to as “drug paraphernalia”. I hope that when the regulations are drawn up to administer these amendments to the Criminal Code they will not make it impossible for feed stores and veterinary supply stores to supply these things to people who need them for their livestock requirements.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Doody speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Doody: I should like to thank you for your support for this particular piece of legislation. I accept the fact that, as Senator Frith has pointed out, this is not going to change the habits of many Canadians. People who are addicted, or who have their minds made up, will find the implements they need to pursue their habits. I think that that is a “given” in this situation.

What is of major importance here is that a signal be sent out to all Canadians that the use of these sorts of devices is not accepted practice in this country.

What we have to do is remove the social acceptability of these so-called “recreational drugs”. That term, in itself, I find most distressing. There is nothing recreational about a 15- or 16-year old kid who has tried crack. I have been told that once you have tried this particularly odious substance, crack, there is a 70 per cent chance of becoming addicted.

Not only do the so-called “head shops” sell the paraphernalia to reduce cocaine to its base form, which, in effect, is the substance crack, they also provide a set of instructions on how to do that. They sell baking soda as an additive to reduce this substance, and with the baking soda comes a set of instructions on how to cook cocaine. Obviously letting this sort of thing continue with the consent and approval of the legislatures of Canada is not an acceptable state of affairs. This legislation sends that message out.

I am not suggesting that all of the people who operate these retail stores are bad people. Far from it; they are making a living. They are allowed to sell the stuff. It is a good commercial operation, and they sell other things, such as souvenir mugs and T-shirts, as Senator Frith has said. There are all sorts of items in those stores. But there are also big display cases of this gear. It has to be banned, and it has to be banned through law. The first step in making it socially unacceptable is to ban the paraphernalia that is to be used.

• (1530)

I fully concur with Senator Olson that we should make absolutely certain that innocent people are not caught in the snares when this legislation is enacted and proclaimed. To that end, the committee can ask the question about the veterinarians' usage of certain items, and it can ask about any other problems that might arise.

As I said in the beginning, honourable senators, the message that goes out to the users, to the sellers and, perhaps even more importantly, to those lonely people who have fought so long who are close to the problem—the parents, the parent-teacher groups, the school teachers, the principals and the law enforcement people—is that at long last there is something definite and concrete coming forth from the legislatures of Canada. I think that that is just as important as the legislation itself.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

UKRAINE

MILLENNIUM OF CHRISTIANIZATION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, July 20, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the historic event of the Millennium of the Christianization of the people of Ukraine.

He said: Honourable senators, I welcome this opportunity to speak on my motion of inquiry calling the attention of all honourable senators to the historic event of the Millennium of the Christianization of the people in Ukraine. As celebrations commemorating the Millennium of Christianity in Ukraine are reaching their climax this summer, I should like to draw the attention of all honourable senators to the religious significance and the political impact of this historic event.

Although Christianity was brought to the southern and western Slavs 20 to 30 years earlier by Saints Cyril and Methodius, it was in the year 988 that Princess Olga's son, the great Prince Volodymyr, the ruler of Kievan Rus, adopted the Christian faith as the religion of his nation. This young warrior also established peace in this turbulent medieval state of Kievan Rus, from which Ukrainians, Byelorussians and Russians trace their historic and religious heritage.

But the Christianization of Kievan Rus also had its political side. According to the Nestorian Chronicle, Prince Volodymyr, before he finally opted for eastern Christianity, reviewed the other religions—Judaism, Islam and Latin Christianity. However, Tenth Century "realpolitik" played a part in his final decision. By embracing Byzantine Christianity and marrying the emperor's daughter, Volodymyr acquired for himself a powerful political protector. At the same time, however, he unwittingly drew a cultural frontier across Europe, between Rome and Byzantium, that has outlasted shifting political frontiers.

Ukrainian Catholics throughout the world worship in the Byzantine rite—one of 18 canonical forms of worship in the Catholic Church. It is also the rite followed by the Orthodox Christians. The baptism of Kiev came several decades before the schism of 1054 which finally breached relations between Orthodox Christians and Catholics. In the year 1596 the Union of Brest brought a large part of the eastern Christians, of what are now Ukraine and Byelorussia, back into communion with Rome. The acceptance of Christianity profoundly altered the further course of Ukrainian history, significantly determining the development of Ukrainian culture and giving rise to a wealth of spiritual and social values.

In modern times Joseph Stalin, the Communist dictator of the U.S.S.R., began dismantling the Ukrainian Orthodox Church in the year 1922, completing it in 1930. At that time the Ukrainian Catholic Church was strong in western Ukraine, which then was under Polish rule until it was captured by the Soviets after the Second World War, in 1945.

Upon taking over, the Soviet authorities arrested all eight bishops of the Ukrainian Catholic Church. Approximately 1,500 priests were imprisoned or killed. Most churches and all monasteries were closed, along with convents and educational institutions. In the year 1946 the Soviet government delegalized the Ukrainian Catholic Church and forced its unification with the Russian Orthodox Church. The Communist government judged it at that time unacceptable to have a church with outside ties to Rome, but neither the Vatican nor the Ukrainian Catholic Church in the rest of the world recognized this forced unification, so the Ukrainian Catholic Church had to go underground.

It has become the modern church in the catacombs. As the Reverend R.G. MacNeil wrote in July in one of the Ottawa newspapers, those who wanted this Church to disappear are claiming its millennium as their own, but the Church which they thought they had destroyed is very much alive and present to celebrate 1,000 years of Christian worship and service in the homeland and around the world.

• (1540)

As far as Canada is concerned, the Ukrainian Catholic Church is a thriving religious body serving more than 259,000 Catholic Ukrainian Canadians who belong to the Byzantine rite of the Catholic Church, which is organized into six eparchies. Their metropolitan or head bishop for Canada is the Most Reverend Maxim Hermaniuk, Arch-Eparch of Winnipeg. Their world leader is Cardinal Myroslav Ivan Lubachivsky. In Canada the honorary patron of the millennium year is Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada, Jeanne Sauv . The inauguration of this celebration took place here in Ottawa in the rotunda of the Parliament Buildings in the presence of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Honourable Don Mazankowski, several parliamentarians of all political parties, Metropolitan Maxim Hermaniuk of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, Metropolitan Wasyly of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, and representatives of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee.

For the U.S.S.R.'s Christians, this jubilee is a source of joy and inspiration, but, for Gorbachev and his atheistic colleagues of the Kremlin, it is a considerable challenge. According to Bohdan Nahaylo, who spoke at a conference on "Christianity in the East Slavic lands" that was held at the University of London, England, last month, this millennium weaves together religion, nationalism, human rights, and political and state relations with the Vatican in such a way that it seriously tests the Kremlin's avowed commitment to glasnost and democratization and also brings into focus the continuity in Moscow's policies towards the U.S.S.R.'s two large Slavic non-Russian nations—namely, the Ukrainians and the Byelorussians.

Honourable senators, it is interesting—indeed edifying and inspiring—that after 70 years of Communist rule in the U.S.S.R. religion is still alive. The imposition of regulations closely restricting religious activity, relentless anti-religious propaganda, and several assaults on churches have failed to eradicate belief in God. Instead, they have produced a resilient strain of faith tempered by persecution and martyrdom. Here I would like to mention the heroic and holy figures of Bishop Romza, who was killed in the Ukraine, and Cardinal Josyp Slipyj, who after many years was released from prison, and headed the Ukrainian Catholic Church from Rome. Cardinal Slipyj visited Ottawa in 1973, and I, as Minister of State for Multiculturalism, had the privilege of acting as host to him at that time. He died recently in his nineties. He was regarded not only as a holy man but also as the patriarch of the Ukrainian Catholic Church.

Honourable senators, in these more hopeful days of glasnost, perestroika and democratization in the U.S.S.R., it is all too easy to forget that, apart from the officially recognized religious communities in the Soviet Union, whose leaders have agreed to act within the narrow limits prescribed by the state, there are entire catacomb churches, whose members, along with numerous other religious dissidents, Orthodox, Catholics, Protestants—not to mention those of the Jewish, Muslim and Buddhist faiths—daily risk arrest, vilification and harassment. Even today, when some more prominent religious dissidents have been freed as part of Gorbachev's democratization campaign, several hundred religious believers are still known to be imprisoned or locked up in psychiatric hospitals. An unforeseen result of glasnost, however, has been that both religious dissenters and respected members of the Soviet intelligentsia—people like Dmitri Likhachev—are openly challenging this policy and calling for a loosening of restrictions. Unable to ignore something as important as the millennium of the christening of Kievan Rus, the Kremlin has been trying to make the most of the occasion for its own political ends. This has been facilitated by the cooperation of docile Russian Orthodox leaders, who were brought into line long ago through the use of brute force or by being bought off with privileges.

What particularly annoyed the Kremlin was the fact that in March of 1979 the newly elected Pope, John Paul II, issued a formal letter to the head of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, Cardinal Josyp Slipyj, calling upon the Ukrainian Catholic hierarchy to prepare for the millennium of the baptism of Kievan Rus. This acknowledgment of the Ukrainian dimension of the jubilee, the interest which the Vatican was demonstrating in the anniversary, as well as the Pope's defence of the rights of the Ukrainian believers to freedom of conscience, triggered a sharp response from the official Soviet press, which complained that emigr  Ukrainian nationalists were out to exploit the millennial jubilee for anti-Soviet purposes.

As the celebration of the millennium progressed, the Moscow Patriarchate depicted this anniversary as a purely Russian event and claimed to be the sole heir to the millennium. Challenging this, the underground Ukrainian Catholic Church, Ukrainian dissidents, and the large Ukrainian Catholic and Orthodox Churches in the west emphasized that the State of Muscovy did not arise until the thirteenth century and that the name "Russia" was not adopted by its leaders until the time of Peter the Great. They claimed that Moscow had usurped the historical and cultural patrimony of Ukraine and Byelorussia.

The biggest problem for the Kremlin is the recent resurgence of the catacomb Ukrainian Catholic Church and the support given to it by Pope John Paul II. The Ukrainian Catholic Church has managed to survive in the underground and, on the eve of the millennium, has put the Kremlin on the spot by taking advantage of glasnost to press for legalization. The Kremlin is averse to restoring an institution that it identifies with Ukrainian nationalism, while the Moscow Patriarchate knows and fears that any concessions to Ukrainian Catholics threaten to undermine its position. The Vatican has a further stake in the millennium, because the baptism of Kievan Rus took place before the Great Schism of 1054 which divided the Christian world into the Latin or Roman camp and the Orthodox or Byzantine sphere. Pope John Paul II had always made it clear that he would like to visit the Soviet Union for the millennium celebrations; but he was not prepared simply to endorse the Moscow Patriarchate's interpretation of the anniversary, nor was he prepared to be prevented from visiting Lithuania at the same time.

• (1550)

Pope John Paul II put further pressure on the Kremlin and the leaders of the Russian Orthodox Church when he engineered an historic reconciliation in Rome between the leaders of the Polish and Ukrainian Catholic Churches. In February of this year the Pope addressed a special letter to the Ukrainian Catholic Church in which he praised the courageous way it has remained loyal to its faith.

On May 30 of this year President Ronald Reagan of the U.S.A., in a brief speech delivered at the Danilovsky Monastery near Moscow, expressed the hope that:

All the many Soviet religious communities that are prevented from registering or are banned altogether, including the Ukrainian Catholic and Orthodox Churches, will soon be able to practise their religion freely and openly, and also instruct their children in and outside the home in the fundamentals of their faith.

On June 3, during a remarkable officially-sponsored press conference, the great human rights activist, Andrei Sakharov, condemned the archaic ban on the Ukrainian Catholic Church, adding that it not only violated the rights of many Ukrainian believers but also damaged the international prestige of the U.S.S.R.

Clearly, the campaign of the Ukrainian Catholics for legalization and the response that it has found at such a sensitive time, both inside and outside the U.S.S.R., has been a source of considerable embarrassment and irritation for both the Moscow Patriarchate and the Kremlin rulers. To illustrate this, I should like to bring to the attention of honourable senators that earlier this year a U.S.A. congressional resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives passed unanimously a special resolution asking for the legalization of the Ukrainian Catholic Church and the Ukrainian Orthodox Church. This was condemned by the Soviet government, especially by ten deputies of the Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, in a confidential statement to Vice-President George Bush and House Speaker Jim Wright.

Pope John Paul II was clearly disappointed in not being invited to the millennium celebrations in the Soviet Union. However, he presided over the Vatican ceremonies held in St. Peter's Square last month, concelebrating with Ukrainian bishops and priests from around the world, attended by 75,000 pilgrims. In his message delivered in flawless Ukrainian, speaking on behalf of 3 million exiles and more than 5 million Ukrainian Catholics in the Soviet Union who are forced to worship in secret, the Pope appealed to the Kremlin ruler to recognize the rights of the Ukrainian Catholics and expressed the hope of reconciliation between the Catholic and Orthodox Churches.

Activist Stefan Chmara, a member of the Committee for the Defence of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, told a London correspondent in an interview that the Russian Orthodox Church "was a terribly chauvinistic organization, hostile to the Ukrainian people as a whole." He added that the Ukrainian problem was part of the unresolved nationality question in the U.S.S.R. He also said, "All other Catholics are recognized, but for political reasons, they won't recognize us. The Ukrainian Catholic Church is a national church. Without it, you can't talk about Ukrainian culture or spirituality."

At the millennium celebrations in Moscow last month, the Anglican Church was represented by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The Polish Catholic hierarchy sent Jozef Cardinal Glemp. The Vatican sent a powerful delegation, with a personal message from the Pope. The delegation, led by Secretary of State Agostino Cardinal Casaroli and accompanied by Johannes Cardinal Willebrands, met General-Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, as well as President Andrei Gromyko and Foreign Minister Edward Shevardnadze. Although the initial response to the Pope's message was courteous and general, concrete action is being impatiently awaited by the Church and its believers.

Dr. Bohdan Bociurkiw, professor of Political Science at Carleton University in Ottawa, stated recently upon his return from Europe that the Ukrainian Catholic Church in the U.S.S.R. is still definitely banned, and, despite thousands of signatures collected by the underground clergy and believers, not a single Ukrainian Catholic community has been registered by the Communist authorities to operate legally. Bishops and clergy are still being harassed by police and fined 50 roubles for each mass celebrated. Furthermore, the authorities have been installing Russian Orthodox clergymen in hitherto vacant churches that had been used by Ukrainian Catholics.

Also, it is disappointing that the recent meeting in Helsinki between the representatives of the Vatican and the Moscow Orthodox Patriarchate has not achieved anything, except to set up a commission to study the problem of the Ukrainian Catholic Church in general.

Nevertheless, the new assertiveness of the Ukrainian Christians, the interest in the West in their situation and, of course, Gorbachev's proclamation of glasnost and democratization puts the onus on the Kremlin to review and change its policy towards the Ukrainian churches whether the Moscow Patriarchate approves or not. In the meantime, the millennium celebrations have demonstrated to the world that glasnost and democratization in the U.S.S.R. have still to be extended to issues of fundamental concern to many Ukrainians.

I should like to bring to the attention of honourable senators the first report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights of the House of Commons, entitled "Human Rights behind the Iron Curtain". The Standing Committee on Human Rights, which studied this problem last year and early this year, stated, among other things:

International human rights law imposes both domestic and international obligations on states.

Further in its report, it quoted from Principle VII of the Helsinki Final Act, to which Canada is a signatory. Principle VII enunciates the freedom of religion in the following terms:

The participating states will respect . . . the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all . . .

Within this framework the participating states will recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practise, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience.

It referred, as I did in my remarks earlier, to the persecution of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church, the Ukrainian Catholic Church and other religions in the U.S.S.R., including the plight of the Soviet Jews.

● (1600)

The report, I should also like to mention, refers to that proposed Moscow conference on humanitarian cooperation, which, in November 1986, was put forward by the Moscow delegation. It wants this meeting to be held in Moscow.

However, the report of the committee of the House of Commons states that:

The Government of Canada has not yet taken a position on the Moscow conference. Such a conference should only be supported and attended if Helsinki monitoring groups are given legal status and their members are released from prison. Such a conference should also only be approved as part of a concluding document satisfactory to all participants in the Helsinki follow-up process.

Honourable senators, this millennium is an important event in world history, especially in the history of christianity. I invite all honourable senators to join me in appealing to the rulers of the Kremlin, especially General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev, to legalize the Ukrainian Catholic Church, the Ukrainian Orthodox Church and the Ukrainian Autocephalous Orthodox Church, and also to stop its harassment and persecution of all religious denominations in the U.S.S.R. In this way we will help to bring about justice and peace. But to have justice and peace, nations must respect human dignity, human conscience, and religious freedom.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Honourable Gerald Ottenheimer, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, August 31, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

TWENTY-NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-264, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use), has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, August 30, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

TRANSPORT

REBUILDING OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEW BRUNSWICK—COMMENTS OF MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As the Leader of the Government in the Senate is aware, the Council of Maritime Premiers has agreed that the rebuilding of the Trans-Canada Highway in the Atlantic provinces, especially through New Brunswick, is of the utmost importance. They have supported the Premier of New Brunswick in his request for major assistance from the national government.

Honourable senators, this comes about because this government has accepted a policy of removing rail lines and railroad services from Newfoundland, from P.E.I., and from a great many parts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The end result is that almost all goods transported from the Atlantic provinces have to travel over the New Brunswick highways. I understand that it was the understanding of the Government of New Brunswick and the other governments in the Atlantic provinces that they were getting a favourable hearing in Ottawa.

Last week in Fredericton we had the pleasure of a visit from the Minister for International Trade. When he was asked a question regarding that subject matter, in his flippant way he said something to the effect that if he were in the Government of New Brunswick his hopes would not be high; in other words, the good reception that the Government of New Brunswick was seemingly having in Ottawa did not reflect government policy so far as the Minister for International Trade was concerned.

Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise the people of New Brunswick and Atlantic Canada whether the Minister for International Trade was speaking on behalf of the Government of Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have not seen the comments that the honourable senator has attributed to my colleague, Mr. Crosbie.

First, let me say that Senator Thériault's statement of government policy with regard to rail lines is quite inaccurate. Active rail lines are not abandoned; rail lines are abandoned after shippers have taken decisions to ship their goods by road rather than rail, leaving those rail lines certainly unprofitable and virtually inactive.

As far as the Trans-Canada Highway is concerned, I have had discussions on this matter with the Premier of New Brunswick and his colleagues on several occasions. They are doing some work on the proposal.

However, I must state, for the record, that New Brunswick is the only province in the country that now enjoys two federal-provincial agreements on road construction within the province. However, neither of those agreements relates to the Trans-Canada Highway.

I am aware that the Province of New Brunswick and its sister provinces in the maritimes make the point that priority should be given to improving or reconstructing large portions of the Trans-Canada Highway in the maritime region. We will have to consider that not as a matter of regional development but as a matter of national policy. It is only fair and candid to tell the honourable senator and the house that that will take some time. It is an expensive proposition that he is referring to, and he should not expect that we will have a deal this week or next.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I was hoping that the Leader of the Government in the Senate would state flatly that the Minister for International Trade was not speaking on behalf of the government when he made that flippant statement in Fredericton. Do I gather from the ending of his response that the next election campaign will not bring about the promise by the federal government to help New Brunswick build a Trans-Canada Highway?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I wonder whether the honourable senator can give me that assurance on behalf of his party. I am not in a position to give that assurance on behalf of my party.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I am not in that position either, but I can tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that I will be putting all the pressure I can on the leader of our party and on the party to make such a commitment.

• (1410)

UPGRADING OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NOVA SCOTIA— GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. We have all heard the response of the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to the Trans-Canada Highway in the province of New Brunswick. I would like to ask a question concerning an adjoining sector of that highway, the sector between the New Brunswick border and Truro, Nova Scotia. Has any commitment been made to the government of the province of Nova Scotia with regard to the upgrading or the doubling of that portion of the Trans-Canada Highway?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I seem to recall that an announcement was made some months ago by the Premier of Nova Scotia and, I believe, by the federal government, certainly in the context of the federal-provincial highways subagreement of that province, to the effect that the highway from Amherst to Truro would be twinned.

Senator Frith: Very good. You get two or three points for that one.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—LACK OF CANADIAN CONSULAR AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, may I ask the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he is aware of the tragic inadequacy of our consular and immigration services in Central America, and, if so, whether the government is in the course of doing something about it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have seen the same news reports as my honourable friend apparently has, and I undertake to ask for a report on this matter from my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Senator Stanbury: Honourable senators, it may be worth while to point out that the Costa Rican Embassy is the only Canadian embassy in Central America. That embassy has only three immigration officers, but it is expected to look after refugee claims for Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua and El Salvador. El Salvador alone produces 10,000 immigrant inquiries or applications per year, and, presently, Panamanians are lining up at the honorary consulate in Panama at the rate of about 500 per day. I gather that they are not being serviced at all. I draw those facts to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to a number of questions.

There was a question on July 13 by Senator Guay regarding Transport—Port of Churchill, Manitoba—Maintenance and Use of Facilities. On August 16 questions were asked by Senator Stanbury regarding the Environment—Deadline for Elimination of Lead in Gasoline; Senator Molgat regarding Transport—Shipment of Grain Through Port of Churchill, Manitoba; and Senator Olson regarding Agriculture—Dispersal of Breeding Herds in Drought-Stricken Areas—Tax Deferral on Livestock Sales.

On August 17 questions were asked by Senator Grafstein regarding Justice—Prosecution of Nazi War Criminals—Status; Senator Austin regarding Canada-United States Relations—Trade—U.S. Tariff on Canadian Shakes and Shingles—Government Action on Submission to International Trade Commission; and Senator McElman regarding Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Softwood Lumber Products—Grandfathering of Memorandum of Understanding.

If honourable senators wish to have any of these answers read, I shall be happy to do so; otherwise, I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

THE ENVIRONMENT

DEADLINE FOR ELIMINATION OF LEAD IN GASOLINE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 16 last by the Honourable Richard J. Stanbury, regarding the Environment—Deadline for Elimination of Lead in Gasoline.

(The answer follows:)

The Minister of the Environment's decision to virtually eliminate lead from gasoline by the end of 1992 was announced in the Canada Gazette on June 21, 1988.

The decision was based on:

—provision of sufficient time for 81 companies to find environmentally safe additives that may be needed to replace lead and to upgrade refineries to meet the additional demand for unleaded gasoline;

—the recognition that some equipment such as farm machinery, marine engines and commercial vehicles may require the valve lubricating properties now provided by lead and to provide time to develop alternatives to supply these properties; and —the recognition that the quantity of lead released to the atmosphere from the combustion of gasoline is decreasing dramatically each year due to the increasing percentage sales of lead-free gasoline.

The Minister's decision was endorsed by the Royal Society of Canada Commission on Lead in the Environment with the provision that any new health data should bring about a review of this decision.

The Canadian Coalition for Lead-Free Gasoline recently provided the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of National Health and Welfare a brief which included information on a number of health studies concerning blood-lead levels in children.

The ministers responsible will be responding in the near future to the Coalition's brief and will indicate at that time if a reassessment of the date for elimination of lead from gasoline is necessary.

AGRICULTURE

DISPERSAL OF BREEDING HERDS IN DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS—TAX DEFERRAL ON LIVESTOCK SALES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 16 last by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding Agriculture—Dispersion of Breeding Herds in Drought-Stricken Areas—Tax Deferral on Livestock Sales.

(The answer follows:)

The Honourable Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance, on June 30, announced a tax deferral program for farmers who have to deplete their breeding herds of grazing livestock as a result of drought conditions.

At present, further consultations with groups directly involved are proceeding, with additional meetings planned in September.

When technical details required to implement this legislation are finally worked out, the Minister of Revenue will be in a position to introduce legislation.

JUSTICE

PROSECUTION OF NAZI WAR CRIMINALS—STATUS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 17 last by the Honourable Jerahmiel S. Grafstein, regarding Justice—Prosecution of Nazi War Criminals—Status.

(The answer follows:)

This government established the Deschênes Commission to examine the issue of the existence of war criminals in Canada. In response to the Commission's report, the Government indicated that it would put in place the necessary legislative framework to deal with war criminals in Canada. This took place within a few months after the tabling of the Deschênes report.

All files opened by the Commission and turned over to the government required further investigation and evidence gathering abroad. In following up on these files it is essential that evidence be gathered in accordance with Canadian standards of justice. This has necessitated that agreements be entered into with a number of countries.

To date, agreements with the U.S.S.R., Israel, the Netherlands, Poland, Yugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia have been concluded and copies tabled in Parliament.

In addition to the cases which are presently before the courts, investigations are underway and, as a result, it would be improper to comment further on these matters.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TRADE—U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES—GOVERNMENT ACTION ON SUBMISSION TO INTERNATIONAL TRADE COMMISSION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 17 last by the Honourable Jack Austin, regarding Canada-United States Relations—Trade—U.S. Tariff on Canadian Shakes and Shingles—Government Action on Submission to International Trade Commission.

(The answer follows:)

The President of the United States will decide by December 6 whether to terminate the five year program of tariffs originally imposed in June of 1986 on our exports of western red cedar shakes and shingles.

As part of the decision making process, the U.S. International Trade Commission will report on the effect a termination this December would have on the U.S. industry.

The Canadian industry is participating in the Commission's review which included a presentation at a public hearing on August 16.

The President's review of the five year program presents him with an opportunity to set things right and, of course, we will make representations to the U.S. Administration at appropriate stages in the decision making process.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS—GRANDFATHERING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 17 last by the Honourable Charles McElman, regarding Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement—Softwood Lumber Products—Grandfathering of Memorandum of Understanding.

(The answer follows:)

The softwood lumber Memorandum of Understanding signed in December 1986 resolved a bitter bilateral trade dispute and indeed resulted in the termination of a countervailing duty investigation which would have been very damaging to Canadian export interests. Its termination was not negotiable in the Free Trade Agreement (FTA). In fact, the export charge has already been eliminated for shipments of softwood lumber from B.C. and the four Atlantic provinces and significantly reduced for exports from Quebec. Over 70 per cent of softwood lumber exports to the U.S. are now exempt from the 15 per cent export charge.

The dispute settlement provisions of the FTA will provide Canada with protection against future trade remedy actions by the U.S.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—MAINTENANCE AND USE OF FACILITIES

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Guay on July 13, regarding Transport—Port of Churchill, Manitoba—Maintenance and Use of Facilities.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I would appreciate it if the deputy leader would read the answer.

Senator Doody: The Minister of Transport recently informed the Manitoba Minister of Highways and Transportation that he had authorized funding for the Canada Ports Corporation for two projects at the Port of Churchill. This allocation of funds in support of the Canada-Manitoba Transportation Subsidiary Agreement on Churchill is part of the federal government's continuing contribution to the Port of Churchill. Phase I of the Dust Control Project will proceed in 1988-89 to a maximum of $750,000 and $2,544,000 in 1989-90. The Ports Corporation has also been authorized to proceed with the conversion of the heat plant at the elevator to a maximum of $567,000 in 1988-89.

Cargo diversification at the Port of Churchill is limited. Most studies indicate that potential for new traffic exists in bulk general cargo shipments, such as lumber, or bulk commodities, such as ore, rather than general break-bulk cargo and containers.

Officials of Ports Canada are discussing with Manitoba Forest Products of Le Pas (Manfor), a provincial corporation, the possibility of shipping bulk lumber through the port. Ports Canada is also actively pursuing other potential customers.

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Yesterday I asked if the Leader of the Government would make representations to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to ask him to cooperate in order to get some grain moving through Churchill. Will the Leader of the Government follow up on that not only on behalf of those in Churchill, Manitoba, but on behalf of western grain farmers who will also benefit?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, there is a delayed answer to a question raised by Senator Molgat, regarding Transport—Shipment of Grain Through Port of Churchill, Manitoba. Perhaps Senator Guay would have me read that also, because I think it is more in line with the question raised yesterday.

The answer is that in a year of extremely tight grain supplies the Canadian Wheat Board will make every attempt to meet the needs of their customers. Barley supplies, in particular, are tight and that commodity is primarily moved out of Churchill.

The Canadian Wheat Board will continue to monitor the crop condition. When the Wheat Board is in a position to know overall grain production, the board will discuss the requirements of its customers and at which port they would like to ship through.

In the event that crop conditions improve and should deliveries from farmers increase, all efforts will be made to increase the railcar unload targets. The federal government stays out of the day-to-day operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Board has the mandate to act in the best interests of the Canadian farmer.

Unloads at all ports are heavily dependent on crop conditions and farmer deliveries.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, perhaps I could follow up on that, since Senator Molgat is not here.

The minister representing the Canadian Wheat Board has some doubts as to whether any grain will be shipped through Churchill. I believe this involves a cabinet decision; therefore, representations on our behalf by the Leader of the Government in the Senate might be of great help in convincing them that this would really aid westerners, particularly in Manitoba and the Port of Churchill. Honourable senators, the reason I continue to ask for representations to be made to the minister is so that he will give even more consideration than he already has given to the use of the Port of Churchill.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall convey the honourable senator's representations to my colleague.

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ethel Cochrane moved the second reading of Bill C-123, to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).

She said: Honourable senators, I rise today to address Bill C-123, an act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).

As honourable senators are aware, the federal government has a special relationship with Canada's native peoples. This relationship and the accompanying responsibilities are defined in the Indian Act, in treaties and in policies and programs developed since the time of Confederation.

One of the government's basic responsibilities is to administer accounts for Indian minors. Bill C-123 amends section 52 of the Indian Act, which governs this relationship providing important flexibility to the minister and the bands themselves. Today the Government of Canada, through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, maintains approximately 19,000 accounts belonging to Indian minors. These accounts have a combined value of more than $145 million and are held in the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Presently, moneys from individual accounts are released to a minor when he or she reaches the age of majority, which is 18. The Indian Act provides that the minister may authorize payments to minors before they reach the age of majority.

Since 1981 it has been the policy of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, upon receipt of a band council resolution requesting a per capita distribution, to pay up to $3,000 annually from a minor's distribution directly to the parents or guardians of all such minors in the band. The remainder of the money, if any, is paid into the minor's individual account maintained by the department. The Auditor General of Canada, in his 1986 report, seriously questioned the propriety of the government's policy of distributing per capita payments to minors without the adherence to standards set by provincial trust laws.

Honourable senators, Bill C-123 amends the Indian Act to provide a firm legal basis for the distribution of minors' accounts. In doing so, it also gives band councils the opportunity to be involved more directly in decisions regarding per capita distributions to minors. This is fully in keeping with the federal government's commitment to provide Indians with greater control over their lives and the lives of their children.

Specifically, Bill C-123 includes three important amendments to the sections of the Indian Act that deal with minors' accounts. First, the legislation before us today gives the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development express discretionary authority to make payments from a minor's account to a parent, or a person who is responsible for the care and custody of a minor, for the maintenance, advancement or other benefit of that minor.

Second, Bill C-123 amends the Indian Act to provide band councils with the authority to direct the minister to pay all or part of per capita distributions owed to an Indian minor to a parent, or to a person responsible for the care and custody of the child, or to the band council to which the minor belongs, for the minor's maintenance, advancement or other benefit. Under this amendment, the band council assumes the responsibility for ensuring that the distributions are made properly.

Before this bill went to committee for review, honourable senators, it stipulated that these distributions, authorized by band councils on behalf of minors, could not total more than $3,000 per year, as has been the practice of the department. However, at the committee stage, representatives of affected bands presented arguments that resulted in amendments to the legislation.

Bill C-123 now provides that the minister may authorize per capita distribution payments of up to $3,000 per year, or "such other amount as may be fixed by order of the Governor in Council". This provides important flexibility regarding the amounts that can be distributed in any given year and enables band councils to request that additional moneys be paid out when the need arises.

Honourable senators, the third amendment will enable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to pay the moneys owed to a minor, at the age of majority, in a series of payments over a period of not more than three years. A request to make payments in this way must be made in writing to the minister by a parent, or by a person responsible for the care and custody of the minor, or by the council of the band to which the minor belongs. This provision meets the concern of many Indian parents that their children, upon reaching the age of majority, do not have the expertise necessary to manage those sums of money.

Honourable senators, these amendments to the Indian Act are essential to the wellbeing of Indian minors. If the federal government's authority to make per capita distribution payments to minors is not clarified, the government may be forced to cease these payments. The standard of living for the children receiving these payments would definitely be affected.

Bill C-123 also provides for an unrelated, but significant, amendment to the Indian Act. Subsections 48(1) and 48(2) of the Indian Act will be amended to increase a surviving spouse's preferential share in the estate of an intestate. Under Bill C-123, this share will increase from $2,000 to $75,000, "or such other amount as may be fixed by order of the Governor in Council". Again, this provides important flexibility in determining the share of an estate that will go to the surviving spouse, and it brings the Indian Act in line with the most progressive provincial legislation in this area.

Honourable senators, the amendments contained in Bill C-123 were developed following extensive consultation with the bands that will be most affected by the changes. They reflect a consensus of opinion on how to resolve the difficult issues posed by the federal government's fiduciary obligations to Indians.

Support of this legislation, honourable senators, will indeed benefit the Indian peoples.

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have prepared myself to speak on Bill C-150 today, but not on Bill C-123. Therefore, I ask that the debate be adjourned in my name.

On motion of Senator Watt, debate adjourned.

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Mira Spivak moved the second reading of Bill C-150, to amend the Indian Act (death rules).

She said: Honourable senators, the objectives of Bill C-150 are straightforward. About three years ago the government brought forward a series of important amendments to the Indian Act. Those amendments, enshrined in Bill C-31, had the effect of bringing justice to many of Canada's Indian people—particularly women—who had been denied the right of status under previous legislation.

Under previous legislation, women who married non-Indians lost their status as band members and as status Indians, whereas men, who were themselves status Indians, not only did not lose their status under the Indian Act but, in fact, conferred status on the women they married. I am sure you will agree that that was a most unfortunate situation.

Bill C-31 removed discrimination from the provisions of the Indian Act; restored status and membership rights to many; and generally increased Indians' control over their own affairs.

It was as well a balancing act—restoring the rights of women, but also giving bands the right to determine band membership codes.

The changes were aimed at bringing the provisions of the Indian Act into conformity with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The amendments then ensured that men and women would be treated equally and that children would be treated fairly; they also prevented anyone from gaining or losing status through marriage. These changes permitted restoration of status to those who had lost it through discrimination or enfranchisement, and they ensured that direct descendants of such persons would also have registration entitlement.

● (1430)

Bill C-31 has prompted an unexpectedly high response from native Canadians all across the country seeking reinstatement of their status. To date more than 45,000 applications have been registered and some 20,000 more are being processed. I am told that applicants are still flowing in at a substantial rate every day. Projections show that perhaps as many as 75,000 people will receive status, as a result of Bill C-31, through this act. So justice is being done to thousands. The government as well has provided, and will continue to provide, additional funding to Indian bands as a consequence of an increase in membership. That is by way of background to this bill.

Honourable senators, Bill C-150 will add further amendments to the Indian Act to correct a technical flaw in the original amendments. Bill C-150 will eliminate from the present act a number of provisions that would otherwise unfairly deprive certain persons of their entitlement to registration as Indians. Under the present provisions, certain individuals are not eligible for reinstatement simply as a result of the date of death of their parents or grandparents. This particularly affects people whose claim to status stems from the original entitlement of their grandparents and whose parents died prior to April 17, 1985, the effective date of the legislation.

Some hundreds of individuals may be adversely affected by this, and it was clearly not the intention of the government that this be so. In fact, it is estimated that between 2,000 and 4,000 individuals may be affected. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is anxious that this matter be resolved as quickly as possible so that no individual will be denied his or her rightful status simply because of a technical error in legislative drafting, or, I should say, because of an unintended consequence as a result of that drafting.

Major native groups have been consulted on this matter and are unanimous in their support of its passage. Native groups, I might add parenthetically, have also stated that they desire to have some consultation in order to explore methods of communication for informing the Indian people about this issue—that is, the death rule amendment and its impact. I hope that will also be favourably considered by the government.

The standing committee concerned with Indian affairs has given its support to this bill, and these amendments have passed rapidly through the House of Commons with all-party support. I am sure that all senators will wish to join with me in supporting this measure, ensuring its speedy passage and ensuring that no individuals are denied justice or their rightful status.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I have had only a short period of time to look into this matter, because Senator Len Marchand, who was supposed to be handling this particular file, happens to be out of the country at this time and I am speaking on his behalf.

As we are all aware, the need for this amendment to the Indian Act concerning the death rules stems from problems with earlier legislation and the need to correct discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act. This earlier legislation, commonly referred to as Bill C-31, was supposed to remove barriers which unjustly denied people their right to status under the Indian Act and their right to band membership.

Unfortunately, certain legal interpretations of the deeming provisions of Bill C-31 caused the legislation to have the opposite effect in some cases; thus there is the need for a further amendment to the Indian Act.

I should also point out that the three major aboriginal groups affected by this problem have been consulted and are satisfied with the wording of this amendment. Therefore, we are in agreement with the bill and believe it should be adopted without further delay.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): How's that for dilly-dallying, Senator Kelly? Five minutes for second reading! We will be watching for your reference to that tomorrow in your speech.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Spivak, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

Hon. Senator Cottreau, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gerald Ottenheimer moved the second reading of Bill C-148, to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I have the pleasure of presenting a bill to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development.

This bill embodies the principles first set out by the Prime Minister and reinforced by the Deputy Prime Minister when he announced the establishment of the centre in a speech to the Public Policy Forum on April 14 in Toronto. Its purpose is to enhance the management capabilities of the public sector.

The six objectives of the centre, as described in the bill, address the need for our senior managers to equip themselves with new knowledge, skills and managerial techniques consistent with the requirements of a rapidly changing government environment.

We want our public service managers to give us the best programs and services in the world, and at the same time introduce employee cutbacks. That is one of the difficult challenges they face. The government is aware of this and has adopted a set of new measures to help them. In our 1986 Budget, we officially made a commitment, through the Treasury Board program Increased Authority and Accountability for Ministers and Departments, to give ministers and departmental managers greater flexibility and more direct responsibility for managing the resources at their disposal.

[English]

We realize, however, that delegation and deregulation within governments are not enough. If the government is to delegate more responsibility and authority to managers, it must also ensure that they have the knowledge, skills and experience to use the authority to their best advantage. This requires a long-term commitment and investment in the training of our senior public servants and those with the potential to so become.

As Canadians, we are proud of the quality and traditions of our public service. I believe that in establishing this centre we are building on existing strengths and ensuring that the service will continue to function and prosper in a professional and appropriate way in the future. As I am sure honourable senators will agree, all governments and the Canadian public will be better served by a public service whose dedication, sensitivity and professional competence are deemed to be second to none.

The objectives of the centre will be accomplished through offering to senior managers in the public service management training programs, courses and seminars. It is supposed to be an arm's length institution. The principal will be responsible for managing the centre and its course design and curriculum, conducting research into management issues, and publishing reports and studies pertinent to management in the public sector.

This bill is designed to ensure that the Canadian Centre for Management Development will have substantial independence in managing its academic affairs, and will consult widely with a broad range of groups, in addition to receiving guidance from its advisory council. The advisory council itself will be made up of outstanding Canadians from the public service, the private sector and the academic community.

The Canadian Centre for Management Development will be a truly national centre, with participants from across Canada. The centre will be located in the historic LaSalle Academy on Sussex Drive in the national capital region. In addition, the centre will continue to offer courses in Touraine, Quebec, and will offer programs and courses through existing federal facilities in western and Atlantic Canada.

Some of the most important goals of the centre are set out in this bill and can be summarized as follows: To encourage pride and excellence in the management of the public service; to foster a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the public service; to provide the hard skills and knowledge to respond to change and manage government programs and services efficiently and effectively; to encourage the attraction of persons of high caliber to the public service, and to support their growth and development; and to encourage a greater awareness in Canada of issues related to public sector management and the process of governance, and to involve a broad range of individuals and institutions in the centre's pursuit of excellence in public administration.

[Translation]

I am confident that this bill addresses the need for changes in the way our senior public servants are prepared for management roles. I am also confident that all senators can support this bill which reflects a major commitment to continuing a tradition of highly qualified professionalism in the public service.

This piece of legislation marks a turning point in the history of the Public Service of Canada and is an expression of a commitment to the excellence of the continuing contribution of the Public Service to good government in this country.

[English]

I should like to add a personal reminiscence. I believe we are all aware that public servants—whether federal orders of government or provincial orders of government—are frequently the object of a kind of humour that is not always flattering toward them. Many people seem to have the impression that some positions in the public service are absolute sinecures, and that all one has to do is provide the minimum of service and then tenure is assured and everything else is protected.

My personal experience has been quite limited with the federal public service. However, during the past number of months that I have been here I have found a very high quality of interest and dedication in the contacts I have personally had with public servants. I am sure others, whether in federal or provincial elected office, would come to the same conclusion. It is an all-Canadian service, or a series of Canadian services, and I am inclined to think that the cadre of public servants in the various provinces—and I can speak for only one directly, although I have had contact with those in other provinces as well—also serve well, and capably, professionally, and impartially, their political masters and the citizenry in what are sometimes, I am sure, very difficult circumstances.

I am pleased to move second reading of this bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to congratulate Senator Ottenheimer particularly for tugging at our heartstrings, as he did when he described civil servants as the butts of cruel, unkind jokes. He did tug at our heartstrings, because, as he probably knows, certain equally callous persons have been known to make the same allegations about senators.

With that congratulation, I move the adjournment of the debate in the name of Senator Bosa.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Bosa, debate adjourned.

Hon. Senator Ottenheimer, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Finlay MacDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-153, to amend the National Capital Act.

[Senator Ottenheimer,]

He said: Honourable senators, when this bill was being explained to me by officials of the National Capital Commission, it struck me with some force just how little I knew not only of Ottawa but of the area we call the national capital region. In my case my excuse is probably less than others because I live in Ottawa most of the time, whereas many other honourable senators have to spend weekends in their cities, and possibly do not have an opportunity to get to know Ottawa and its environs.

Under these circumstances, if you have no association with a city or its commerce or its universities—and I do not think too many members of this chamber are interested in home and school associations—there is a tendency to take it for granted as a place where you work and then get away from as quickly as possible.

I found that the background of the National Capital Commission was quite fascinating. In speaking to Bill C-153, I should like to share this background with you. Since the end of the 19th century those responsible for the development of the Canadian capital have responded to the challenge of creating a capital that not only reflects a national purpose but also portrays the values and aspirations that Canadians are supposed to hold in common. Familiar names abound when we think of the chairmen of the National Capital Commission over the years: Friends like Gallant, Drury, Juneau, Fullerton, who gave us the longest skating rink, and, of course, the irrepressible Jean Pigott, present chairman, whom we all know.

An Hon. Senator: And love.

Senator MacDonald: In 1867 Ottawa was a prosperous, but very unattractive, lumber town.

Senator Frith: What was that date again?

Senator MacDonald: It was 1867.

Senator Doody: Shortly after you were appointed!

Senator MacDonald: Although it had sprung up with no thought to its planning or design, to the surprise of many it became the capital of the new Canadian Confederation. However, it was not until 1899 that the federal government created the Ottawa Improvement Commission to help build and enhance a capital worthy of the Canadian people.

Many changes have occurred since that time. The old OIC—that is to say, the Ottawa Improvement Commission—grew to be the Federal District Commission, responsible not only for planning and development but also for the landscaping and maintenance of most federal grounds in the capital area.

The face of the capital has changed dramatically over the years. The changes really began in 1949, when a master plan for the capital, commonly referred to as the Gréber Plan, was completed. By 1951 the plan had been tabled in the House of Commons and the Canadian government was able to initiate many of the large-scale works recommended by the plan. Some of these works we will all remember: the relocation of the railway lines from the city core; office decentralization—and I am referring to places such as Tunney's Pasture, the creation of a greenbelt, and the upkeep of existing parks, along with the acquisition of new ones.

● (1450)

In 1956 a joint parliamentary committee endorsed continuing implementation of the Gréber Plan, thus resulting in the adoption of the National Capital Act in 1958. The Federal District Commission was renamed the National Capital Commission and was granted increased powers to carry out the remainder of the major Gréber Plan proposals.

The National Capital Act empowered the NCC to acquire and improve property owned by the federal government and to carry out the planning of the national capital region. The NCC was made responsible for coordinating the development of buildings on all federal lands in the region.

The 1969 Constitutional Conference of First Ministers endorsed Gréber's vision of a unified capital extending across the Ottawa River. Since that time a federal administrative core in Hull, a new home for the National Gallery and the Canadian Museum of Civilization have been realized. Soon Confederation Boulevard, a name unknown to me until yesterday—I had heard the name, but did not know what it meant—will encircle the capital as the symbolic heart of Canada.

During the last ten years the NCC has responded to the need and desire of Canadians for strong nation-building symbols. It has, in part, accomplished this through the presentation of various public activities and events of national interest in the capital.

The NCC has had to de-emphasize its involvement in projects of a local urban nature, which has caused some controversy, and re-examine its mandate and structure. It has developed a new and comprehensive two-part plan for Canada's capital, including a federal land-use plan for the continued enhancement and evolution of the capital's physical features. More importantly, it includes a new vision for the capital, emphasizing its symbolic significance.

Fifteen federal departments and agencies were consulted on these proposed revisions to the NCC's mandate. It is amazing how many departments, agencies of government and crown corporations have had their hands in the development of the capital. Coordination was required to bring all this together so that there would be no overlapping or unnecessary expense. The departments and organizations so consulted gave unequivocal support to this whole new concept of the vision of the NCC's need to assume a strong leadership role, particularly in coordination.

In 1986 the federal government announced that it had agreed to a revitalized role for the NCC. This is the raison d'être of these amendments. It meant a shift in emphasis from "building" the capital to "programming" the capital. The NCC would now look towards making the nation's capital a meeting place; communicating the capital to Canadians; and safeguarding and preserving the capital for future generations.

The Speech from the Throne opening the Second Session of the Thirty-Third Parliament, which was in September of 1986, proposed legislation to amend the National Capital Act in accordance with the enhanced mandate of the NCC. These are the amendments that are before us today.

Federal departments and agencies have a material impact on the capital. All federal entities should be part of the coordinated effort required to achieve this vision. Therefore, clause 1 of the bill clarifies the definition of "department" to include crown corporations and all other entities.

Someone suggested that if the Chateau Laurier were still owned by the CNR, a crown corporation, the manager or the directors of the CNR could paint it black or put polka dots on it without any reference at all to the NCC and regardless of the effect it might have on the new vision. They cannot do that now, Senator Sinclair, because it is no longer in the hands of the CNR.

The National Capital Act presently requires that the head office of the NCC be located in the city of Ottawa. This is significant.

Senator Frith: Why were the polka dots possible for the CNR, but not for anyone else?

Senator Sinclair: The Canadian cities are full of rip-offs!

Senator Frith: I am receiving answers from all over the place!

Senator MacDonald: Yes, and I suppose—

Senator Doody: There are no two alike!

Senator Frith: There are a lot of polka dot experts here!

Senator MacDonald: I suppose the CPR probably would have better taste than to paint it with polka dots, stripes, or whatever.

Senator Frith: Does this act eliminate polka dot painting?

Senator MacDonald: Yes. It eliminates the possibility of the Chateau being painted with polka dots.

Senator Frith: No matter who owns it?

Senator MacDonald: Yes; or if it had been under previous ownership.

Let me remind you that the present act requires that the head office be in Ottawa. Further, it requires that three of the commission's meetings be held in Ottawa on an annual basis.

It is interesting at this point to pause in the process—

Senator Frith: What is the difference between "annually" and "on an annual basis"?

Senator MacDonald: There is no difference.

Senator Frith: Good.

Senator MacDonald: These requirements are inconsistent with the remainder of the act, which describes the NCC's powers and responsibilities, and the sphere of activities applicable to the national capital region. This requirement is also inconsistent with the majority of federal legislation, which normally refers to the national capital region.

Thus, under clause 2 of the bill to amend, it is recommended that the words "City of Ottawa" be replaced with "National Capital Region".

When we talk about this on this side we are talking about Ottawa, Nepean and Gloucester, and on the other side, Hull, Gatineau, Aylmer and 21 other municipalities.

In light of the NCC's enhanced mandate, the third clause of the amendment expands the objectives and purposes of the commission's own involvement in public activities and events. It outlines the NCC's role as coordinator of other federal departments and public activities in the national capital region.

You may have noticed that a number of these things have actually been going on. These amendments are intended to make them legitimate.

This amendment will eliminate the duplication of spending and manpower while increasing the efficiency of programming of public events, creating a more positive image to visiting Canadians.

The fourth clause strengthens the NCC's role in safeguarding and preserving the capital for future generations. It closes loopholes in the area of the NCC's traditional role as planner of the capital by requiring that land-use changes, demolitions and land sales in the capital region be reviewed and approved by the NCC before such activities take place. However, the Governor in Council retains a veto.

The two final clauses update administration practices, increasing the NCC's efficiency in operations. They are housekeeping amendments.

Clause 5 of the bill provides the NCC with authority for the granting of easements of up to 49 years without Governor in Council approval.

Apparently at the present time, under the old act, it takes months to make simple easements of hydro lines, and so on. From time to time, local government agencies seek permission to enter NCC property for the purpose of installing overhead utilities and community infrastructure. Provision for rapid response to these requests will greatly improve relations with other levels of government.

Finally, clause 6 of the bill proposes the removal of the legislative application of government contract regulations to the NCC. It would make it possible for the commission to operate more efficiently in markets, if it were no longer regulated by government contract regulations.

Senator Frith: What does that mean?

● (1500)

Senator MacDonald: At the present time the commission is subject to a section of the Financial Administration Act which it considers unnecessarily burdensome and from which it is asking relief.

Senator Frith: But you do not know how?

Senator MacDonald: No, I do not know.

Senator Frith: We can get that information in committee.

Senator MacDonald: Relieving the commission from subsection 34(1) of the Financial Administration Act would be consistent with the contracting and tendering framework applicable to other crown corporations.

Senator Frith: By tender then.

Senator MacDonald: The dimensions of the expanded NCC mandate require modification to its legislative authority, especially the commission's involvement in public activities and its role as a coordinator. We think that Bill C-153 is a positive and desirable move on the part of the government, and I am pleased to recommend its passage by this house.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Would the honourable senator allow a question?

Senator MacDonald: Yes.

Senator Guay: The honourable senator is to be congratulated on his study, particularly the historical background he has presented with regard to the National Capital Commission. Having listened to his remarks, I have no doubt that he is quite an authority. Does the honourable senator know whether the National Capital Commission has authority pertaining to the grounds surrounding the Senate and the House of Commons? I think the honourable senator is the person to answer my question, in view of the study he has made. If so, why does it have the authority over the grounds surrounding our buildings?

Senator MacDonald: The honourable senator will note that my authority and knowledge are only 24 hours old. However, I remember, as perhaps do other senators, listening to a presentation by the chairman of the NCC, Mrs. Pigott, at a committee hearing. The same subject was raised at that time. As I recall, some senators at that time wanted to employ the services of a specialist or a planner to determine exactly how the NCC's authority would impinge upon operations affecting the grounds surrounding Parliament, and particularly the Senate.

Senator Guay: I gather that a determination has not been made on that as yet. Is that so?

Senator MacDonald: That is my understanding.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we support the principle of this bill. I agree with Senator MacDonald that the changes that have been made in Ottawa and in the national capital region have been quite dramatic. It has taken some time to effect these changes, because the job of the NCC is a difficult one. As Senator MacDonald pointed out, it has to deal with the natural demographic tensions that arise between municipalities, of which there are many, and the NCC. That is a problem that will never be solved. In fact, it defines the problem the NCC has in reconciling the competing claims of these many municipalities with its objective to establish an attractive and efficient national capital region.

Senator Guay: Until they are amalgamated!

Senator Frith: Amalgamation does not remove tensions completely either, as we have found in Toronto and in other big cities. So, as I say, the reconciliation of local and larger regional issues is the job of the National Capital Commission.

I first began coming to Ottawa many years ago in my teens. I came from Toronto and Montreal to visit relatives. Both my mother and father were born in Ottawa. My mother was raised partly here and partly in Perth. I can remember that in those days Ottawa as a city did not compare very favourably to Toronto as a city, and Toronto was not any great shakes in those days either.

Senator Doody: It still isn't!

Senator Frith: The improvements the National Capital Commission has made to Ottawa, to the national capital region, and to life in Ottawa are certainly to be encouraged. If the commission is coming to the legislators and asking for help to solve some of the problems it faces and will have to solve in the future, I think we should generally support it and help where possible.

It has been about two years since this bill first came on the order paper. We congratulate the government for bringing it forward.

I should also like to join Senator MacDonald in congratulating the creativity of the many distinguished chairmen of this commission. Creativity has been the mark of every one of the chairmanships and administrations. Of course, creativity is not enough; the commission must have significant administrative abilities, and it has distinguished itself in that area as well.

Some questions came to mind as I listened to Senator MacDonald. I think that, while we should approve the bill in principle, we should take a careful look at the powers the commission is asking for, and we can do that successfully in committee. I would like to be sure that any departures from, or additions to, the commission's present powers are not so radical as, perhaps, to vest it with more authority than it ought to have and put it in a position of holding arbitrary authority, which, I am sure, would be undesirable and would be opposed by the other municipalities and councils that have their responsibilities in this area as well.

Honourable senators, we support the principle of the bill. Unless someone else wishes to adjourn the debate, I suggest that it receive second reading immediately and that it be referred to committee. It is difficult to know which committee we should send the bill to, but, since it involves financing, perhaps we can resort to that subsection of the rules dealing with committee mandates that says that if we cannot figure out where any bill or other matter should go we can pick whichever committee we think is appropriate. I think the National Finance Committee is as appropriate, or perhaps as inappropriate, as any other committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Macdonald, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Jean Bazin moved the second reading of Bill C-139, to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to support Bill C-139, which completes the process required to reform the individual and corporate income tax system.

• (1510)

[English]

Work on tax reform began in earnest about two years ago. A major step was the release of the white paper on tax reform in June of 1987. The review of the white paper and the Senate report of last fall were a further major step in the process. These consultations resulted in some important improvements and refinements to the original measures which were subsequently announced last December. Further refinements were incorporated in the bill now under review.

[Translation]

Tax reform is the result of an interactive process during which the Minister of Finance and his officials consulted Canadian taxpayers at length. Parliamentary committees were very closely involved in this crucial stage.

The fundamental objectives of tax reform were set forth in the white paper. These objectives have always been in view as the various provisions were developed and improved.

Let me restate these objectives.

The tax system must be made fairer; it must encourage competitiveness, growth and job creation; it must be internally consistent and compatible with other federal programs; it must be a more reliable and balanced source of revenue for the funding of essential public services.

These objectives have been achieved by broadening the tax base for individuals and corporations, by lowering the rates and by converting personal exemptions and some deductions into tax credits.

[English]

The results of tax reform illustrate how the objectives have been achieved. By shifting more of the tax burden from individuals to corporations and by lowering rates and removing preferences, the reforms make the personal income tax system fair and more progressive.

Net personal income tax revenues to the federal government will be reduced by about $12 billion over the next five years. Income taxes will be reduced from 9.7 million households—over 85 per cent of all households—by an average of $490. Approximately 850,000 lower income Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero or receive refundable credits in 1988. Income taxes will be cut for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households with at least one person aged 65 and over. About 250,000 elderly Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero.

Taxes paid by persons with similar incomes and in similar circumstances will vary less after tax reform with the elimination or reduction of tax preferences, such as MURBs, film incentives and the lifetime capital gains exemption.

Most taxpayers whose income consists primarily of salary or wages, family allowance or standard pension and retirement revenue will enjoy tax reductions.

Because of the base broadening measures through the removal of tax preferences and the conversion of exemptions and deductions to credits, the progressivity of the system is increased.

While taxpayers with incomes less than $15,000 represent 46.7 per cent of total taxpayers, their share of federal tax payable will be lowered from 1.6 per cent to 1.1 per cent. On the other hand, federal tax payable by taxpayers with incomes greater than $50,000, who represent only 6.3 per cent of total taxpayers, will increase from 34.9 per cent to 36.4 per cent.

Taxpayers experiencing tax increases will include those claiming large special tax preferences or credits and those with substantial investment income or self-employment earnings subject to the new, fairer expense-deduction rules.

This summarizes the situation on the personal side.

On the corporate side, corporations will pay more tax. The broadening of the corporate tax base will more than offset the lowering of tax rates. Corporate taxes will increase by 10 per cent, or about $5.5 billion, over the next five years.

Many more large profitable corporations will pay tax. With the reduction in tax preferences, the number of profitable corporations not paying tax will be reduced by more than 50 per cent.

Variations in tax paid by different sectors will be reduced. Prior to tax reform average corporate tax rates across industrial sectors ranged from 14.5 per cent to 24.5 per cent of income on financial statements. Reform has cut this to a range of 15.5 per cent to 22.6 per cent.

Tax reform will reduce the rate of tax on the return from new investment, strengthening the incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. The tax system will be less intrusive. Business decisions will be governed more by market forces than by tax considerations.

The financial sector will be called upon to pay significantly more in taxes after reform.

The average tax burden for small firms is unchanged by tax reform while that for large corporations will rise. After tax reform the average tax rate for small businesses will be 13.5 per cent, a full 7.6 per cent advantage over large firms, which will have an average tax rate of 21.1 per cent. A major part of this relates to the small business deduction which has been maintained and gives a statutory tax for small firms that is less than half of that for large firms.

[Senator Bazin.]

Incentives to the mining industry, such as flow-through shares and the ability to write off all investment against the income of a new mine, will be retained. The average tax rate of the mining sector will remain one of the lowest of all sectors. The lower tax rate will more than offset the slightly broader tax base for the oil and gas industry.

Firms engaged in research and development in Canada will continue to benefit from one of the most favourable tax regimes for R&D in the industrialized world. Moreover, Revenue Canada's recent streamlining of the administration of the fully refundable R & D tax credit for small firms is a further useful step forward.

A new general anti-avoidance rule will help prevent abuse of tax avoidance arrangements, and new information requirements for investment income and tax shelters will help identify avoidance and evasion.

Honourable senators, tax reform can be controversial. Solomon himself would have been unable to design a system that would please everyone, especially with a system that provides many benefits to specific groups of taxpayers. Although the reform reflects the concerns of a large number of intervenors, taxpayers who will see their benefits restricted or eliminated altogether would have preferred this exercise to take a different route.

When all is said and done, we must admit that the bill provides for a fair system, based on the objectives mentioned earlier.

In concluding, I would like to point out that in addition to the tax reform, Bill C-139 also brings forward the income tax changes announced in the budget of February 10, 1988. The most significant are the increases in the child care expense deduction and the increase of the refundable child tax credit to implement the taxation aspect of the national strategy on child care. I should also mention the amendments to tighten up the rules used to determine whether corporations are associated with one another for the purposes of the Income Tax Act.

Bill C-139 also changes certain rules for the taxation of trusts and their beneficiaries, as announced on October 1, 1987. The bill contains measures to prevent tax avoidance through the abuse of the rules relating to capital dividend and dividend refunds, as announced on September 25, 1987, and contains consequential amendments to the Canada Pension Plan and the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Honourable senators, this bill is the result of demands for a fairer and more effective tax system. Private initiative, competition, economic growth and job creation, all of these will be promoted and strengthened by this bill. By lowering tax rates and broadening the tax base, the new tax system provides for sustained economic development.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I am sure that all of us listened raptly to the presentation made by the honourable senator, particularly where he dealt with statistical analysis. I am sure that all honourable senators will remember that when tax reform was introduced it involved matters other than those mentioned by the honourable senator.

One of the primary reasons we were given for the need for tax reform was to bring about greater simplicity in the tax system. Honourable senators, I am afraid they have failed abysmally. I only need to lift the book to show you how badly they have failed. I just happened to turn up one clause, which I will read to you to show how simple it really is. I will be reading from page 99 of Bill C-139. This deals with a provision under clause 36 of the amended act and refers to section 59 of the basic statute. Let me read to you what subclause 36(3) says about paragraph 59(3.3)(b) of the original act:

(3) All that portion of paragraph 59(3.3)(b) of the said Act preceding subparagraph (i) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(b) 33 1/3% of the aggregate of all amounts, each of which is the stated percentage of an amount in respect of a disposition of depreciable property of a prescribed class (other than a disposition of such property that had been used by the taxpayer to any person with whom the taxpayer was not dealing at arm's length) of the taxpayer after December 11, 1979 and in the year, the capital cost of which was added in computing the earned depletion base of the taxpayer or of a person with whom he was not dealing at arm's length or in computing the earned depletion base of a predecessor where the taxpayer is a successor corporation to the predecessor, that is equal to the lesser of"

Senator Doody: Sounds simple enough to me!

Senator Frith: Perhaps you should read the part it replaced. It might have been even worse.

Senator Sinclair: No. The part that it replaced was only two lines.

Senator Frith: Really? I am glad I asked. He did not put me up to that.

Senator Doody: Obviously rehearsed!

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, it is going to be very difficult to accept in principle that this bill accomplishes simplicity. However, does it also accomplish fairness? The honourable senator says it does; but before I go on to fairness I should make a comment on simplicity. He referred to the report made last December by our committee. That was a unanimous report by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce which was made after considerable work. One of its recommendations on simplicity was as follows:

We recommend that the Department of Finance begin consultations with interested groups to determine which parts of the Income Tax Act would lend themselves to structural simplification and to proceed with dispatch to amend the Act using the same guidelines as were used in simplifying the small business rules.

As far as I know, nothing was done on that.

Turning now to the question of fairness, there certainly have been some people who, as a result of the changes, were dropped from the tax roll. It is certain that some people will pay lower taxes. However, the great body of middle class people do not come within those wonderful areas. The great body of middle class people are going to find that their taxes are higher. Is that fair? According to the honourable senator, it was to improve and to implement fairness. It certainly seems to me that, in dealing with the issue of fairness, one has to look at those who comprise the large body of taxpayers. That is the middle class.

It is very easy to run off some at the bottom end, who pay very little taxes, or to say, "I have hit the top end and increased their taxes", because, in total, they pay very little taxes. It is that broad middle class that pays taxes, and this bill, honourable senators, does not treat them fairly. The reason, we are told, is that we are looking forward to dealing with the problem in the future.

Where does the lack of fairness arise? It arises from the progressivity provided by this statute. That is where the difficulty arises. When is that going to be addressed? As I recollect, the suggestion was that it would be addressed when we got to a universal sales tax situation. How close we are to that, I do not know. I wonder if the honourable senator can tell us when we may expect that? May we expect that this year? When should we expect it?

I should like to address one other issue. In light of the underground economy and the growth of that cancer, particularly in certain areas of the country, one would have thought that that would be addressed, because those who operate in the underground economy are taking advantage of all others who deal with the tax man on the honour system, which is the basis of our return.

● (1530)

Honourable senators, what do you do when you are met with a bill as complicated as this, when you have spent a significant amount of time dealing with the white paper, and when technical matters really do not lend themselves to resolution by committee? Technical drafting matters in complicated statutes such as this do not lend themselves to evidentiary situations; they lend themselves to face-to-face dealings between professionals and bureaucrats. It is for this reason that I have always felt that technical drafting changes should not be dealt with by committee, but should be dealt with by officials from the departments.

Whether all of the technical difficulties that were in the original provisions as set out in Bill C-139 have been met, I do not know. Perhaps the honourable senator can inform us whether they have.

Honourable senators, I do not think there is much use in looking again at such problems as are involved in changes from allowances to credits. We did look at that. I do not think we need to do that again, but I do think there are a number of provisions in the bill that we should look at in the light of the report of the committee which was made to the Senate December last.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Bazin, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, that this bill be read the second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, does that motion mean that Senator Bazin is moving that this bill be accepted in principle by the Senate?

Senator Roblin: Yes.

Senator Sinclair: Then, on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY ACT

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL TO AMEND (BILL C-210) PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, September 1st, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTIETH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-210, An Act to amend the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, August 18, 1988, examined the said subject-matter and recommends that the Bill be reinstated on the Orders of the Day for a second reading later this day and that the Order do stand in the name of the Honourable Senator Kelly.

We are satisfied that this Bill will clarify the exemption from personal liability of the unpaid directors of the Bridge Authority. From testimony received, it appears that the members of the Authority may already be adequately protected by section 20 of the Interpretation Act but the passage of Bill C-210 would provide an explicit and direct release from personal liability for them in the event of an act of terrorism or a major disaster beyond their control.

The Committee notes the broader implications of this measure. Bill C-210 is a Private Member's Bill relating only to the Blue Water Bridge Authority.

The Committee is aware of at least one other international bridge authority constituted by federal statute. With the passage of the Bill, the liability of the directors of the two authorities may be different. However, officials of both the Transport and Justice Departments are aware of the possibility of an anomaly being created and further action on this matter would be a government policy decision.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move the adoption of this report now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, before its adoption I should like to make a few remarks on this bill because it is rather unique. The Blue Water Bridge Authority is a rather strange hybrid. It was created by a federal statute 50 years ago, and it provides for four members to be appointed by Order in Council on our side and four members to be appointed or selected on the American side. During the past 50 years we have appointed four members and charged them with the responsibility for the Canadian operation, whereas their counterparts on the other side have been bureaucrats of the State of Michigan. So we have this odd combination of authority.

The bridge is self-funding. In fact, the statute that created the authority specifically states:

The Bridge Authority is not an agent of Her Majesty and no member, officer or employee of the Bridge Authority shall be deemed, as such, to be an officer, agent or employee of Her Majesty.

In other words, in a sense the act absolves the federal government of all responsibility for the actions and possible liabilities of the bridge authority members. It is for this reason that the Canadian members felt that they required more protection. They can obtain insurance, but they cannot obtain sufficient coverage in the event of a possible accident. The bridge is the most frequently travelled of our international bridges and carries the most dangerous goods between our two countries.

The committee learned that there is one other international bridge authority constituted in precisely the same manner. It is called the Fort-Falls Bridge Authority and is located at Fort Frances. Given the existence of this other bridge, the committee members felt that we were creating an odd situation with the passage of this bill, because it would grant more protection to Canadian members of the Blue Water Bridge Authority than is afforded to the members of the Fort-Falls Bridge Authority. This anomaly was brought to the attention of the members of the other place, and it was felt that the proper way to clarify liability would be either to change the Interpretation Act or to change the two acts themselves. However, that has not been done.

● (1410)

The other aspect of the bill that I think deserves a little attention is the fact that, because it is a private member's bill, neither the Department of Transport nor the Department of Justice will comment officially on the contents of the bill or the bill's legality, although they did tell us informally that they had no objection to it. Because of the rather strange factors involved here, we felt that the government, at a future time, might wish to revisit this subject with a view to changing the policy to conform in respect of all similar bodies.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I moved the motion referring this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs before the question was put for second reading adoption.

I believe the committee has solved the two problems I had. The first one was whether the bill went too far in that it was providing protection beyond that necessary to deal with the matter of terrorism. The committee's report satisfies me that it does not.

The other question was, if we were providing this protection for the members of the board of the Blue Water Bridge Authority, why were we not providing it for others? If it was good for them, why was it not good for others? The committee has also dealt with that problem.

I did not think of the International Bridge at Fort Frances when I raised the question, but I later realized that, having represented the Town of Fort Frances on one occasion at a trial, it probably was a good example.

The only additional comment I make is to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to note particularly the last paragraph of the report and bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Transport the fact that we are, in this case, solving a problem that should be solved by a law of general application, if the reason for dealing with the particular case has the merit it apparently has.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall bring the honourable senator's views on this matter to the attention of colleagues.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BILL TO AMEND (BILL C-210) REINSTATED ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, that being the case, I think this matter should be restored to the Orders of the Day. I see no reason for our referring this matter to committee again, after second reading. In fact, we would have no objection to the bill's receiving second and third reading today.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I thank honourable senators for their cooperation. I ask that the bill be reinstated on the Orders of the Day for second reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Bill to Amend (Bill C-210) reinstated on the Orders of the Day.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, with leave, I move second reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move third reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED, PRINTED AS APPENDIX AND ADOPTED

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the thirty-first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, respecting Bill C-61, to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 4253.)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Neiman: Honourable senators, I have only a few words to say with respect to Bill C-61. I think I am speaking for members of the committee when I say that we strongly support the goals of this bill. It has been a serious anomaly of our law that criminals could be allowed to keep and even grow wealthy on their ill-gotten gains. Possession of the proceeds of crime has long been an offence under the Criminal Code, but, until this bill, there were no means by which a court could order the property forfeit.

Despite our general support, there are some matters that concern us. These arose in the course of studying the bill. The first is the somewhat complex issue of dual criminality. Some honourable senators will be familiar with extradition law, where that principle is well established. Our extradition treaties always provide that Canada will not turn a person over to a foreign government unless the act which the person has committed, or is alleged to have committed, is a crime in both Canada and that foreign state. That requirement is missing from this bill. In fact, it permits forfeiture of a person's property for certain named offences, which, if the activity had taken place outside Canada, would have been legal, but which would have constituted an offence if it had occurred in Canada. In theory, therefore, the activity could have been legal in the jurisdiction where it took place. We have the examples of legal gambling in the State of Nevada and legal prostitution in parts of the Netherlands.

The same approach with respect to allowing this type of forfeiture has been used with the newly created offence of laundering the proceeds of crime. We seriously question whether these provisions will comply with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Do they not conflict with the principles of fundamental justice by providing for the possibility of condemning a person for conduct that is legal in the place in which it occurred? We were advised by the minister and his officials that a provision has existed in the Code for many years that also lacks this dual criminality requirement, but it has never been used in a case where the underlying activity has actually been legal.

Nevertheless, the committee does not believe that this provision will be acceptable under the Charter. Should it ever be used in this particular way, it seems certain that it will be constitutionally challenged. However, we are reasonably confident that the acts committed by the people targeted by the forfeiture provisions in this bill will, in virtually all cases, also be illegal in the foreign jurisdictions in which they take place. For this reason we did not feel that we should retard the passage of the bill by insisting on appropriate amendments.

Another provision of the bill raises concerns because of its vagueness. It is the one that permits forfeiture of proceeds for offences other than the one of which the person has been convicted. If the court is not satisfied that the property in question relates to the offence for which the person is convicted, it can nevertheless order the property be forfeit, if it is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the property is part of the proceeds of crime.

What we found lacking in this provision was any legislative direction as to how the court was to proceed to make this determination. We were left with a number of unanswered questions, and we have raised those in our report. For example, will an entirely new hearing be required to determine whether other crimes have taken place? How will it differ from a trial for those very offences? Will the court hand down its sentence for the offence of which the person has actually been convicted before hearing the evidence of the other offences relating to the question of forfeiture? If not, will this not be very prejudicial to the offender?

Ultimately, all of these questions will have to be worked out by the courts themselves, but we regret that the statute does not give more explicit direction on how this provision should operate.

In its examination of the bill the committee concluded that there were two omissions that should be rectified. First, the offence of loan sharking is missing from the list of offences, or enterprise crimes as they are sometimes called, that trigger the forfeiture provisions of the bill. It is our understanding that this offence is commonly part of a cluster of offences that we think of as organized crime, and we could not understand why it was not included. In fact, we dealt with that particular crime in a bill just a few weeks ago, when we were considering other amendments to the Criminal Code.

The second omission is that, when an Attorney General applies for special search warrants or restraint orders under this bill, there is no requirement to notify the judge of any previous applications made in relation to the same individual. Both the wiretap and the telewarrant sections of the Criminal Code contain such a notice requirement, and we believe that its inclusion is equally important in the forfeiture context as well.

We brought these concerns to the attention of the Minister of Justice in the hope that he would give us an undertaking to bring those amendments forward at the earliest possible date. We have received a letter from the Minister of Justice in which he agrees in principle with the comments we have made. He has undertaken to pursue the matter of making the necessary amendments at an early date. That letter is attached to the committee's report. In fact, I spoke personally to the minister this morning and he assured me that he would follow this up as soon as possible. With that assurance, honourable senators, the committee is reassured and is prepared to recommend passage of this bill without amendment.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday next, 7th September, 1988, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

[Senator Neiman.]

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—DROUGHT RELIEF PROGRAM—CRITERIA FOR QUALIFICATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate several questions. Before I do I wish to congratulate the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate for the speed with which he brought back an answer to a question I asked him last Tuesday, August 30.

Senator Doody: You were surprised!

Senator Olson: I was not surprised. Indeed, on Tuesday I mentioned his great influence and persuasive ability, and, although he demurred somewhat, saying that he did not have that great an influence, on Wednesday I received a report from the Department of Agriculture dated August 31, 1988—in other words, the next day, which is good service as far as I am concerned.

Senator Frith: He does not know his own strength!

Senator Olson: That report outlined the terms and conditions, or the criteria, for making applications under the drought relief program related to livestock. I want him to know that I appreciate that, and my confidence in his influence, if he tries, even though it was high, is even higher. However—

Senator Doody: Now for the truth!

Senator Frith: Here comes the “but”!

Senator Olson: One of the conditions for receiving the payment for the livestock is, and I quote:

Eligibility for the second installment will depend on enrollment in forage crop insurance.

I think that it is an improper use of the terms and conditions of the federal spending power to insist that a producer buy some kind of insurance for 1989 so that he can collect from a program that was supposed to relieve the financial difficulty in 1988. The Conservatives forced this participation. Talk about socialism or all those other words that Senator Doody uses—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: —or that Senator Barootes uses every once in a while. I should think that he would be my greatest ally in trying to get this unjust condition removed from the program. I want to ask the minister—or the deputy leader again—

Senator Argue: You are elevating him!

Senator Olson: His image, in my view, has been elevated tremendously. I have never had such good service.

Senator Argue: Higher than a minister!

Senator Olson: It is better than the service from a minister most of the time.

Now that he has demonstrated his influence and ability, I wonder if he would convey to the appropriate authority, whether it be the Minister of Agriculture, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board or whomever, that that is an unfair condition for collecting the payments that will be eligible in 1988; and would he ask the appropriate authority to follow at least some kinds of principles in keeping with our democratic structure before making it a condition that you must buy insurance—I do not care how much or how little—for 1989 before you can collect what is going to be declared your due for 1988.

● (1430)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): In view of the glowing tribute the honourable senator has paid me, I would be less than gracious if I did not pass his opinion along to the appropriate authorities. I will be most pleased to do so.

NATIONAL DEFENCECANADIAN ARMED FORCES—POLITICAL RIGHTS OF SPOUSES—STATUS OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, several times over the last year I have asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate questions concerning the status of spouses of members of the Canadian military. In June the Honourable Perrin Beatty, Minister of National Defence, released a series of recommendations reflecting the report of Professor Desmond Morton of the University of Toronto. A number of recommendations were made concerning the political rights of spouses of members of the military. In a letter covering the press release, Mr. Beatty said:

... pending approval and promulgation of the new regulations, Commanding Officers have been instructed to apply present regulations in accordance with the intent of the policy changes I announced.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether those new regulations are now in place so that members of the Canadian military will be able to participate in any forthcoming election?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator Marsden gave me notice earlier today that she would be asking questions along these lines. I did send forward an inquiry to my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, to which he has not yet responded. Having said that, and pending the official response from Mr. Beatty, I can only say that I am confident that the answer to the honourable senator's question is, generally speaking, in the affirmative.

PUBLIC WORKSCONSTRUCTION OF BREAKWATER AT SIDNEY, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate an entirely different question. In our mail over the last week we have received quite a number of press releases announcing new wharves and breakwaters along the Atlantic coast. In my mind's eye there is a solid wall of breakwater from the Canadian North to the American border, but there are very few breakwaters on the west coast. Does the government intend to construct a breakwater at Sidney, British Columbia, which has been asking for one, to my certain knowledge, since at least 1911?

Senator Perrault: Since 1905!

Senator Marsden: I am sure that 1905 is correct.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there again I will have to obtain an official reply from my colleague, but, pending that reply, I think I can say with some confidence that the people of Sidney can look forward to hearing good news.

Senator Marsden: I am glad to hear it, since Sidney is my home town.

REPRODUCTIVE TECHNOLOGYSTATUS OF PROPOSED ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I have asked before whether the government intends to announce a royal commission on reproductive technology, which has been requested by the women of Canada for over a year now. Has there been any new development on the proposed royal commission?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, but the matter is still under consideration by the government.

SENATE REFORMCONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES—NATURE AND STATUS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether there are now two bodies commissioned to canvass the provinces to put together a proposal for Senate reform? The government leader will recall that only a few days ago, at the provincial ministers' meeting held in Saskatoon, the provinces agreed, after some discussion, to set up a commission, I suppose, or at least to appoint the Province of Alberta to canvass the ideas of all the other provinces and put together some proposals for Senate reform.

A few weeks ago the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations advised this chamber that he had asked the Attorney General of Alberta, Jim Horsman, to put together a set of proposals that were to have been considered, I gather, at the next federal-provincial First Ministers' Conference. I am not sure whether he spelled out the details, such as the body to whom they were to report or whether they were simply to report to him. Have the provinces now set up another commission, or will they deal with that which was set up by the minister? It looks as though it will be the same chairman. Is this something new? Did the first attempt fail? What is the problem?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I read the communiqué from the premiers' conference, the decision on a process leading to a conference on Senate reform is perfectly consistent with the agreement that Mr. Horsman and I came to several months ago. Mr. Horsman and I agreed that he, representing the province that had taken the lead on the matter of Senate reform, would canvass the other provinces informally on Alberta's Senate reform proposals, that I would follow up and touch base with the provinces following Mr. Horsman's round, and that we would later compare notes, make an assessment of the situation and see what further steps were needed.

This is a process not unlike the process that preceded the holding of the Meech Lake conference, which was a process of informal consultation among governments. The premiers, as I understand it, decided to commission officials from Alberta to support the Horsman round.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is not very clear. The premiers, in their communiqué, made no mention of referring their proposal to the body the minister told us some months ago he had set up—in other words, naming Mr. Horsman to do this job for him. What are we to believe now, when there is no mention of it? They apparently were referring this to a committee. My understanding is that they have now set up a committee consisting of some members of the legislature, who are going to travel from provincial capital to provincial capital and put this together.

What puzzles me about the whole thing is that there is no mention that the task, which the provincial premiers are assigning to Mr. Horsman, is already under way as a result of discussions the minister had with the Attorney General of Alberta whatever number of weeks ago it was that he advised this house about those discussions.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, subsequent to my conversations with Mr. Horsman, I do know that he has canvassed representatives of the western governments, for example.

Senator Olson: I know that.

Senator Murray: I believe that he has also touched base informally with at least one of the eastern provinces. What I call the Horsman round is being supported, in my view, by the activities that the premiers commissioned, which are consultations at the official level.

[Senator Olson.]

The aim of the process is identical. The aim is to identify the areas on which there is consensus with regard to Senate reform. Once Meech Lake has been ratified, we will proceed definitely to hold a First Ministers' Conference on Senate reform. That is the next step after ratification of the Meech Lake Accord.

The work that is going forward—informal, consultative, consensus-seeking—is with a view to being prepared for a successful First Ministers' Conference on Senate reform, once Meech Lake is ratified.

Senator Frith: You had better do it before September 17.

Senator Olson: We are now getting to the heart of the matter. Alberta's proposal is already well known. It is something called a Triple-E Senate, and the detail that follows from that description is spelled out.

Is the minister now saying that there will be no action by the federal government—no conference, no meeting, no discussion or negotiation—until after Meech Lake is ratified? That, of course, is what was bothering some of the premiers at the meeting in Saskatoon some days ago. Can we take it that whatever the Horsman round, as you call it, comes up with, there will be no action, not even a discussion?

The premiers said that they were not prepared to discuss it further until after the ratification of Meech Lake by all the necessary provinces. It is the federal government's position, too, that unless there is ratification of Meech Lake before the next First Ministers' Conference it will not be on the agenda.

● (1440)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Senator Olson asks whether there will be no discussions, and so on, before ratification of Meech Lake. What I have been trying to tell the Senate is exactly to the contrary. There are consultations and discussions taking place, and I have referred to those.

The accord that was reached in the Meech Lake process provides for a First Ministers' Conference on the subject of Senate reform after ratification of Meech Lake, which we had anticipated would take place before the end of the present calendar year. But it does not make sense—and I have no hesitation in repeating it—it does not make sense to convene a First Ministers' Conference on Senate reform to which only nine provinces will come. Only nine provinces, at a maximum, will come until Meech Lake has been ratified.

Senator Olson: That may be, but you are also committed to having a First Ministers' Conference every year and to having Senate reform on the agenda at that conference every year. That year runs out some time in February. You will have to have some kind of First Ministers' Conference again.

That will do for now, but apparently we need to have a full-scale debate on this, because the Leader of the Government is all over the place with his answers. The premiers in Saskatoon said that they were not willing to discuss Senate reform until after the Meech Lake Accord was ratified. That is clear. He is saying essentially the same thing now, but when I put the question to him in those bold terms he backs off. I do not understand that.

SOLICITOR GENERAL

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE—REQUEST FOR CONFIDENTIAL FILES FROM PROVINCES

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations whether or not the federal government, through CSIS, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, asked the Province of Alberta for private, confidential files on personal matters, such as medical records and that sort of thing. If it did, what does it intend to do with the authority to have access to these personal files of Albertans?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I believe that I have seen the same news reports that my honourable friend has seen. However, I have no information on the matter. I shall ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, what information he can properly disclose on that matter at this time.

Senator Olson: Well, honourable senators, that is the same kind of answer that Attorney General Horsman gives, namely, "What can properly be disclosed?" I thought it was the right of Canadian citizens to know that files were being kept on them, what they were and what the purpose was.

If CSIS wants all the personal medical files of Albertans—and Alberta is not the only province that has been asked for this; there are others as well—what does it want them for? We do not want you to come back and say that this is all you can properly tell us. People have a right to know what kinds of files the federal government is keeping and what the purpose is.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there is a premise to the honourable senator's question that, in the absence of some evidence, I cannot accept. He is suggesting that the federal government, through the security service, has embarked on a fishing expedition in the province of Alberta, sending, as he put it, for Albertans' medical files.

Senator Olson: That is right.

Senator Murray: To put it mildly, I rather doubt that is the case.

I will ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, what information he can properly disclose on the subject matter of the honourable senator's question.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

GOVERNMENT ACTION OR POLICY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of this session of Parliament there was a forecast of a national conference on post-secondary education. As we know, that national conference took place in the fall of 1987.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if, some time before the end of the session, he will give the Senate an account of what new actions have been taken or policies have been adopted by the Government of Canada as a result of the initiative forecast in the Speech from the Throne at the beginning of the session.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall be delighted to do that.

LITERACY DAY

GOVERNMENT INITIATIVES

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, following on Senator Stewart's question, and knowing the interest that the government leader in the Senate has in the issue of illiteracy, could he indicate to this house whether any announcements are being anticipated for Literacy Day, which is on September 8, along the lines of special national initiatives in this area?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that that matter is under active consideration by the government at the moment. She will not have long to wait for an answer to her question.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Olson.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: A bit of favouritism is going on here!

Senator Doody: Senator Olson certainly knows how to get the answers. He just sweet talks and sweet talks, and—lo and behold!—they arrive.

An Hon. Senator: The squeaking wheel . . . !

UNITED NATIONS

IRAN-IRAQ BORDER PEACEKEEPING CONTINGENT—SHARING OF COST

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on August 17 last by the Honourable H.A. Olson, regarding the United Nations—Iran-Iraq Border Peacekeeping Contingent—Sharing of Cost.

(The answer follows:)

Bilateral talks with the United Nations are taking place to determine the costs to Canada of the peacekeeping mission in Iran/Iraq. It is standard United Nations practice for participating nations to pay their deployment costs. In this particular mission, the United States has made a major contribution to our strategic airlift.

Several UN member nations have indicated that they will contribute to the overall costs of this peacekeeping operation, even though they will have no personnel in the area.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-264, to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use).

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, does Senator Doody know whether the concerns expressed about the exemption of similar instruments used for veterinary purposes will be drawn to the attention of the drafters of the regulations? In other words, they should be cognizant of that use.

Senator Doody: I have to confess that I do not have the answer. I assume the question can be raised in committee. I take some consolation from the fact that the sponsor of the bill, Dr. Horner, is a veterinarian. I assume that he would be unlikely to damage or jeopardize practising veterinarians.

Perhaps the chairman of the committee has some answers regarding the concerns raised by Senator Olson. If not, I will attempt to get the answers for him.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, the question was raised in committee by several people. Senator David was there, too, to help us with this study. He also asked some of the questions regarding possible confiscation of such items as hypodermic needles and various other syringes, and how this would be handled.

The thrust of the legislation itself simply specifies that any objects will be considered illegal where they can be readily identified specifically for the use of illicit or illegal drugs. In other words, we were shown all sorts of different devices and instruments that could be used for no other purposes than those of a drug-related nature, but other instruments, such as hypodermic needles, would not be covered, and there is no need for concern in using such instruments in a normal manner.

● (1450)

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I did not want to delay passage of the bill, but, not being a member of the committee, I wanted to understand this point. A slight inconvenience is certainly acceptable; however, if the legislation were to prohibit the use of such instruments, that would be another problem.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cochrane, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bazin, for the second reading of the Bill C-123, An Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).—(Honourable Senator Watt).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Watt has asked me to stand this order in the name of Senator Marchand.

Order stands in name of Senator Marchand.

TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William M. Kelly moved the second reading of Bill C-146, to amend the Tax Court of Canada Act and other acts in consequence thereof.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-146, otherwise known as "An Act to amend the Tax Court of Canada Act and other related Acts in consequence thereof".

Since being appointed to this place in 1982 I have noted—sometimes with amusement and sometimes with irritation—how, during the closing days of a parliamentary session, a flood of legislation will come up to us from the other place, to which we are requested to apply our sober second thought, but within a very limited period of time. In order to fulfil the procedural requirements and to facilitate the process, those of us on this side are then asked to present the bills. To aid us in this cause we are provided with huge briefing books full of technical details and language that purports to explain the bill in question. I am sure that the situation I describe was the same for our colleagues on the other side. In any event, on Tuesday of this week I was asked to speak on this bill, and shortly thereafter I received, as usual, a huge briefing book.

From the size of the briefing book I assumed that Bill C-146 was momentous legislation. From the technical language of the explanations in the briefing book I assumed that this bill was at least as technically complex as the Income Tax Act itself. I had no choice but to go back to basic principles: I read the bill carefully and thoroughly. I discovered, to my delight and relief, that, when all the technical verbiage and legalisms are stripped away, the objective of the bill, while quite important, is also quite simple and straightforward: it is to simplify the system by which federal tax and certain other assessments are appealed. This objective, which I am sure we all agree is laudable and important, springs from the work of the task force on Revenue Canada, chaired by the Honourable Perrin Beatty, which reported prior to the election in 1984.

Shortly after coming to power this government assigned additional judges to hear appeals to speed up the process. Bill C-146 goes further by making major structural changes to the process itself.

Honourable senators, allow me to describe as best I can our current system. As I understand it, under current law and procedure, appeals may be heard by either the Tax Court of Canada or the Trial Division of the Federal Court. Both have equal, original jurisdiction, and together they hear in the vicinity of 2,000 appeals each year. In practical terms, however, the Tax Court process tends to be less formal and less expensive than that of the Federal Court. Furthermore, and this is an important complication, an appeal from a decision of the Tax Court may be heard by the Federal Court. When it does so, however, the Federal Court hears the case de novo. In other words, the Trial Division of the Federal Court hears an appeal as if it had not been heard before at the Tax Court level. I suspect we would all agree that having the Federal Court hear an appeal de novo is redundant, unnecessarily expensive and dilatory, as well as somewhat akin to double jeopardy. At least that opinion is argued.

Bill C-146 will reorganize this system in the following ways: First, the Tax Court will have exclusive, original jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals not only from assessments under the Income Tax Act but also from assessments under the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act; Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act relating to contributions; Part I of the Canada Pension Plan relating to contributions; the Old Age Security Act, to the extent that the appeal involves a determination of income; and the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act—from a decision of the Veterans' Appeal Board as to what constitutes income.

Second, within the Tax Court there will be two procedures, or "streams", for hearing appeals: one will be a general procedure similar to the one now existing in the Federal Court, which I would call "formal" or "judicial"; the other will be an informal procedure similar to the procedures currently followed by small claims courts.

Third, the Federal Court of Appeal will be the only body to hear appeals from decisions of the Tax Court arrived at through the general procedure. These appeals from decisions of the Tax Court can be mounted either by the minister or by the aggrieved citizen or taxpayer.

I want to emphasize that decisions by the Tax Court through the informal procedure are not subject to appeal to the Federal Court per se. My legal friends in the Department of Justice tell me, however, that, under section 28 of the Federal Court Act, an appeal from a decision reached through the informal procedure could be made for a judicial review, but on matters of law only. It is also worth noting in this regard that, if the Minister of National Revenue mounts an appeal to the Federal Court, the government, pursuant to Bill C-146, undertakes to pay the cost to the respondent, regardless of the outcome.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, that describes the essence, as I understand it, of Bill C-146. However, some details remain that require an explanation.

Let me return for a moment to the Tax Court of Canada. I said earlier that, under Bill C-146, the Tax Court of Canada would have exclusive, original jurisdiction to hear citizens' appeals on their tax assessments and on certain other matters. There would be two procedures for doing so: the "general" informal procedure; and an informal procedure analogous to small claims courts. The informal procedure is obviously less costly and less time-consuming. An appeal to the Tax Court can be initiated, for example, by a letter sent in by a citizen.

Under the informal procedure, the only requirement is that the appeal be in writing. To further expedite matters court rules of evidence will be flexible; taxpayers will be able to represent themselves or be represented by an agent other than a lawyer; generally, the Minister of National Revenue will have to submit a reply within 45 days from the Notice of Appeal, the appeal will have to be heard within 90 days of reply, and judgment must be issued within 60 days of the hearing.

The aggrieved citizen can choose either procedure, formal or informal, but the informal procedure is available only when the amounts in dispute are small. The bill before us establishes an upward limit of $7,000 for handling by the informal process. This $7,000 figure is meant to cover only federal taxes and penalties in dispute for any one year. Based on experience and historical data, this $7,000 ceiling would accommodate roughly 70 per cent of all claims currently appealed. Bill C-146, however, gives administrative discretion to the Governor in Council to raise that ceiling to a maximum of $12,000 in order to accommodate changing economic circumstances over time or changes in the trend of usage. Even within the general or formal procedure of the Tax Court there is further variation. For example, oral examinations for discovery are allowed only where the amounts in dispute are $15,000 or more.

Income tax appeals are now heard by the Tax Court in over 25 cities across Canada. Providing the Tax Court with exclusive, original jurisdiction for appeals of tax assessments brings the appeal process closer to the citizen.

● (1500)

The essential impacts of Bill C-146 will be: to reconstitute the Tax Court as Canada's centre of expertise on income tax appeals; to provide two appeal procedures, one formal and one informal, that will be available to the citizen and will reflect the quantity of money in dispute; to simplify, make less expensive and remove the redundancies from the appeal process; and, for appeals following the informal route, to reduce the appeal process to about six months, whereas some cases now take as long as two to three years.

Honourable senators, I believe lawyers are fond of the phrase "justice delayed is justice denied". Bill C-146, together with earlier reforms, will expedite the income tax appeal process and thus expedite justice.

Bill C-146 flows from recommendations made by the Revenue Canada task force in 1984 and commitments made in the Throne Speech in that year. With those comments, honourable senators, I commend the bill to your attention.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator Kelly for his lucid explanation of this bill.

Did his briefing notes include a reference to the clause that deals with the minister having to pay the costs of an appeal? I assume that occurs in any event of the appeal. In other words, even if the minister wins the appeal, he will still pay the costs; is that correct?

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, yes, that is my understanding.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of this debate in the name of Senator Stanbury. I do not want to preempt him, but I would say that, on the basis of the explanation given by Senator Kelly, I believe we should support this salutary bill. With that, we will have to wait until next week, when Senator Stanbury has agreed to give us his views.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Stanbury, debate adjourned.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on this particular bill I am glad to defer to our in-house resident expert on railways and railway stations, Senator Turner.

Hon. Charles Turner moved the second reading of Bill C-205, to protect heritage railway stations.

He said: Honourable senators, on this issue Senator Sinclair and I are on opposite sides of the fence.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, no!

Senator MacDonald: Say it isn't so!

Senator Turner: Honourable senators, when we look back into the pages of our great Canadian history we find that completion of a transcontinental railway within two years was a condition of British Columbia's entry into Confederation in 1871.

With this great country tied together with two ribbons of steel, the first train left Montreal on June 28, 1886, and arrived at Port Moody, British Columbia, on July 4.

During the rail construction, the CPR—my competition—became involved in the sale and settlement of land in 1881, in the acquisition of the Dominion Express Co. in 1882, and in the acceptance of commercial telegraph messages in 1882. In addition, the company provided its own sleeping and dining cars on trains, and began the construction of tourist hotels, such as the one at Lake Louise, Alberta, and dining halls along the route in the western mountains, usually next door to newly constructed railway stations, thereby providing a place where railway passengers could purchase tickets and wait for their trains.

With the opening of the west and with the arrival of immigrants, the railway stations played an important role in the lives of those newly arrived people, who proceeded to build their homes, work their farms and thus help build this great country Canada.

[Senator Frith.]

The railway stations were meeting places where residents would have contact with the mailman and could talk to their neighbours. They were the focal point, along with churches, where people exchanged ideas, discussed problems and looked for solutions to their daily living in their newly found country.

Railway station rail service began in Canada in 1836 with the opening of the Champlain and Saint Lawrence Railroad east of Montreal. The new transportation system required the building of a new type of station that could accommodate the passengers and the freight the system carried.

No information has survived on stations for the first Canadian railways, if indeed there were stations. The earliest ones known are the road stations built between 1855 and 1857 for the Grand Trunk Railway's line from Montreal to Toronto and Sarnia. Most stations, such as the one at St. Marys Junction, Ontario, were small, rectangular, one-storey, stone buildings with broad-eaved gabled roofs and round-arched windows and doors. Those at Kingston and Belleville had a second storey within a mansard roof. The designer may have been Grand Trunk chief engineer A.M. Ross or Thomas S. Scott, the future federal chief architect who served for a time as architect to the railway.

A number of the early Grand Trunk stations were of frame construction, as were those built in 1867 for the Intercolonial Railway's route from Truro to New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, and were likely designed by Sir Sandford Fleming. The five shingled way stations on this route combined passenger and freight facilities and had a separate long platform.

The Canadian Pacific Railway used a number of station types and designers for its transcontinental route. Several stations, such as the one at Peterborough, Ontario, designed by architect Thomas Charles Sorby in 1883, were built of brick, with the passenger waiting room separate from the freight shed, and the stationmaster's quarters located above the waiting room. This arrangement became the basis for standard plans subsequently adopted by the CPR and other lines and continued well into the present century. In several early western CPR stations the passenger and freight facilities were joined by a covered platform. The Vancouver station, designed by Paul Marmette in 1886, which was also of frame construction, followed this plan, and so did the station in Calgary, built in stone in 1893, and the station in Banff, Alberta, a log construction built in 1889, both of which were designed by Edward Colonna.

Urban stations, many of them terminals, were much larger than stations along the line and were designed in the fashionable architectural styles of the time. Toronto's second Union Station, designed by E.P. Hannaford and built in 1871-73, was an Italian design with three tall mansard-roofed towers; the Intercolonial's North Street Terminal in Halifax, built by the Department of Public Works in 1874-77, displayed a fine Second Empire design; and the CPR's Windsor Station in Montreal, designed by Bruce Price and built in 1888-89, was in the Richardsonian Romanesque style. All featured large main sheds of utilitarian iron or steel construction located behind the passenger building.

Many stations were designed in the years before World War I, and twentieth-century designs generally continued the styles developed in earlier years. The station at Smith, Alberta, built in 1914 for the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway, has a low freight shed alongside a gabled, two-storey passenger wing similar to CPR stations of a generation earlier and is typical of smaller stations built by most lines.

Many railways had a series of standard designs that were repeated in various locations, particularly on the prairies. The Union Station in Winnipeg, designed by Warren and Wetmore and built in 1911, and Toronto's third Union Station, designed by Ross and MacDonald, Hugh G. Jones and John M. Lyle and built during 1915 to 1920, continued the practice of using fashionable high styles for urban stations. In both instances they reflect beaux arts classicism. The Toronto station is notable for its grand concourse and its effective use of levels to separate functions. Modernism was first applied to station design with the erection of the CN Railway Central Station in Montreal by John Schofield from 1938 to 1943. The simple brick structure also became the core of an extensive commercial development in the Place Ville Marie office complex designed by I.M. Pei and Associates and constructed between 1956 and 1965.

● (1510)

After 1960 many railway stations were demolished. The numerous line abandonments and the elimination of passenger service from many surviving lines, combined with the need to renew aging building stock, brought about a wave of station removal. The few new stations built generally used simple contemporary designs, as in the CN stations at Dorval, Quebec, and Kingston, Ontario. In other communities stations were removed and replaced with small, standard shelters, such as the CP Rail station at Arnprior, Ontario, which was replaced in 1981. Public interest in the preservation of unusual railway stations has resulted in a number being reused—as, for example, in High River, Alberta; some being used as community facilities—as, for example, in Theodore, Saskatchewan; and others being used as integrated transportation facilities, as in Regina, for example.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Turner: The former Ottawa Union Station is now a conference centre. The railways are beginning to cooperate with communities that wish to retain unused stations, although removal of stations continues at a rapid pace.

One meaning or definition of the word "heritage" is: What is or may be handed on to a person from his or her ancestors. For 121 years the great Senate hall has seen many great Canadians who have worked hard to fulfil the dreams of their forefathers, who came from all the nations of the world. They hoped and prayed that their children would be successful in their new homeland, and many of you senators have fulfilled that obligation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Turner: With their drive, determination and financial support, our Canadian nation and its people developed the significance of our Canadian railways, which helped shape our nation's destiny. This, honourable senators, cannot be denied. The railways, along with all their employees, helped bring Canada into existence. I must say that, in very large part, they have developed and defined the fundamental character of the nation we call Canada, as you and I know it. Canada's size and great diversity depends on our trade. The needs of settlement and political identity and character have shown that our transportation system was, and is, of great importance to us all.

When one looks back into the pages of history, our railway transportation systems have been the very backbone of our nation, in times of both war and peace. The railway stations across Canada remain the most cherished reminders of what Canada's railways have meant to the country, to the provinces, and to all the cities, towns and villages. These stations were points of departure and arrival for thousands of families as they travelled across our great land. During four wars, tens of thousands of Canadian troops said farewell to members of their families, and, yes, the great railway stations were the first things that those who returned home saw.

Therefore, we must be true to and carry out our forefathers' dreams by preserving these stations before they all cease to exist. We must move quickly.

The purpose of Bill C-205 is to provide the mechanism to ensure the preservation of Canada's heritage railway stations. This bill will forbid any railway company to destroy or change a heritage railway station or any of its features unless authorized by the Governor in Council. Non-compliance could result in a fine.

This bill does not ask for great expenditure on the part of the railway. It does not say that the railways will have to do any of the renovating, moving or redecorating. These matters will be taken care of by the people of the area who wish to preserve the stations and conserve them for future use as art centres, museums, libraries, town offices, public meeting halls, and so on. People across this nation want to save these stations and put them to good use in their communities. Led by community fraternal clubs, they are prepared to fix up the grounds around the stations so that they can be used once again and will be representative of a bygone era and of their communities' local history.

The following is a brief outline of the history of the preservation of railway structures and some of the background that led to Bill C-205 seeing the light of day in November 1982.

How many early railway stations are there? According to the Canadian Inventory of Historic Buildings, these stations numbered 1,391 as of 1977. The criteria for including buildings in the inventory were: buildings constructed prior to 1885 in Atlantic Canada, Quebec and southern Ontario; buildings constructed prior to 1914 in northern Ontario and in the west. As I have said, the total number of stations recorded is 1,391. The number of stations on which data are known in 1988 is 876. The number of stations still standing in 1988 is 485. The number of stations demolished is 391. The number of stations moved from their original site is 113.

What is the main reason for the demolition of federally regulated railway stations having heritage value? There is no federal law to protect these structures. In most cases, when a railway company no longer needs a station, it applies for a demolition permit. In some cases, the railway will offer a station to a community for a nominal sum, but only if the building is moved. The practice of moving stations is expensive and hazardous, and destroys the context and therefore much of the heritage value of these structures. Because many communities have been unable to meet the demand to move stations in order to save them, many have been demolished. Examples include stations in Leduc, Raymond, Taber, Ste.-Anne-des-Chenes, Truro, Campbellford, Chesley, and so on.

What stations have a questionable future? There are dozens, including: in Quebec, Mont-Laurier, Labelle, Mont-Tremblant, Sainte-Agathe, Mont-Rolland, Saint-Jérôme, Sainte-Thérèse, Saint-Martin; in Ontario, Orangeville and Glencoe; in Manitoba, the CP station in Winnipeg; in Nova Scotia, Kentville.

In November 1982 Canadian Pacific Railway demolished the West Toronto Station without permission. In September 1983 Mr. Jesse Flis, the MP for Parkdale-High Park, took a strong interest in the problem. In August 1986, when Parliament prorogued, Bill C-211 died before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry had had an opportunity to discuss its subject matter.

In October 1986 Mr. Gordon Taylor, MP, introduced Bill C-205, which is identical to Bill C-211, as a private member's bill. It received first reading. In November 1987 Canadian Pacific was found guilty of criminal charges relating to the demolition of the West Toronto Station.

● (1520)

Honourable senators, Heritage Canada has at the present time about 60 community municipal railway station projects under active consideration or renovation in every province of Canada. I have a complete list of those.

Honourable senators, the Honourable Ed Lumley was instrumental in obtaining $5 million for the Heritage Canada Foundation. That money was put to work in 70 Canadian communities which were selected and whose main streets were developed by consultants who used the universal approach of mixing the old and new buildings so that the heritage of the communities was preserved. I believe Perth, Ontario, was the pilot project back in 1979-80. Every dollar that Heritage Canada put into the program was matched by $14 from the private sector, thus creating 2,000 jobs across Canada.

To me, this is a very practical approach to rebuilding our downtown areas while, at the same time, protecting our heritage buildings so that they can compete with the build-up of malls in the outlying areas of our cities and towns. We must observe that most malls are leased or rented by large American or Canadian chain stores that pay the monthly rents and take the profits back to their head offices, which are usually in another city or another country. The downtown area merchants of each city or town are the people who pay the taxes and help the hometown communities to survive in our fast-changing society.

Honourable senators, I wish to thank the honourable member for Bow River for his desire to protect heritage railway stations in Canada, thus carrying on the good work of all members of the committee of the other place, and I thank especially the former member, Jesse Flis, who sponsored the original bill to preserve the heritage railway stations, with the help of the officials and employees of the Heritage Canada Foundation.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, as Senator Turner has indicated, this is a very important bill. I understand now why Senator Doody deferred to him. To speak on this subject requires some knowledge, and Senator Turner, who has passed many of these stations and waved at them and paid no attention to them, now seems, all of a sudden, to have picked up a lot of knowledge.

Senator Frith: Except to pick up his orders!

Senator Côtteau: Don't be bitter!

Senator Sinclair: I am not being bitter, but this is an important matter.

I am a little sensitive about the finding of a criminal case against Canadian Pacific. I am a little sensitive about that because I was the person who authorized them to demolish the station. We needed to do that to serve the people; yet we were convicted.

This is an important matter. Rather than take the time of this chamber to deal with all of the issues, I think the bill should be referred to committee. I am sure many witnesses will appear before that committee.

Senator Frith: The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee?

Senator Sinclair: I think that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance would be an excellent choice.

Senator Doody: If it is to be referred to committee, I suggest that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Turner, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SIXTY-SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the sixty-second report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (Supplies and Services), presented in the Senate on August 30, 1988.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator LeBlanc has asked me to speak to this order. He presented the report on August 30 to give senators the chance to read it, and he has asked me, on his behalf, to move its adoption today.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that all remaining orders stand, on the understanding that any senator who wishes to speak on any order is perfectly entitled to do so.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE SENATE

DELAYS IN CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William M. Kelly rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, August 30, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the question of delays in the consideration of legislation in the Senate.

He said: Honourable senators, at the end of this year I will have completed six years as a member of this chamber. Before I arrived here, like all other honourable senators, I am sure, I carefully studied the history of the Senate and paid particular attention to the original purpose of its creation. The role as the chamber of sober second thought seemed to me to best describe the meaning of this place.

Throughout these six years I have continued to be impressed with the wide range of talent and experience that exists among colleagues here. Nothing has changed my mind on what we were, and are intended to be, in the performance of our responsibilities.

It is for this reason that I feel compelled to comment today on my reaction to the free trade legislation, which has just arrived in this place, and the direction from the Leader of the Official Opposition in the other place to the opposition members in this chamber that this legislation be blocked—

Senator Perrault: He didn't say "block". He never used the word "block". That is a propaganda blitz.

Senator Kelly: With respect, honourable senators, that is a personal opinion. It is not a propaganda blitz. This has not been discussed by me with the caucus of the government side of this chamber. It is an opinion, senator, that I am trying to express.

Senator Frith: We want you to get the words right.

Senator Kelly: I will say it again; this is my opinion.

Senator Frith: We were not directed. Get it right!

Senator Kelly: If I may proceed then, I refer to the directive that this legislation be blocked unless and until a general election is called. I believe that to proceed on that basis is a gross misuse of this chamber!

Parliamentary battles over significant legislation are not unknown to us and are not even unusual, particularly since 1984. I sense, however, that this particular battle could well be pivotal in deciding not only the future of this place but also the future development of responsible government in Canada. It goes without saying that the Senate has constitutional obligations and responsibilities. Most of us here also agree that the Senate has a useful role to play in the legislative process.

Just this August, honourable senators, the members of the Senate Finance Committee carefully reviewed legislation to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency (ACOA). Some honourable colleagues were particularly concerned about protection of regional interests. I recall that certain senators were adamantly opposed to a section of the proposed legislation that would replace the old Cape Breton Development Corporation—or DEVCO, as it is known—with the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. They maintained that Cape Breton would eventually be disadvantaged by the change, because they believed, and believed sincerely, that aid for the region would be passed from a government authority into the hands of an agency with no special mandate to concentrate on Cape Breton.

● (1530)

The ACOA legislation was in the Senate for three months. The committee finally did agree to let the legislation pass, because, according to Senator Frith, as reported in The Globe and Mail, the government has in effect said: "This is it; we are going to plow ahead." So that is the stage at which the Senate should just say, "Okay!" Senator Stewart, according to the same newspaper, added similar sentiments when he said, "There's no point in moving for amendments. The government has made its opinion clear." Similar comments were made by other senators during final stages of discussion on Bills C-55, C-84 and, of course, on Bill C-22. Honourable senators, I only wish the same logic could be applied to the free trade legislation.

Particularly in this politically charged environment, we senators have a duty and a responsibility to be careful, lest in the heat of the moment and for short-term gains we do something that establishes a precedent that leads to unforeseen or negative consequences down the road.

Because our Constitution and system of government are relatively flexible; because they evolve, adapt and change through the development of constitutional conventions—precedents, as it were—we have to be very careful about the precedents we establish. Like someone dropping a pebble into a pool, the ripples spread out to infinity and into the unfathomable future.

I believe that the Leader of the Official Opposition's initiative with respect to the free trade legislation and the apparent acceptance, honourable senators, of his direction or his advice by Liberal senators is such an action. I believe that action, if allowed to stand, will have significant implications for our system of government, in particular for the role of this place, the Senate.

One of the great achievements of the Westminster system of government is its flexibility. Our written Constitution is the core around which constitutional conventions have evolved over time to create an effective constitution. Although the evolution is slow and laborious—as it should be to safeguard the stability, legitimacy and credibility of government—our Constitution allows our system of government to adapt itself to changing circumstances and requirements. It allows our Constitution and our system of government to be efficient, effective and responsive.

Let me be clear, honourable senators: I do not contend that the Senate lacks the strict constitutional right, under our written Constitution, to amend or delay the free trade legislation, or any other piece of ordinary legislation approved by the House of Commons. To use Dr. Forsey's words, the Senate can do so "until the cows come home".

The strict constitutional ability of the Senate to block or delay ordinary bills is not the issue here. As a matter of constitutional convention, however, our ability to block or delay this legislation pending an election is not nearly so clear. I am, of course, aware of the so-called "precedent" of the Naval Bill in 1913. Perhaps, in strict historical terms, that represents, in fact, a precedent, but Canada and the effective operation of our government have changed much in the intervening 75 years, and I wonder about the true value of this precedent in today's times.

I assert that, if our system of responsible government is to survive, the Senate must eventually accede to the wishes of the popularly-elected lower house. We may delay, to let contentious legislation cool, as it were, or we may propose amendments and alternatives; but, in the end, we must allow the House of Commons to have its say—and, incidentally, let the majority in the House of Commons brave and suffer any electoral or other consequences that result.

On those rare occasions when the Senate decides to block legislation, surely at a minimum we must make the decision ourselves, based on a thoughtful and thorough review of the legislation itself. We should not allow such an important action to be dictated to us by external forces perhaps looking for political gain.

If the Senate is to use its constitutional rights and prerogatives to the letter of the Constitution, it should itself abide by the letter of the Constitution and constitutional precedent and make such decisions internally. When the Senate allows its actions to be dictated by external forces, the Senate undermines its own credibility and legitimacy. Our protestations of constitutional rectitude appear to be nothing more than expedient camouflage for our involvement in opportunistic partisanship.

Also, I do not want my own motives to be misconstrued. While the move to block the Free Trade Agreement is essentially a partisan manoeuvre, my concern is not motivated by partisanship.

Senator Perrault: No, of course not. It comes through in every line!

Senator Kelly: While I support the Free Trade Agreement—I happen to support it—my remarks today are not motivated by concern over the future of that agreement. I would be equally concerned if the Senate were to bow to external instructions or pressures on any other piece of significant legislation—regardless of whether I happened to agree with the legislation in question.

Doubtless, the Free Trade Agreement will be an issue in the forthcoming election, but it would have been anyway. What the opposition leader's manoeuvre has done is to make the Senate an election issue as well—perhaps the predominant one.

I, for one, have no objection to the role of the Senate being the focus of public discussion and debate. I would much prefer, however, if such discussion and debate took place in a calm and deliberate fashion and not in the highly-charged, emotional and often angry environment that will doubtless characterize some or all of the debate in the forthcoming campaign.

A quick review, I might say with great respect to Senator Doyle, of editorial opinion on the issue of Senate reform over the past couple of weeks will give everyone a gauge of the relatively low level of sophistication and objectivity such a debate is likely to engender. If the opposition leader wanted a full debate on free trade, perhaps he should have proposed a national referendum. A referendum would allow the public to focus clearly on a single issue and say unequivocally "yes" or "no" to a single proposition.

Everyone here knows that an election campaign is fought and won or lost on a wide range of diverse issues. This election will be no different. Free trade will be but one of the issues competing for time and attention along with many other national, regional and local issues and concerns, from abortion to the personalities of the leaders, from the Meech Lake Accord to nuclear submarines, from child care to Senate reform.

In purely practical terms, what have we done, or what do we risk doing, by bowing to external partisan pressure to stop this bill? The Senate's role is twofold: first, it represents the regions of Canada; secondly, it acts as a chamber of sober second thought, or, as Sir John A. Macdonald put it, "a saucer in which to pour legislation in order to allow it to cool". These roles are important, perhaps vital, but they can only be performed effectively if the review conducted here is quantitatively and qualitatively different from that which occurs in the other place; if the Senate rises above the partisanship that tends to characterize debate and legislative review in the House of Commons.

If the Senate, as currently constituted, is to remain a viable and credible institution, it must perform a function that is both worthwhile and, in some material aspects, different from the function performed by the House of Commons. There is no purpose in a Senate that simply rubber-stamps government bills. Equally, there is no purpose in a Senate that allows partisan motivations to direct it to do here what failed in the House of Commons.

If we allow ourselves to become enmeshed in partisanship; if our review becomes qualitatively and quantitatively the same as that in the lower house; if our actions are dictated by partisan considerations by the leadership—any of the leadership—of the lower house; then the Senate becomes as partisan as the other place and becomes redundant. We then lose our identity and our reason for being.

Our effective Constitution and the combination of the written Constitution and accumulated conventions have given us a reasonably efficient legislative process. Unlike the American system, with its division of powers, its checks and balances and its often complex and dilatory legislative process, our system of responsible government has given us a reasonably straightforward and efficient process.

There is no question that in our system the Senate acts as a check and balance to the House of Commons; but if that check and balance is not applied selectively and judiciously it will begin to undermine the efficiency of our legislative process and ultimately impact on the legitimacy and credibility of this institution. And, finally, if the check and balance is not applied selectively and judiciously, the Senate's actions may soon, in my opinion, imperil responsible government, on which our system of government is based.

Honourable senators, perhaps the Senate should act as an elected body. But before it does so, before we act as an elected body, surely the first step is to become an elected body. Maybe that is where we are headed, but until we get there we have to abide by the written rules and conventions that apply to us as an unelected body.

I am told that a former Prime Minister often said that a holder of public office should be careful not to diminish the powers and prerogatives of that office carelessly, capriciously or unwittingly. We should all take Mr. Trudeau's admonition to heart.

I believe that the legitimacy and credibility of this institution have been undermined, and will continue to be undermined, if we allow ourselves to succumb to the use of this institution for short-term partisan gain, especially if we are so clearly seen to be doing so.

I recall the reaction of certain of my colleagues opposite when government ministers called upon the Senate to pass government bills such as C-84, C-55 and C-22, all pieces of important legislation. Honourable senators, I hope that those same colleagues will follow the principles they followed before on this issue.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: I am glad you fellows opposite are not partisan!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I respect Senator Kelly for his intervention to express his opinion on the subject he dealt with in his inquiry. I listened carefully to what he had to say, and everything he had to say was based on an incorrect premise. He insisted on using verbs that suited well the conclusion he wanted to reach, and those verbs were "to order", "to direct" and "to block". The rest of his speech, then, articulate and eloquent though it was, falls to the ground, because it was based on an incorrect premise.

● (1540)

Senator Kelly made the point that senators should not accept directions from partisan outside agencies or persons. I agree with him, and I would not do so. Indeed, he would not do so if the leader of his party gave such a direction to him.

Honourable senators, we have to be careful about this word "partisan". That word is usually used in a pejorative way, and it was so used today by Senator Kelly. Of course, the root of the word "partisan" is "party", and it is meant in the context of a political party. Senator Kelly has frequently, in his six distinguished years here, used the word "partisan" in a pejorative way. "We should not be motivated by partisan considerations"—as if there were something a bit sinister, a bit dirty, about partisan considerations. Of course, he is joined in that view by many people in the media and elsewhere, who say, "Oh, that was motivated by partisan considerations", the implication being that therefore it is not worthy of any respect. But the truth is that we have a party system in Canada. The parties are not mentioned in the Constitution, but the Constitution is based on their existence.

The Fathers of Confederation, who wrote the Constitution—which justifies our being here, which justifies the House of Commons' being there, which justifies the cabinet's being where it is and justifies the Prime Minister's being where he is—were members of political parties. The dirty dogs! Imagine belonging to a political party! Honourable senators, Senator Kelly belongs to a political party; he does not sit here as an independent, nor does he sit here as a non-partisan senator.

Senator Perrault: He has never been accused of that!

Senator Frith: That is one of the fallacies upon which his entire speech is based. However, to get back to the question of direction by outside partisan persons or interests, I first want to say that I do not think there is anything wrong with party activity. A lot of people have lost their lives so that we can have a party system, and, if those people went to that extreme, it follows that they did so in order that there can be partisan political activity in this country.

This problem does not arise in Russia, where there is only one political party. There, Senator Kelly could stand up in the Senate—if there were such a body—and say, "Of course, here in the Soviet Union we have no partisan activity." Perhaps I should say that they have just one partisan activity, that of the Communist Party. Therefore, they have no need to use the word "partisan".

Honourable senators, I am sure that if the Prime Minister directed Senator Kelly to do something in this chamber he would not do it. The Prime Minister, I take it, has not directed him to support the free trade legislation. I assume from what he has said that, if the Prime Minister told him, "Senator Kelly, I direct you to support the free trade legislation in the Senate", he would say, "Prime Minister, what are you asking me to do? Do you realize that you, sir, have said that I ought not ever to accept directions from an outside, partisan person?" Of course, I think the Prime Minister would accept the fact that he is partisan—I hope that he would and would congratulate him for doing so. Honourable senators, of course that case is absurd, because the Prime Minister would never direct Senator Kelly to do such a thing; if he ever made the mistake of trying to do so, Senator Kelly would tell him where to go.

On the other hand, if the Prime Minister—that partisan, outside person—asked Senator Kelly to support the legislation, there would be nothing wrong in his saying, "Prime Minister, I accept your request. In fact, I will undertake to support that legislation in the Senate, even though you, sir, fall into the category that I have defined as that of a partisan, outside influence. However, since you have only asked me to do this, I feel I can accede to your request."

Honourable senators, that is precisely what happened with regard to the request of Mr. Turner that seems to have attracted such indignation from Senator Kelly. I must point out that I make my remarks sincerely, because Senator Kelly is a fair-minded person—wrong-minded, sometimes, but fair-minded. He was fair-minded and right-minded when he dealt with Bill C-146—he is entitled to make his mistakes like the rest of us—but he is not so fair-minded when dealing with this inquiry.

I am sure that Senator Kelly will understand the distinction between "directing" and "requesting". I can tell him, as I tell all honourable senators, that this was a request on the part of Mr. Turner made at a caucus meeting at which, as far as I know, 80 to 90 per cent of the senators were present. It was discussed and the senators accepted it.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Unanimously?

Senator Frith: At the caucus meeting it was accepted unanimously, although not all Liberal senators have accepted it. Senator van Roggen declined to do so, but he was not present at that caucus meeting.

Senator MacDonald: I expect that he was the exception. Are there others?

Senator Frith: No, there are no other exceptions.

Senator MacDonald: When will the honourable senator permit questions?

Senator Frith: Right now.

Senator MacDonald: Is it fair to say, then, that as Senator Kelly began his remarks Senator Perrault came to life—

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Frith: Is this a question?

Senator Perrault: I will be even livelier yet.

Senator MacDonald: The word that Senator Kelly used at the time, I believe, was "block"—

Senator Frith: I will not cede the floor to the honourable senator, because this is not a question.

Senator MacDonald: May I complete my question? I do have a preamble.

Senator Frith: Well, then, let us hear it. I am coming to the matter of the block.

Senator MacDonald: I wonder if Senator Frith could tell those of us who do not always get the subtleties with which he is so silkenly familiar the difference between a block and acceding unanimously—with one exception—to a request made by the Leader of the Official Opposition to the Liberal majority in this house to refuse the passage of the Free Trade Bill until an election is called.

Senator Frith: Yes, honourable senators, I was coming to that. I am dealing now with the first error, as I have said, which was the use of the word "direction"; the second error was the use of the word "block".

• (1550)

I have dealt now with the question of "direction". It was not a direction. It was a request that was accepted. The undertaking was given, and it was given unanimously. It was unanimous because, although, as you have pointed out, we have since heard the exception of Senator van Roggen, he was not present at that caucus.

Now I come to the question of "block". Another proudly partisan, I think, Canadian political figure, Sir John A. MacDonald, made it quite clear at the time of Confederation that the powers given to the Senate included the power in exceptional circumstances—and that was something for the senators to decide—to postpone passage of a bill if they felt there ought to be an election and an opportunity for the people to decide before the bill passed. I quote that authority, which is only in exceptional circumstances.

It is the opinion of Senator Kelly's colleagues on this side that these are exceptional circumstances, including the fact that the government not only did not have a mandate to introduce and obtain the passage of such important legislation but, in fact, the Prime Minister himself had said that he was against the idea of free trade with the United States. Those are the factors that persuaded Senator Kelly's colleagues on this side that these are exceptional circumstances. I do not expect Senator Kelly to agree with them, but I expect him to respect them, as I respect his opinion.

If he had used the right verbs and the right noun and had said that it was a request, and that the request was to postpone—which is the word that Sir John A. used—until there was an election, he would certainly be entitled to be equally critical, if that is his opinion. However, I only ask him to respect our judgment in the same circumstances. That is the distinction that Senator MacDonald wanted to draw. I may have to repeat it, because he does not seem to see any distinction between the word "block" and the words "postpone until there is an election".

Perhaps I should say it again more slowly. To us—perhaps not to him; I would say apparently not to him, considering the state of high dudgeon he is working himself into—there is a distinction between the two. That is the reason Senator Kelly's colleagues on this side do not feel they have taken direction. They have given an undertaking in response to a request, as we would expect him to do if his leader made a similar request, or at least would have the right to do without criticism, and that undertaking is to postpone the final determination in the Senate until there is an election. If the election result makes it clear that the people want this agreement, then part of the undertaking is to pass the legislation and support the legislation.

I hope that Senator Kelly agrees that there is nothing wrong, that an otherwise acceptable and perfectly justifiable undertaking and decision is not somehow made impure and sinful because it is requested by the leader of a political party. I hope Senator Kelly also agrees that there is nothing wrong with being a member of a political party or the leader of same.

If the Prime Minister ever asks Senator Kelly to do something, I hope he will give the Prime Minister the same respectful and courteous attention that we gave our leader when he made such a request to us.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: For clarification, I should like to ask Senator Frith a question, because, as usual, I am a little confused.

Senator Frith: I take it, Dr. Barootes, that you are not taking anything for this constant confusion. You could see a doctor about it.

Senator Barootes: This is just like a confessional booth. You mentioned to us the distinction between "postponement" and "blockade" in this instance.

Senator Frith: Yes, in any instance. It is a clear distinction.

Senator Barootes: Had this administration proposed this free trade deal in the first year of its administration, and had you decided, on your side of the house with your majority, to postpone—not to block, just to postpone—the bill until there was an election, would you regard that three or four years' postponement as obscene or as a blockade, or would it still be only a little postponement?

Senator Frith: I would not regard it as obscene. It would not be a blocking, because it would not be a voting against the legislation. It would still be a postponement. There is a big distinction, in my opinion. Senator Doyle just woke up. What did I get him on?

Senator Perrault: He was in the arms of Morpheus.

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: I came to a state of wakefulness when I heard what you said to Senator Barootes. That leaves me with the understanding—and you must correct me if I am wrong—

Senator Frith: Be sure I will, because probably you are wrong.

Senator Doyle: That leaves me with the understanding that no party, other than the Liberal Party, can ever govern this country comfortably so long as you choose to say, "We will postpone." It does not matter if the Conservative Party is returned, or the New Democratic Party is elected, or the Social Credit Party is revived and elected; not until the majority that your party holds—this partisan factor—has disappeared will it be possible for a government of this country to introduce legislation of any kind that might disturb your leader to the point where he asks the Senate to postpone it. The Senate, indeed, will postpone it and the government in exile will have prevailed.

Senator Frith: Senator Doyle asked me to correct him if he was wrong, and I take great pleasure in doing so, because he is.

Senator Perrault: He wants the Pulitzer Prize for fiction.

Senator Frith: I have to circle the word "comfortably". I do agree with Senator Doyle that it is not the duty of the Senate to make any government comfortable—Liberal, Conservative or otherwise.

I see the role of the Senate traditionally in this country, and in every country where there is a Senate, as being a bit of a nuisance to the government. The Liberals, being in the majority, perhaps have not been a sufficient nuisance to the government, although, as you know, there have been occasions when we were. I take Senator Doyle's point on that.

With regard to the rest of his comments, Senator Doyle is not to understand that every government, no matter what government, must please a capricious taste of the Liberal majority in the Senate—or a Conservative majority in the Senate, if it should come to that. That is not my proposition, nor any corollary to the proposition.

The answer to Senator Barootes was simply that there is no time fix on Sir John A.'s concept. There is no question that a postponement for three years is a very serious postponement, a much more serious postponement than one for a matter of months that arises, as Senator Barootes said, in the last year of a mandate. I accept the distinction. There is a judgment call to be made there, and whoever makes that decision has to take into account the fact that there is a difference.

● (1600)

However, that is an academic question in these circumstances, because the decision was made virtually in the last year of the mandate. But the facts that I have stated are not academic; this government never gave the Canadian people an undertaking, or even an indication, that it intended to bring forward such important legislation; and since the other fact is also sound in this case and is not academic, namely, that the Prime Minister rejected the concept of a bilateral Free Trade Agreement with the United States, the circumstances that were the basis—

Senator Barootes: Like price and wage controls?

Senator Perrault: There is quite a difference!

Senator Frith: The basis of Senator Barootes' question was a hypothesis and is of no help to us in this case at all.

Senator MacDonald: Well, then, Senator Frith, what is your basis for suggesting that, since the issue of free trade was not a matter in the campaign of 1984, any ruse or parliamentary trick is now quite legitimate, considering that it was not? What is your Canadian authority for that?

Senator Frith: Sit down and I will give it to you.

Senator MacDonald: Do you want to talk about the Parliament Act of Great Britain, or something else that has no application to us?

Senator Frith: But that is an academic question, too, because we are not dealing here with a ruse or a trick.

Senator Barootes: What about the price and wage controls in 1975—

Senator MacDonald: No, 1984.

Senator Frith: In 1984? These fellows have to be careful.

Senator MacDonald: You might answer that. You have been ducking that now about five times.

Senator Frith: If you two professors of history will get your dates straight and try to put a question together, I will try to deal with it.

Senator Perrault: You are obsessed with the past; that is all!

Senator Barootes: Dates are not as important as all that!

Hon. P. Michael Pitfield: Honourable senators, I wish to ask Senator Barootes a question, if he will permit me to ask it.

Senator Barootes: If I can answer it, you certainly may.

Senator Perrault: That is a challenge!

Senator Pitfield: As you know, I tend to favour the Free Trade Agreement, although I have been troubled by the way it has been brought forward. It would be helpful to me if you could tell me if there is any urgency to the passage of this agreement, other than that which the government has imposed upon itself by the manner in which it has gone about the negotiation of it.

Senator Barootes: I cannot answer for anyone but myself.

Senator Perrault: That is tough!

Senator Barootes: My answer is that there is urgency with this bill, not with the agreement.

You said, "Is there any urgency about the agreement?" The agreement is signed, sealed and delivered. It is a foreign treaty, a foreign agreement. All we are talking about now is a bill to implement the substance of that agreement. A deadline has been bilaterally imposed or agreed to between our American friends and this government. That deadline is presently January 2, 1989. That is my understanding.

On motion of Senator Perrault, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, September 7, 1988, at 2 p.m.

CRIMINAL CODE
FOOD AND DRUGS ACT
NARCOTIC CONTROL ACTBILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE
ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

THURSDAY, September 1st, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTY-FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-61, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, July 13, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

The Committee has examined Bill C 61, the Proceeds of Crime Bill, very carefully and has heard testimony from the Minister and his officials and from representatives of the Canadian Bar Association and the defence bar.

All members of the Committee strongly support the goals of this bill. We agree that there is a need for strong measures to deal with organized crime. The Committee does, however, have some concerns which it wishes to outline.

The first is the issue of dual criminality. The bill permits forfeiture of a person's property for certain named offences if the activity which produced the property took place elsewhere and would have constituted an offence if it had occurred in Canada. In theory, therefore, the activity could have been legal in the jurisdiction where it took place. For this reason, the bill has been characterized as lacking the requirement of dual criminality found in extradition proceedings.

Identical issues are raised by the new offence of laundering the proceeds of crime. It will become a criminal offence to launder property or proceeds obtained directly or indirectly as a result of an act or omission that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted one of the named offences.

A very strong argument can be made that to convict people of an offence, or to order their property forfeit, where the underlying activity was legal in the jurisdiction in which it occurred would be to violate section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms whereby the right to life, liberty and security of the person is guaranteed. We have difficulty in accepting that conviction in those circumstances would be considered to be in accord with the principles of fundamental justice required by the section.

The Criminal Code has long contained a provision (section 312) which makes it an offence to possess property obtained by crime and includes property which results from an act or omission that, if it had occurred in Canada, would have constituted an offence punishable by indictment. In other words, there is no requirement of dual criminality in this offence. Government officials have informed us that this part of the section has never been used. They argue that its existence is proof that the principle is accepted and, somewhat paradoxically, that the fact that no one has ever been charged is evidence that the lack of a dual criminality requirement in this bill will not be abused.

The Committee does not believe that this approach will be acceptable under the Charter should such a provision ever be used and its constitutionality challenged, whether the challenge is to a section of the Code that has been there for a considerable time or whether it is to a new provision introduced by this bill.

On the other hand, we accept that the problem may be more theoretical than real, given that the acts committed by the people targeted by the forfeiture provisions of this bill will, in virtually all cases, be illegal in the foreign jurisdictions where they took place.

The Committee also has concerns about the provision in the bill that permits forfeiture of proceeds for offences other than the one for which the person has been convicted. If a person is convicted of a named offence but it cannot be established that the property relates to that particular offence, the property can still be ordered forfeit if the court is satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the property is proceeds of crime.

The Committee appreciates that the lack of a provision of this type could result in a serious loophole and could jeopardize the attainment of the goals of the legislation. On the other hand, we feel that there is a lack of legislative direction as to how this provision should operate. Will an entirely new hearing be required to determine whether other crimes have taken place? How will it differ from a trial for those very offences? How can the court avoid prejudice to the offender when deciding the sentence for the original crime for which the person has been convicted after hearing evidence related to other criminal activity relevant to the forfeiture proceedings?

The Committee pursued two specific concerns with the Minister. First, that the offence of charging a criminal interest rate, commonly called loansharking, was omitted from the list of named offences. Secondly, that when applying for special search warrants or restraint orders under this bill, there is no requirement that the Attorney General notify the judge of any previous applications made in relation to the same individual. The committee notes that both the wiretap and the telewarrant sections of the Code contain such a notice requirement and we believe that its inclusion is equally important in the forfeiture context. We note as well that the Law Reform Commission of Canada in its Working Paper 30 on search and seizure recommended that such a requirement be added to the general search warrant sections of the Code. The Committee was informed by government officials that certain other provisions of Bill C-61 reflect recommendations of the Commission.

As a result of our representations, the Minister has agreed in principle with our representations and has undertaken to proceed as outlined in his letter as follows:

"The Honourable Joan B. Neiman
Chairman
The Standing Senate Committee
on Legal and Constitutional Affairs
Room 475-S
East Block
Ottawa, K1A 0A4

Dear Senator Neiman:

I have been informed by my officials that the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is interested in completing its review of Bill C-61 and recommending its adoption at third reading in an effort for it to receive Royal Assent this week but that, prior to completing your review of this bill, you would like my views with respect to possible future amendments to the provisions which the bill would add to the Criminal Code.

As I understand it, your Committee would like to add to the list of enterprise crime offences the offence of loansharking or criminal interest rate. Your Committee would also like to see the Criminal Code amended so that an application for a special search warrant and an application for a restraint order, as provided for under sections 420.12 and 420.13 respectively, require a statement as to any prior application for such warrant or order under these sections, of which the Attorney General has knowledge. With respect to this last amendment you are undoubtedly aware that a similar type of provision already exists in the Criminal Code in respect of an application for a wiretap authorization and a telewarrant application.

I am pleased to advise you and your Committee that I agree in principle with the amendments and, subject to a closer examination by my officials and in consultation with my provincial and territorial colleagues, will proceed with a view to the inclusion of the amendments in the Criminal Code at an early date.

With kindest regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

Ray Hnatyshyn"

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THE SENATE

Wednesday, September 7, 1988

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE HONOURABLE FRED A. McGRAND

TRIBUTES

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it was just seven months ago that we paid tribute to our colleague, Senator McGrand, on the occasion of his retirement from this chamber. I was saddened on the weekend, as I am sure all honourable senators were, to hear the news of his passing at the age of 93.

As a young physician, Senator McGrand began his public life in municipal politics in the province of New Brunswick more than 60 years ago. He later became a member of the New Brunswick Legislature and of the cabinet in that province. For more than 32 years he served in this chamber, having been appointed here in 1955 by Prime Minister St. Laurent.

A few months ago I referred to the brilliant report entitled "Child at Risk", published some years ago by the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science chaired by Senator McGrand. It was an exceedingly sensitive and interesting piece of work on a most complex subject. The report, although published some years ago, is still very relevant to any consideration of policy on that subject.

Honourable senators, Senator McGrand was one whose career enhanced the reputation of this place and added lustre to the reputation of Parliament, politics and public life. I and my colleagues in the government are saddened by his passing. Parliament and the country are better for his contribution to public life.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as Senator Murray has pointed out, it was only earlier this year that we paid tribute to Senator McGrand on his resignation from the Senate. Tributes were paid in this chamber on February 3, 1988. Shortly after that, Senator Petten, Senator McElman and I had an opportunity to visit Senator McGrand at the nursing home, where we presented to him, on behalf of our caucus, a memento intended to convey to him a sense of admiration and appreciation for his association with us over the years. It was, in a sense, a joyous occasion because of the excellent mood of Senator McGrand, who was accompanied by his wife. So it is particularly sad today to recall that happy occasion.

When the tributes were paid to Senator McGrand earlier this year in this chamber, Senator McElman, a fellow New Brunswicker, spoke eloquently of the late Senator McGrand's service to this country: as a physician; as a councillor in Queen's County in the 1930s; as a provincial legislator in the 1930s, '40s and '50s; and of course, as Senator Murray pointed out, as a member of this chamber since 1955. As Senator McElman mentioned in February, Fred McGrand served the public for more than 60 years. Although he could have lived comfortably and successfully by devoting his time to his medical practice, Fred McGrand could not deny a call to serve his fellow men, not only as a doctor but also as a legislator.

What made the late Senator McGrand special was that, through his participation in the political system, he consistently attempted to address the problems he encountered in his medical practice. That was evident during his eight years as New Brunswick's Minister of Health and Social Services. It was just as evident upon his call to the Senate.

In his maiden speech on May 3, 1956 on an inquiry launched by Senator Croll on the penal system, Fred McGrand laid the groundwork for the 1980 report of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, entitled "Child at Risk". In that maiden speech more than 30 years ago, Senator McGrand inquired into the causes of crime, wondered aloud about the effect of childhood influences, spoke of "parental delinquency, ignorance, neglect, lack of understanding", and, decades before it became a fashionable subject, warned of the effect on children of violence on television.

When "Child at Risk" entered the public domain in 1980, it was seen as fresh, innovative, and perhaps even radical. But the fact of the matter is that in large measure it had its roots in the concerns that Fred McGrand was attempting to address at least 25 years earlier. That is the mark of a true visionary—a pioneer. Though many members of this chamber participated in the hearings of that committee, though many worked on the report itself, all of us recognized that "Child at Risk" was Fred McGrand's creation, and in a very real sense it was a report that was decades in the making.

In his maiden speech, Senator McGrand stated:

All happiness has its roots in kindness.

The kindness that Frederic Addison McGrand extended over his years as a physician and legislator touched and brought happiness to countless Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with the splendid tributes that have been paid by the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

In 1955, the government decided to do something about the Senate, which then had been dormant for too long. They appointed Donald Cameron, Harold Connolly, Elsie Inman, Donald Smith, Hartland Molson, Fred McGrand and me, and they told us to get over here and do our stuff. That was 33 years ago, in our younger days.

Senators Harold Connolly, Smith, McGrand and I had considerable political experience. As a group, we began to give the Senate new life by invigorating it and beginning independent studies.

Foremost among us was Fred McGrand. He had a social sense that was unmatched in the Senate. We had grown up with him when he was Minister of Health and Welfare in New Brunswick; because of his lengthy term in office he understood the problems of people.

● (1410)

Senator McGrand was a compassionate and caring man. It must never be forgotten that he was the driving force behind the Senate report entitled "Child at Risk", a study about childhood experiences as causes of criminal behaviour in adult life. He paid particular attention to children and to disabled people. He was a member of the Special Committee of the Senate on Poverty; he was a member of the Special Committee of the Senate on Aging; and he was a member of the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies. Moreover, when Senator McGrand was a member of a committee he attended its meetings, he did the necessary work and prepared himself for the next day.

Honourable senators, 93 years, even by my calculation, is a long time. Senator McGrand's was a lifetime of service. He spent 32 consecutive years in the Senate. I am told that he was one of the last doctors to use a horse and buggy to make rural house calls. He brought to the Senate qualities of compassion and dedication to humanity which enriched his political life. He has been referred to as a working senator and as a trail-blazing senator. Both appellations fit him well. Senator McGrand lived a distinguished life, with grace. I extend to his family my sincere sympathy.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I should also like to add a few words of tribute to the late Senator McGrand. I came to the Senate on the same day as 12 others—the largest group that had ever been appointed at one time to the Senate. Those appointments were made by the Honourable Louis St. Laurent. It was an interesting group in that, as Senator Croll has said, it made some changes. The group included one Progressive Conservative who was a former member of the House of Commons, John T. Hackett. It included one senator from Moncton, Calixte Savoie, who listed himself as having no political affiliation. The group also included me, and I was listed as an independent. I do not think there had ever been such a mixed bag appointed to the Senate at any time before that, quite apart from its size.

Senator McGrand, as we all know, made a vast contribution to this chamber. He was one of the quiet ones. He did not often make his presence known, but when he did he showed his devotion to humanity, to the country and, particularly, to children. He was a courteous and a generous, unselfish man. In his 32 years in this chamber he made a great contribution not only to this chamber but to his country. We shall all miss him very much.

I should like to extend my sympathy to his wife and daughter.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of those who have spoken in paying tribute to the late Senator Fred McGrand.

I first met Senator McGrand when I took my seat in this place in 1968. Over the years I came to know him as a fine, Christian gentleman. We resided in the same neighbourhood for some 15 years. On many occasions during the drive from Parliament Hill to his home we would have spirited discussions, from which I benefited greatly.

As has been stated, he was well-known and highly respected not only in his native province of New Brunswick but in all of Canada and, after the publication of his report entitled "Child at Risk", in many countries of the world. I say "his report" because, in our drives back and forth between his home and the Hill, he had discussed with me for many years his ambition to have a committee study this subject. I am not taking away from the others associated with the committee, but I think it should be called "his report".

In his passing, Canada has lost one of its most outstanding sons. Those of us who knew Senator McGrand will remember him as a dedicated and conscientious member of this chamber. I wish to express my most sincere sympathy to his wife May, his daughter Doris, his sister Inez, and his grandsons.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I too wish to associate myself with the remarks that have been made in tribute to the late Fred McGrand. As the Leader of the Government has said, it was only seven months ago that we spoke in this chamber in paying tribute to Fred McGrand on the occasion of his retirement from the Senate. We spoke with admiration of his approximately 60 years of public service to the people of Canada, particularly his service to the people of New Brunswick as a municipal councillor and warden, as a long-time member of the provincial legislature, as Speaker of that legislature, as provincial Minister of Health and Social Services, and as a most active and responsible member of the Senate of Canada.

Senator McGrand was the last surviving member of the cabinet of the McNair administration in New Brunswick. That recalls to one's mind that era. As a side note, I might say that another distinguished and highly respected member of that cabinet was the late Honourable W. Stafford Anderson, who was a very close friend of Senator McGrand's and the father of our colleague, Senator Margaret Anderson.

In all of those capacities, Fred McGrand served with dedication, honour and integrity of the highest order. As a practising medical doctor in rural New Brunswick he earned the lasting respect and appreciation of countless citizens of that province. I suggest that it should not be our purpose today to speak with sadness, but rather in celebration—with joy and thanksgiving.

ing—of the lifetime of service of Fred McGrand. We, in the Senate, were privileged to have him with us, to benefit from his hard work and his years of valued knowledge and experience.

I am sure those many senators who came to know Fred McGrand well appreciated his fine and dry sense of humour. I should like to read to you one brief paragraph from a letter I received from him following the tributes that were paid to him at the time of his retirement in February. Those who knew Fred McGrand well would appreciate the humour of it. He was speaking of the tributes that had been paid here. In his letter addressed to me he said:

● (1420)

Thank you very much for the great tribute you paid to me in the Senate at the time of my retirement. Most people pass away and never get to hear how great they really were!

That is typical of the dry humour of Fred McGrand that I came to appreciate so much.

As a fellow New Brunswicker, I, too, should like to extend condolences to Mrs. McGrand and the other members of the family in their bereavement.

REPRESENTATIVES OF L'ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONALE DES PARLEMENTAIRES DE LANGUE FRANÇAISE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, before continuing the proceedings, I would like to draw your attention to the presence in our Gallery of representatives of L'Association internationale des parlementaires de langue française who are having a study session here in Ottawa. The delegates visiting us in the Senate represent twenty-five parliaments in twenty-five countries. They are meeting in Ottawa to discuss the problems of their association.

Allow me to introduce the members of the executive and my collaborators: Mr. Daouda Sow, speaker of the National Assembly of Senegal, Mr. Jacques Legendre of the National Assembly of France, who is Parliamentary Secretary General of our Association, Mr. Pierre Lorrain, speaker of the National Assembly of Quebec, Mr. André Baudson representing Belgium's French-speaking community and President Kalume, Speaker of the Executive Council of Zaire.

My dear colleagues, welcome to Ottawa.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, with the delegates of the ad hoc committee of L'Association internationale des parlementaires de langue française, I had the privilege of spending two days in the beautiful region of Charlevoix. Our Speaker probably selected the location himself as our initial meeting place.

I will also be with them during their current meetings in which they are analyzing the follow-up of the Francophone Summit in Quebec City. I would also like to say how delighted we are to have them with us, and I wish them every success.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I shall, if I may, emphasize what was said by our Speaker and by our colleague, Senator Flynn. I want to thank them for very appropriately drawing our attention to the presence of parliamentarians from the "Francophonie", the presence of fellow parliamentarians, and especially colleagues, from twenty-five countries. We are truly honoured by the presence of such a distinguished group.

QUESTION PERIOD

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Government.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Some Hon. Senators: Ha, ha!

An Hon. Senator: That's a switch.

Senator Flynn: I don't know how senators can find the question funny before I put it. It is assumed that I will show my usual sense of humour, but that may not be the case.

In view of the fact that our sittings this week have begun on Wednesday, that it appears we have a full order paper, and especially in view of the fact that the debate on the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement will begin today, can the deputy leader tell us whether we will be sitting on Friday of this week and what the program will be for next week?

It is my understanding that the Leader of the Government, the sponsor of the bill dealing with free trade, will speak today and that he will be followed by the Leader of the Opposition, whose speech everyone is anticipating with great impatience.

Can the Deputy Leader of the Government assist us by telling us where we stand and when we can expect to end our anxiety?

Senator Perrault: You should be anxious over there.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: So anxious and impatient that Senator Doody could not give you an appointment to answer the question personally.

Senator Roblin: We thought you would like to hear the answer.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I fully respect the intent of Senator Flynn's question. He wants some idea of what the order of business will be for this week, next week and beyond, if possible.

We have a number of items on the order paper. We will have second reading of at least three bills, one of which deals with the Free Trade Agreement. The other side and I have not discussed plans for sitting on that debate. I understand that quite a few senators on this side are anxious to participate, and I am sure there are quite a few on the other side. It may well be necessary to sit on Friday and Monday to move the debate along. That will depend on how many speakers there are each day and how quickly we want to get the bill into committee. Obviously, on this side we are quite anxious to see it move along. It has been the subject of intense debate all across the country for some time. It has been in the other place for some time. The agreement has been before the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs for quite a long time and has received extensive study there. We tried to have the bill pre-studied as well, but we encountered a certain lack of enthusiasm for that prospect from those on the other side of the chamber.

So we shall have to decide how much time the collective Senate thinks it necessary to expend on second reading. To that end, I look forward to having a conversation with Senator Frith, my counterpart, so that we can make that decision. As of now, it is entirely open. It may well be that we shall have to sit on Friday, Monday and beyond in order to complete second reading of this bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, although this is Question Period, may I make a comment? I do want to make it clear and recall to my colleagues in the Senate that two or three summers ago we made it clear—and we want to make it clear now—that although we on this side have a majority that means we can determine adjournments of the Senate, nevertheless, as long as the government has business we shall be here. If that requires sitting on Mondays and Fridays, we shall do so.

I think it would be prudent for Senator Doody and me to discuss this, as he has suggested, to ensure that there are speakers who will speak on Mondays and Fridays. If there is business before the Senate and senators wish to speak on a Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday, we believe we should be here.

Senator Flynn: The problem with arranging for speakers on Mondays and Fridays is that it depends on what the Leader of the Opposition is going to say. I hope that will be this afternoon.

Senator Petten: Question!

Senator Flynn: I am wondering if the deputy leader has been told whether the Leader of the Opposition is going to speak this afternoon. If his speech is the one that he has given outside this chamber, then it seems to me that the debate will be rather useless. In any case, does the Deputy Leader of the Government know if we shall hear the position of the opposition this afternoon?

Senator Guay: Make sure you are present when he speaks!

Senator Flynn: As usual.

Senator Doody: I am quite flattered, but I cannot answer for the honourable gentleman opposite. I certainly look forward to hearing from him this afternoon, but I have no knowledge of whether or not I shall have that pleasure.

Senator Flynn: I hope he has!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I may answer the question—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I have never known Senator Flynn to wait with impatience for me to speak, but I can tell him that I shall not be speaking today.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator MacEachen: I intend to speak next week—

Senator Flynn: Next week!

Senator MacEachen: —after all of the Conservative senators about whom we have read in the press have spoken and we have some sense of what it is that it is required to rebut, if anything.

Senator Flynn: Is that serious?

Senator MacEachen: Of course it is.

Senator Flynn: Are you laughing at us?

Senator MacEachen: No, I am not laughing.

Senator Flynn: Are you laughing at the Senate?

Senator Olson: No, just you.

Senator Flynn: Just me?

Senator Frith: So far.

Senator Olson: It is not a serious question. That is why we are laughing.

Senator Flynn: I am not speaking about my question; I am speaking about the comments made. You should have understood that. You were better a few years ago. In any event, I do not think Senator MacEachen is serious when he says he will adjourn the debate until next week.

Senator Frith: He did not say that.

Senator Flynn: He said that he will wait to hear what the speakers from our side have to say. What is important is to know where the opposition stands.

● (1440)

Senator Steuart: You'll find out.

Senator Flynn: When shall we find out? That is the question I have in my mind. If Senator MacEachen is simply going to remain silent and offer a filibuster of silence, I think we should know and I think we should act accordingly.

Senator Frith: Well, honourable senators, we have no intention of filibustering.

Senator Flynn: By silence.

Senator Frith: By silence or any form thereof. I have discussed it with Senator Doody.

Senator Flynn: When?

Senator Frith: Last week. We have agreed that we would—

Senator Barootes: Delay, delay, delay!

Senator Frith: Aren't you prepared to accept the responsibility for that nattering with which you just came forward, Senator Barootes?

Senator Barootes: I made my comment.

Senator Frith: You made your comment, yes, with your customary eloquence and articulation.

Senator Doody and I discussed it. We will deal with second reading debate as we would with any bill, certainly any important bill such as this is. We expect to have speeches every day, probably one on each side each day, at least—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: —and deal with the other business that Senator Doody has referred to, but I can say that there will be no undue delay, no filibustering. We mean to participate in this debate on second reading until all—

Senator Murray: That is not what you said on Thursday in this house.

Senator Frith: What did I say on Thursday?

Senator Murray: I will read it back to you.

Senator Frith: Please do. I am glad of this opportunity. If I said anything last Thursday that created the impression that there would be anything but normal debate at second reading, with speakers—

Senator Flynn: Blocking.

Senator Frith: —on each side, then that was a wrong impression, because we intend to put up speakers. I mean to discuss this with Senator Doody. Senator Petten will discuss with his counterpart, Senator Phillips, as to the order of speakers. We are developing a list. I understand the government has a list. I hate to disappoint the Leader of the Government or his impatient colleagues, but we have no intention of filibustering the debate on this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: That is not what you said.

Senator Steuart: All the shouting is from that side.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Perhaps I am not entirely in accord with parliamentary procedure as conducted in the other place—

Senator Frith: None of us has been, Duff. That's all right.

Senator Roblin: I am sure that I have been within the ambit permitted to speakers in this house. I must say that I am anxious to know from the opposition who is going to speak for them. I recall that over the past few months—

Senator Frith: As many as wish to.

Senator Roblin: —there has been a wide variety of statements by the Leader of the Opposition and his colleague in the other place as to what the Liberal Party in the Senate is going to do with this bill. The reason I am anxious to hear—

Senator Frith: Why don't we get at the bill? If you want to talk about not getting at it or getting at it, why don't we deal with it?

Senator Olson: What is the question?

Senator Roblin: Are you finished?

Senator Frith: No, only temporarily.

Senator Roblin: Restrain yourself temporarily, for a minute or two.

Senator Frith: I give no undertaking to do that.

Senator Roblin: The country has an interest in what is going on in this chamber today.

Senator Frith: Let's get at it!

Senator Roblin: The interest of the country, I suggest, is to know what the Liberal Party in the Senate is going to do with respect to this bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: Why don't you sit down and let us get at it?

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Flynn: You said you wanted to adjourn the debate!

Senator Roblin: We will get at it when the Leader of the Opposition deigns to tell us what his policy is going to be. It seems to me that we shall be in a very anomalous situation and questions will certainly be raised in the minds of the general public as to what is going on in this house, when we find that the most important bill we are to consider, according to members opposite, which will be introduced this afternoon by the Leader of the Government, will not be responded to, at least in the first instance, by the Leader of the Opposition. Who, then, is going to speak and tell us what the Liberals in this house are going to do? I think the country is entitled to know that.

Some Hon. Senators: Order, order!

Senator Roblin: And I say to my honourable friend that he should speak.

Senator Molgat: Order, order! Come on!

Senator Olson: What kind of a bluff is this?

Senator Flynn: Is that all you have to say?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order, order!

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF ACID RAIN ON MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCTION IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I have a genuine question.

Senator Frith: Start again, Dan. I just want to be sure we hear what you are saying.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Hays: This arises out of a meeting this morning of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The witness was Mr. Michael Herman, a maple syrup producer in the province of Quebec and an activist for that industry. I must say that we owe thanks to Senators Spivak and Fairbairn for ensuring that this witness was given the opportunity to be heard by the committee, because he informed me for the first time of the serious and grave situation faced by maple syrup producers in the province of Quebec as a consequence of acid rain. If I understand correctly from the brief hearing we had, there is little indication that positive action will be taken to address this serious problem.

My question to the Leader of the Government is: Are there any plans for an announcement by the federal government to deal with this serious problem?

To give honourable senators some idea of the magnitude of the problem, we were told that in Quebec alone 32 million pounds of maple syrup were produced last year and that something has to be done immediately, preferably this year. In fact, the witness indicated that it is imperative that it be done this year. He said that they need a program worth some $30 million to provide fertilizer for the trees in association with a base of some kind, such as limestone, to neutralize the effects of the acid. Something must be done to avoid much worse damage to that industry.

My question, then, is: Are there any planned announcements? If that is not the case, are there ongoing discussions with the Province of Quebec and other provincial governments involved that we can expect will result in such an announcement in the near future?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if the honourable senator is suggesting that not much action has been taken domestically on the problem of acid rain, he is incorrect. Over the past four years the government has reached agreements with a number of Canadian provinces with a view to controlling and reducing emissions according to a set timetable. The next step will be to negotiate a treaty with our neighbours to the south, who are responsible for so much of this. I am confident that we will be able to do this—even more confident in view of the forthright positions being taken now by the two candidates for the presidency of the United States, Governor Dukakis and Vice-President Bush.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I had hoped the Leader of the Government would indicate that he would find out whether an announcement is planned and whether there are ongoing discussions which he could tell us about in light of the announcement by Mr. Bush and, of course, the position of Mr. Dukakis, who comes from a state much affected by acid rain. I must say that until I heard the witness this morning I was generally in accord with the kind of answer the minister has just given us, that things are under way and that in due course we shall have some positive things to say about how we are going to deal with this problem. However, as a result of what I heard this morning I think the problem has an immediacy that makes it fair to ask this question at this time.

Is there something that you, Mr. Minister, can tell us may happen this year to deal with this serious symptom we now see and for the treatment of which we have some pretty good ideas? The fact of the matter is that something must be done this year. Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicate to me that he will at least look into this and, if there is no planned announcement, share with us whether or not there are ongoing discussions that might result in an early announcement for a program to deal with this problem this year?

• (1450)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I understand that, for reasons of its own, the Government of New Brunswick has recently imposed a moratorium on granting licences for maple sugar production. Discussions are going on. I think my honourable friend is asking whether a program of assistance is being developed for maple sugar producers in view of the effects of acid rain. That is a matter I would have to inquire into and report back on at a later date.

ENERGY

TAR SANDS PROCESSING PLANT—FORT McMURRAY, ALBERTA—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the government has made a number of other announcements regarding such things as the upgrader and Hibernia, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate advise us whether or not the government is now giving active and serious consideration to making an announcement about its participation in the so-called OSLO project near Fort McMurray, Alberta, which is a tar sands processing plant?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the last information I had on this matter was that federal and Alberta officials were meeting with the OSLO sponsors to present their latest financing proposal for the plant. I understand that the sponsors are now reviewing this proposal and are expected to respond within the next 10 days or so. Until they have done so, I think it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the negotiations.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has laid it out in a slightly different way from what I was led to understand. Has the government put forward an alternative proposal to the sponsors? I think the sponsors have put an alternative proposal to the federal government and are awaiting an announcement of approval from them. If it is the other way around, that is a new twist.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my understanding as of August 30 is that another financing proposal was developed and presented by the governments concerned and that the sponsors are now reviewing this proposal.

Senator Olson: When you say "by the governments concerned", was there agreement between the two levels of government on an alternative proposal that was put to the private sector sponsors?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, there must have been. The proposal was put to the sponsors, as I understand it, jointly by the Government of Alberta and ourselves.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—PUBLIC HEARINGS ON IMPACT ON FISHERIES OF PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on June 14 the government announced that as a result of its invitation proposals had been received concerning the construction of a fixed crossing in Northumberland Strait between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It has been almost three months since those proposals were received. I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether public hearings on the environmental implications of this proposed fixed crossing for the fishing industry in Northumberland Strait will be initiated by the government before the government enters into a contract for the construction of any fixed crossing.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, would it be unreasonable to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to obtain an answer? This is a matter of great concern to the fishermen of both Prince Edward Island and the mainland. If there are to be public hearings, an announcement to that effect would help to alleviate their great concern. I urge the minister to give consideration to obtaining that information.

Senator Murray: I shall do so, honourable senators.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING— NUMBER AND NATURE OF PROPOSALS—ANNOUNCEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators, regarding the fixed link. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate able to say how many proposals have been presented so far to the government? I believe there have been six or seven—or has there been only one proposal for a tunnel, and is the government considering the tunnel at all?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I believe I placed that information before the Senate on a previous occasion. I shall make inquiries to ascertain what further information may now be available.

Senator Bonnell: I have a further question, honourable senators. The Prime Minister of Canada has gone to the Northwest Territories and has made an announcement to our native peoples. I wonder if he might come to the cradle of Confederation and make an announcement within a few days about the fixed link, because some years ago, I believe in 1958 or 1968, our good friend of the Maritimes, John George Diefenbaker, travelled there and made an announcement, and we are still waiting for the results of that announcement to take place. I am wondering if we might have another announcement within a few days in Prince Edward Island concerning the fixed link.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall convey Senator Bonnell's invitation to the Prime Minister.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF ACID RAIN ON MAPLE SYRUP PRODUCTION— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: I have one supplementary question to that of Senator Hays concerning the maple syrup industry in Canada. Is the Leader of the Government in the Senate able to say whether, in fact, the Government of Canada is considering a program, either jointly with the provinces or federally, to supply fertilizer or lime to the maple sugar industry paid for either wholly by the federal government or on a cost-shared basis with the provinces to be used by the industry at its own expense?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have no idea whether such a program is now being considered. As the minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, I can tell the honourable senator that there has been a phenomenal increase in applications to ACOA for assistance from this sector. This is partly, I believe, because of the dreadful effects of acid rain on industry in Quebec and Ontario. I can also tell the honourable senator that ACOA has responded very positively to this interest on the part of maple sugar producers and potential producers in our region.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, that is fine for the maple sugar producers who can apply under ACOA, but the greatest maple sugar producing province of this country is Quebec. As I understand it, within five years that industry will have been destroyed, and there will be no more maple sugar industry left in the province of Quebec unless something is done now.

Many of the maple sugar producers have gone out of business. Fifty per cent of their trees are now dead or dying, and the production of the other half of the producers is down 50 per cent. It is a serious industry problem in the province of Quebec. Is there any help for them through some other program like ACOA?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the question that the honourable senator put was whether there is a federal or federal-provincial program being developed or considered to supply fertilizer to maple sugar producers. As I have told him, I do not know the answer to that question. I shall inquire as to what may be under consideration at this time.

THE ENVIRONMENT

GOVERNMENT INVENTORY OF PCB STORAGE SITES AND GUIDELINES FOR STORAGE AND DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the federal government has an inventory of all PCB sites used for storage and whether it truly has a program of national guidelines or standards for the storage and disposal of PCBs.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the answer to the second part of the question is yes. The answer to the first part of the question is that I believe a news conference was to have been held at 2:30 this afternoon involving, among others, the federal Minister of the Environment, Mr. McMillan. I have no doubt that he will have addressed that question at his news conference or, in any case, shortly thereafter.

Senator Frith: Addressed it or answered it?

Senator Murray: If there is further information the honourable senator requires, I shall make inquiries of my colleague.

● (1500)

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government in the Senate please table for the record in the Senate the national guidelines or standards for the storage and disposal of PCBs?

Senator Murray: Yes, I shall do so, honourable senators.

ST-BASILE-LE-GRAND PCB STORAGE SITE—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF FIRE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Is the Government of Canada considering giving any financial assistance to the victims of the fire at the PCB storage facility in St-Basile-le-Grand?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I seem to recall that my colleagues in the Government of Quebec made available to the victims of that fire some assistance under the existing programs, such as disaster relief and that kind of thing. However, I shall obtain a prepared statement on that matter for my colleague as well.

TRANSPORT

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN THROUGH PORT OF CHURCHILL, MANITOBA

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, last week the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate answered a question of mine and a question of Senator Molgat's pertaining to the shipment of grain through the Port of Churchill. His answer stated that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board had some doubts as to the possibility of grain being shipped through that port.

Honourable senators, we happen to know that it is very beneficial, economically, to western farmers to ship grain through the Port of Churchill. I therefore repeat my question of last Wednesday, which is: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate make a representation to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, at the cabinet level, respecting the possibility of having some grain shipped through the Port of Churchill? I realize the answer I received last week was that, because this may be a weak crop year, there may not be any grain available. Notwithstanding that, I hope some consideration will be given to shipping grain through the Port of Churchill, thereby benefiting western farmers.

I therefore reiterate my question of last week and ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether or not he has yet had time to make representations to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, on behalf of both Manitoba and Saskatchewan in this matter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have conveyed Senator Guay's representations to my colleague, Mr. Mayer, who reminds me, of course, that the minister does not direct the Canadian Wheat Board on matters of this kind.

Senator Guay: I must say to the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that, while the minister responsible for the Wheat Board does not direct the Wheat Board, he can make strong suggestions to that board pertaining to grain deliveries being made to Churchill. I happen to know that he is the minister who names the members of that board. In fact, he has a great deal to say about who will and who will not serve on that board. Indeed, some new members will shortly be appointed to that board and I happen to know who they are, although I do not intend to name anyone at this time.

I am sure, therefore, that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, as a cabinet colleague of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, could put in a good word for the Port of Churchill in the interests of having some grain shipped through that port.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Mr. Mayer can do what I have done, which is to pass on Senator Guay's representations to those responsible.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN CIRCUIT BOARDS BY UNITED STATES CUSTOMS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a few days ago Senator Gigantès requested an answer to his question of July 5 relative to the treatment of Canadian circuit boards by United States customs. I would say to the honourable senator that an answer to that question was given on August 16 and in the Debates of the Senate of that date, Senator Gigantès will find the written answer to his question.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Thank you, sir.

CRIMINAL CODE
FOOD AND DRUGS ACT
NARCOTIC CONTROL ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the third reading of Bill C-61, to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

TAX COURT OF CANADA ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly, seconded by the Honourable Senator Balfour, for the second reading of the Bill C-146, An Act to amend the Tax Court of Canada Act and other Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Stanbury).

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, Bill C-146, to amend the Tax Court of Canada Act, is an important bill, and, in my opinion, Senator Kelly, in his speech, did an excellent job of explaining the concept behind the bill and the implementation of that concept. I do not intend to speak at any length about this measure, because I assume the bill will be referred to committee. However, there are a number of matters which I think should be drawn to the attention of honourable senators.

Bill C-146 calls for a division of tax jurisdiction between informal, or lesser tax cases, and more important cases involving larger amounts. Concern has been expressed with respect to the shifting of the 18 judges attached to that court between the hearings of formal and informal applications. It is not at all clear from the legislation how the work will be assigned to those judges, and I think that matter needs to be examined carefully by the committee.

It is said that this court is expected to become Canada's centre of expertise in the field of income tax appeals. Of course, the decisions of the court on informal cases will not create any precedents, but the appeals from those cases will go to the Federal Court of Appeal. With respect to the more formal procedure, I assume that the decisions of the Tax Court will indeed create precedents, and again the appeals from those cases will be heard by the Federal Court of Appeal. I think it needs to be clarified how the Tax Court will become the centre of expertise, if all appeals from that court go to the Federal Court of Canada and, further, if the decisions in approximately 70 per cent of the cases heard by that court do not create precedents for future decisions.

Another matter I think needs to be explored is the fact that the Attorney General is the only one with the right to invoke the formal or more expensive procedure in test cases. Honourable senators, that is understandable if the case affects other taxpayers. However, where the case is one affecting the assessment of a taxpayer in future years, then surely it should be possible for that taxpayer to invoke the formal procedure and to appeal to the Federal Court of Canada.

Another matter that needs to be clarified was raised by Senator Frith and answered briefly by Senator Kelly; that is the question of costs. Senator Kelly's explanation of the matter sounded good to me; it sounded as though the government intended to pay the costs in any event. However, I would refer honourable senators to subclause 18.11(6) of the bill:

(6) The Court may, on making an order under subsection (1), other than an order granting an application pursuant to subsection (2) or (3), order that all reasonable and proper costs of the appellant be borne by Her Majesty in right of Canada.

• (1510)

Clause 18.26 deals with the costs of appeals, and says in part:

... or increases the amount of loss in issue, as the case may be, by more than one half, the Court may award costs to the appellant in accordance with the rules of Court.

I would not want honourable senators to go away with the thought that the government is going to pay the costs in all cases, as perhaps one might have assumed from the discussion on this bill at the last sitting of the Senate.

I assume that Senator Kelly will move that the bill go to the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Kelly, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations) moved the second reading of Bill C-130, to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

He said: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: Not yet!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, which Bill C-130 would implement, is one of the definitive achievements of the Mulroney government in its first mandate. Free trade, tax reform, constitutional reform, a national child care program, new regional development policies, strengthened defence and international commitments are the hallmarks of our first mandate. They give effect to the mandate for national reconciliation, economic renewal, social justice and constructive internationalism that Brian Mulroney sought and received from the Canadian voters in September of 1984.

Each of these initiatives—free trade, tax reform, constitutional reform, child care, regional development, national defence—is part of a whole. Together they provide the basic policy foundation which will let the Canadian people master rapidly changing circumstances in the world and build the kind of Canadian society that they want for themselves and their children.

Five months ago, speaking of this Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, Professor Richard Lipsey and Mr. Robert York, on behalf of the C.D. Howe Institute, assessed the agreement in these words:

Looked at from overseas—from the aspect of those groups of countries that have struggled over the past three decades to get as much as possible out of their numerous regional trade-liberalizing pacts—the Agreement is a stunning achievement. Canadians worry that it did not achieve enough. To have achieved two-thirds of what the Canadian and U.S. negotiators accomplished in 18 short months would have been regarded as pathbreaking by the negotiators of virtually all other regional trade-liberalizing arrangements. As late as the summer of 1987, the European trade expert Victoria Curzon Price was warning Canada's negotiators that they might be trying for too much. In her view, they certainly were trying for far more trade liberalization than any other regional agreement had achieved over decades, let alone in the first round of negotiations. Yet, by October of that year, we knew that they had succeeded in doing what Curzon Price worried might be beyond their capacities.

Canada's negotiators possibly could have done even more. By the world's standards, however, to turn down the Agreement on the grounds that it does not do enough to increase market access or make that access more secure is to let the best be the enemy of the very good.

Honourable senators, I intend to speak to this legislation, Bill C-130, to the agreement it implements, and, finally, I wish to address the role of the Senate in the Canadian parliamentary system and our duty, as I see it, on this bill.

When it comes to trade policy, the Senate, of course, is in very familiar territory. In 1972 the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs presented a report on our trade with Japan. In 1973 the committee presented a report on trade with the European Economic Community. In 1978 and again in 1982 the committee on Foreign Affairs presented reports on Canada's trade relations with the United States.

In preparing its 1978 report, the committee held 44 hearings and heard 110 witnesses. In preparing its 1982 report the committee held 23 hearings and heard 54 witnesses. As well, it travelled to Washington and conducted meetings there involving 31 individuals. In short, the committee undertook its work with the diligence and thoroughness for which the Foreign Affairs Committee is known and which reflects the finest traditions of this chamber.

In its 1978 report the committee recommended that Canadians consider seriously the option of bilateral free trade with the United States. Upon further study and reflection, the committee, in its 1982 recommendations, stated:

The committee therefore reaffirms the conclusion reached in (its 1978) report that the desired restructuring, growth and competitiveness of Canadian industry can best be achieved by the negotiation of a bilateral Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

I remind honourable senators that the committee's concern then was for a world-class industrial base in this country and a world-class competitive Canadian economy. The committee recognized then, as the government recognizes now, that that can only be achieved by access to a larger market, and that that market is next door to us.

I also want to remind the Senate that the committee—our Foreign Affairs Committee—specifically addressed the traditional Canadian concern about our sovereignty arising from Canada-U.S. free trade. The committee report reads as follows:

● (1520)

The committee concludes that the widespread fears among Canadians that bilateral free trade with the United States would lead to an erosion of Canadian sovereignty or eventual political integration are based on misconceptions and a lack of facts as to what constitutes a free trade area.

No one can deny that Canada's prosperity and standard of living are dependent to a very great extent on U.S. markets . . . but to jump from this to the conclusion that the removal of the remaining tariffs and non-tariff barriers would lead to political integration with the United States is totally unwarranted by the facts.

The committee went on to say:

In the committee's opinion a far more potent threat to Canada's political and social strength would come from a continued weakening of its industrial performance and a decline in its economic stability in the face of the challenge of the 1980's and 1990's. It is precisely at the strengthening of the national fabric, both political and economic, that a Canada-U.S. free trade arrangement is aimed.

Honourable senators, happily, we still have with us quite a number of colleagues on the other side of the house who signed the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee reports in 1978 and again in 1982 recommending bilateral free trade with the United States and debunking the notion that there was any threat to our sovereignty implied in such an agreement. Happily, many of those senators opposite are still with us—

Senator Frith: "Happily"; who's happy?

Senator Murray: —and we look forward to hearing them in the course of this debate. Let me mention a few of them. Senator Croll, Senator Hastings, Senator Lang, Senator McElman, Senator Petten, Senator Riel, Senator Sparrow all signed the report of June 1978. As for the report of March 1982, which I signed along with colleagues, I see the names of distinguished senators such as Senator Bosa, now the acting chairman—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Nurgitz: Good for you, Peter.

Senator Murray: —Senator Buckwold, Senator Graham, who is now the campaign chairman of the Liberal Party, Senator Haidasz—

Senator Nurgitz: I told you to stop writing your name, Stanley!

Senator Murray:—Senator Hicks, Senator Langlois, Senator McElman, Senator Molgat, Senator Molson, Senator Neiman, Senator Riel, Senator Rizzuto—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Nurgitz: A great Canadian.

Senator Murray:—And Senator Thompson. The other senators who served included Senator Hastings, Senator Lang and Senator Stanbury.

Senator Haidasz: Who's left?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we look forward to hearing the views of the senators who signed those reports in 1978 and 1982 as to the agreement that is now before us.

I know that the Free Trade Agreement that was negotiated between—

Hon. Gildas Molgat: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Could the honourable senator tell me to which report in 1982 he is referring when he claims that I signed my name? I do not recall signing any report dealing with trade matters.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator's name is on the report of the committee of 1982. Is he now disassociating himself from it? Is he telling us that he does not endorse it—

Senator Molgat: I would have to see where my name appears, because I do not recall being a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I apologize if I am mistaken, but I sent for a list of those whose names appear on the March 1982 report—it was volume 3, I believe—of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, and on that document appears the name of the honourable senator, so I am informed.

Honourable senators, I know that the Free Trade Agreement before us may not be precisely the agreement that the Foreign Affairs Committee might have designed in 1982. The former chairman, Senator van Roggen, can elucidate this point when he speaks, but the question he had to ask and other senators have to ask themselves and answer is whether the Free Trade Agreement that is now before us achieves the objectives that the committee had in mind. I do not want to anticipate Senator van Roggen's speech, and I trust he will take part in the debate, but we do have the benefit of an article that he wrote for the Financial Post of July 30. In that article Senator van Roggen wrote:

Many of the attacks on the (Free Trade Agreement) are mischievous and motivated by partisan politics . . .

Senator Steuart: Shame!

Senator Murray:

It is a pity that what is essentially an economic agreement has been so distorted by its critics. It would be a tragedy if the opportunity were lost to conclude an arrangement that offers such large benefits to Canada.

That is what the chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee has said on the matter.

[Senator Nurgitz.]

Honourable senators, I have just received an answer to Senator Molgat's question. It takes the form of a photostat copy of page 2 of volume 3 of the committee report of 1982 and, indeed, I can confirm that under "Membership of the Committee" the honourable senator's name, "Molgat, Gildas L.", does appear.

Senator Molgat: And I signed the report?

Senator Murray: I hope my honourable friend signed it. His name is there. Is he suggesting that some staffer is forging his signature?

Senator Molgat: No.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, in November 1982 the government of Prime Minister Trudeau appointed a Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada, a Royal Commission headed, as the Senate knows, by the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald. That royal commission reported in August 1985 after the most exhaustive review of Canada's social, economic and political fabric ever carried out. The royal commission concluded that:

Canada's economic growth is critically dependent on secure access to foreign markets. Our most important market is the United States, which now takes up to three quarters of our exports. More, better and more secure access to the U.S. market represents a basic requirement, while denial of that access is an ever-present threat. We are extremely vulnerable to any strengthening of U.S. protectionism. Early bilateral negotiations with the United States could provide opportunities for the two countries to negotiate reduction or elimination of tariff and other barriers to cross-border trade, at a pace and on a scale not likely to be achieved multilaterally in a further GATT round. Such negotiations could also be used to win agreement on rules designed to deal with special or unique problems affecting cross-border trade; they would provide a more secure shield against a U.S. policy of protection.

The royal commission went on to say:

The pursuit of Canada-U.S. free trade is not at odds with efforts to strengthen and improve the existing multilateral framework. Rather, commissioners see it as a complementary approach, involving concentration of our efforts and scarce resources on our most important market. We see multilateral negotiations proceeding in parallel. In our view, such a two-tiered approach is the best way to ensure that Canadian industry will win sufficient access to foreign markets to invest and grow with confidence. At the same time, it will allow us to open our market in an orderly fashion and thus ensure that trade policy does its part in encouraging the development of a more competitive and more productive economy.

That is exactly the point that was made several years earlier by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

• (1530)

Based on this assessment the royal commission recommended that:

The Government of Canada, at the same time it undertakes an initiative at the multilateral level to eliminate trade barriers, open negotiations with the Government of the United States to reach agreement on a substantial reduction of barriers, tariff and non-tariff, between Canada and the United States. Such an agreement would have to stand within the terms of Article XXIV of the GATT, and it would provide for a reduction of barriers between the two countries, but would leave each country with freedom of action to maintain separate trading policies with other economic partners.

Like the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee several years previously, the royal commission considered Canada's sovereignty and concluded as follows:

This Commission has been profoundly impressed by the confidence that Canadians have come to show in themselves as individuals, and in their country as a political community. The evidence obtained through our public hearings, as well as from personal observation and other sources, has led us to conclude that, as a people, we Canadians are no longer victim to the enervating sense of uncertainty that derives from self-perceived "colonial" . . . status.

The day of the apologetic Canadian is gone, and there is no reason to suppose that our present confidence will be undermined by an arrangement designed only to secure a continuing exchange of goods and services with the United States.

Honourable senators, the Macdonald commission of 1985, like the Senate committee of 1982, might have designed a Free Trade Agreement somewhat different from that which we have before us. But does the present agreement achieve the objectives that the Macdonald commission had in mind? Obviously, the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald thinks it does. Here is what he has had to say:

The Free Trade Pact . . . is the beginning of a golden era for Canadian businesses and workers. Canadian businesses and workers now have an opportunity to crack the huge U.S. market, free from the protectionism other world traders will confront.

Those are the words of the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald, a former colleague of a number of present senators in the Trudeau government.

Senator Frith: Yes, and now our distinguished High Commissioner in London.

Senator Murray: Let me cite also the advice that the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald gives to parliamentarians as to what we should do about this Free Trade Agreement. I am quoting from comments that he made in Ottawa on May 25 last. He said:

The Free Trade Agreement has been the subject of long and thoughtful discussion and debate and, we believe, it is in the interest of the country and Canadians that swift passage of this legislation proceed through the House of Commons and through the Canadian Senate.

The Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities—

Of which Mr. Macdonald was co-chairman—

—believes we are on the way towards making this agreement a reality for all Canadians. And Canadians have a right to expect that no particular interests be allowed to stand in the way of a national opportunity of this size and scope.

. . . we have all spent a great deal of time and effort on this national initiative. A process of broad consultation across the country at all levels has afforded Canadians an opportunity to participate in discussion and debate on the issue of free trade. Now, with the introduction of legislation, we have moved a step closer to new opportunities and new challenges. The Canadian Alliance urges the Members of our Parliament and the Senate to ensure unimpeded passage of this legislation.

Honourable senators, the Government of Canada acted in line with the recommendations of the Senate committee and the royal commission when, in September of 1985, Prime Minister Mulroney announced the free trade initiative with the United States. In May of 1986 we entered into negotiations with the United States towards a Free Trade Agreement, and in September of 1986 entered into the Punta del Este Round of multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT.

The government established three primary objectives for the free trade negotiations. First, to achieve enhanced access to the U.S. market; second, to achieve more secure access to that U.S. market; and, third, to enshrine these benefits in an agreement containing adequate institutional provision to give them effect.

As well, the government, from the very beginning, set out what we were not willing to place at issue in these negotiations. Primarily, first, Canada's social policies and programs; second, our ability to combat regional disparities; third, agricultural supply management programs; and, fourth, cultural policies and support for cultural industries.

I ask honourable senators, in reviewing this legislation, to examine the agreement and the bill in the light of the stated objectives of the government in the negotiations.

First, did we achieve enhanced access to the U.S. market? The answer is "yes." In the C.D. Howe study to which I referred earlier, there is a list of 18 ways in which Canada, through this agreement, achieves increased access to the United States market. I will not list the 18 ways, but I will give you some of them.

Tariffs will be phased out; better rules of origin will be put in place; national treatment will be extended to Canadian businesses in the U.S.; non-tariff barriers such as discriminating product standards will be reduced; access to federal government procurement will be improved; certain service industries will gain freer access to the U.S. market; and temporary entry for business people and service personnel will be made easier.

By any fair examination, the Free Trade Agreement achieves the first objective that the government set for itself: To gain enhanced access to the U.S. market.

Did we achieve objective number two, more secure access to the U.S. market? Here, again, I refer to the evaluation of the free trade arrangement put out by the C.D. Howe Institute. In that study they list eight ways in which Canada has achieved more secure access to the U.S. market through this agreement.

Consider the evidence. The Auto Pact will be reaffirmed; safeguards actions by the U.S. will not apply to Canada if the problem arises from a third country. There will be no more sideswipes, which Canada has had considerable experience with in the past, where we are caught up in retaliatory and punitive action intended not for us but for a third country, but which affects directly anyway. Safeguards actions against Canadian producers will be subject to binding dispute settlements, and countervail and anti-dumping actions will be subject to binding dispute settlements. These reciprocal obligations will be enshrined in the Free Trade Agreement and trade disputes will be dealt with through a formal dispute settlement procedure under a new Canada-U.S. trade commission.

● (1540)

Honourable senators, the dispute-settlement provisions of the Free Trade Agreement are one of the key areas of controversy. Are they adequate? Do they achieve the objective of more secure access? Let me give you the assessment of the C.D. Howe Institute. It is as follows:

Although it falls short of many people's expectations in this area, the Agreement incorporates dispute-settlement mechanisms that are clearly superior to those in the GATT, and probably superior to those in all other regional trade liberalizing pacts.

Later, in the same study, the institute said:

Whatever its shortcomings, the Agreement provides for much more liberalization of trade and for the removal of many more trade irritants than does any other international trading agreement in existence today. It helps access in three ways—it increases the access of Canadian producers to the U.S. market, it makes that access more secure, and it promises to add to that security in the future.

Honourable senators, did we achieve objective No. 2, more secure access to the U.S. market? Yes, we did. And have we achieved objective No. 3, to enshrine these benefits in an agreement with adequate institutional arrangements? Yes, we have.

Regarding the matters that the government was not prepared to place at issue in the negotiations, first, Canada's social policies and programs are not in any way covered by this agreement. For example, the government has recently brought forward a national initiative in child care. I invite honourable senators to read the devastating comments of Senator van Roggen in his article in the Financial Post dealing with those who contend that our social policies and programs are somehow under threat by this agreement. Second, our ability to combat regional disparities is unimpaired. Indeed, the opportunities for regional development are increased, given better access to the United States market. Third, agricultural supply management programs remain intact and Canada's rights under Article XI of the GATT, under which these operate, are specifically recognized in the agreement. And, fourth, cultural industries are specifically exempted from the agreement.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the advantages of the free trade agreement have been assessed by a number of well-qualified institutions. The Minister of Finance published his own assessment on January 18 of this year. According to that assessment, first of all, 120,000 new jobs would be created between now and 1993.

Second, Canadians would see a 2.5 per cent increase in real income, adding up to a permanent gain of $12 billion.

Third, business investment would increase by 4 per cent, in real terms, between now and 1993.

Fourth, production in the manufacturing sector would increase by 11 per cent between now and 1999.

Fifth, the cost of goods imported from the United States would drop by an average 5 per cent.

The Minister of Finance also mentioned three more major advantages which were impossible to quantify:

First, the number of existing jobs that would otherwise have been at risk or lost as a result of U.S. protectionist measures and that will now be maintained thanks to the free trade agreement;

Second, the increase in foreign investment in Canadian industry by entrepreneurs seeking secure access to the North American market;

Third, improved economic efficiency in Canadian industry that will lead to increased production and better specialization. This last aspect is particularly important, to enhance our competitiveness on foreign markets.

As was mentioned by the Macdonald Commission, Canada is the only large industrialized country without guaranteed access to a market of at least 100 million consumers. More secure access to a U.S. market of 240 million consumers will enable our exporters to compete more effectively with producers in Japan, the Common Market and the United States.

A number of independent organizations, including the Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Board of Canada, the C.D. Howe Institute and the Canada West Foundation have also concluded that the Free Trade Agreement will lead to an increase in income and investment, improve productivity and reduce prices in Canada.

In fact, the Economic Council of Canada, in an assessment published in 1988, predicted gains that could translate into as many as 250,000 jobs.

Assessments also conclude that such gains will be realized in all provinces and in the many sectors of our economy.

[Senator Murray.]

[English]

Honourable senators, at the outset of the negotiations, the Prime Minister established a system for regular consultation with provincial governments and with the private sector that is unprecedented in Canada's history. First Ministers met on ten occasions for the sole purpose of reviewing the negotiations and receiving reports from our negotiators. The issue dominated two of the annual meetings of First Ministers, one in Halifax in 1985 and one in Toronto in 1987. In addition, over 100 meetings of federal and provincial officials were held. Private sector consultations were carried out through the International Trade Advisory Committee and 15 sectoral advisory groups representative of all interested sectors and all regions of the country. These groups advised as well on the multilateral trade negotiations and they have been reconstituted to continue that work.

The Free Trade Agreement enjoys the support of eight provinces, including governments from the three political parties now holding office in Canada.

Senator Frith: Provincial governments, you mean.

Senator Murray: This reflects the widespread nature of the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement and it also reflects the extent to which the federal government was able to achieve common goals in these negotiations. As well, almost unanimously, representatives of the Canadian business community, including the Canadian Exporters' Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Federation of Independent business, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Business Council on National Issues, are strongly supportive of the Free Trade Agreement.

● (1550)

This support spans major sectors of the economy, from resource producers to manufacturers to service industries. These groups have, time and again, expressed their confidence that Canadian businesses and their employees will reap major benefits from the increased opportunities under free trade.

Honourable senators, no major national initiative—certainly not an initiative that has historically inflamed passions in the way that Canada-U.S. free trade has—could proceed without controversy. There have been three general arguments proposed by the opposition parties against the Free Trade Agreement: First, that it will impair Canada's sovereignty; second, that it will lead to "harmonization" of Canada's policies and programs with those of the United States, and that, as a result, our country will become more like the United States; and, third, that by entering a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States Canada is undermining the multilateral trading system under the GATT.

Well, let us take the sovereignty question first. In simplest terms, giving up sovereignty means giving up our ability to control our affairs as a nation. How can we have done this in the Free Trade Agreement that is before us? First, the obligations that we will undertake in the Free Trade Agreement with the United States are not unilateral, they are reciprocal: we lower tariffs; they lower tariffs. We accept certain rules regarding controls on investment, they accept the same rules, although we have each retained certain special rules; in our case, for example, we continue to have controls on investment in cultural industries. We accept certain rules for origin of goods, they accept the same rules for origin of goods, and so forth. Reciprocal obligations are the essence of any trade agreement. They do not transfer powers from the Government of the United States to the Government of Canada, or vice versa; rather, they establish rules for each government in the continuing exercise of its sovereign jurisdiction for the conduct of our mutual trading relationship.

One may argue that in practical effect one party or another has gained an advantage in the deal, but that is not a matter of sovereignty; rather, it is a matter of weighing the bargain. I say that this is a balanced agreement in its principles, but it is one that yields greater benefits for Canada, because we have gained increased opportunities in a market ten times the size of our own, but that is a matter distinct from the matter of sovereignty.

Second, the Free Trade Agreement, by its terms, can be terminated by the Canadian government on six months' notice, as Mr. John Turner has stated he will do if elected Prime Minister. He would tear up the Free Trade Agreement. That might be a difficult thing to do politically if the agreement yields major benefits to Canada, as I believe it will. In those circumstances, it probably should not be terminated anyway. However, if it is not working to Canada's benefit, the option is there, simply by giving six months' notice. Sovereignty is not impaired where Canada retains the absolute right to put the agreement to an end.

The second general argument against the Free Trade Agreement is that it will lead to "harmonization" of Canada's policies and programs with those of the United States, with Canadian society becoming more like that in the United States. But how is this to occur, and what does historical experience teach us?

Since the 1930s successive Canadian governments have reduced trade barriers with the United States through multilateral agreements and through bilateral agreements, and while those barriers have been reduced, and bilateral trade in a more openly competitive environment has burgeoned, Canadian governments have created a modern social safety net, carried on regional development as a national responsibility, reinforced Canada's cultural integrity and sovereignty, and supported our cultural industries.

The reduction of trade barriers and the consequent, more open, competition between Canadian and American firms has led not to harmonization but to the growth of an economically strong and dynamically distinct Canada. We will become no less compassionate as a society, no less progressive as a nation, and no less Canadian by the further reduction of trade barriers. Indeed, the gains in efficiency and competitiveness spoken of by the Senate committee and by the Macdonald Royal Commission, the increase in incomes, the improvements in standards of living, the increased opportunities for this and future generations of Canadians can only make for a stronger

Canada, politically, socially and culturally, as well as economically.

Another so-called cause of harmonization pointed to is the negotiations to be undertaken over the next five to seven years on the rules for anti-dumping and countervail. Anti-dumping is selling goods for less in the other fellow's market than you do in your own. So that cannot be the problem. What, then, about countervail? The purpose of countervailing duties, which we use as well as the United States, is to protect the domestic industry from significant harm caused by unfair subsidies given to foreign companies exporting into your market. This means export subsidies—for example, if we pay 50 cents to widget producers for every $1's worth of widgets they export into the United States. But it is not about medicare, child care, old age pensions, family allowances or any social programs; nor is it about the kinds of regional development programs we carry on in this country. We want to achieve a clear set of rules for countervail that will prevent the kind of politicized decision making that we saw in the United States in the softwood lumber case. Binding dispute mechanism is our main line of defence against that type of politicized decision making while the rules of countervail are reviewed. If the Americans at some time over the course of these negotiations were to suggest some distorted approach to these issues, we, or any other Canadian government, would say "No." It is nothing more than a dark fantasy to leap from a review of the rules of countervail to the abandonment of medicare, as some critics of this agreement have done.

The third general argument used against the Free Trade Agreement is that by entering such an agreement Canada is undermining the multilateral trading system under the GATT. The government has followed a two-track policy in trade negotiations, bilaterally with our largest trading partner and multilaterally under the GATT. We have achieved agreement with the United States in our bilateral negotiations, and we are hopeful of a successful outcome in the multilateral trade negotiations, although these have a long way to go yet. Mr. Crosbie, the Minister for International Trade, hopes to make significant progress at the mid-term review meeting to be hosted by Canada in Montreal in December of this year.

GATT Article XXIV specifically provides for free trade agreements between member countries. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement comes within the provisions of this article of the GATT. As the Director General of the GATT organization, Arthur Dunkel, has said, "The Free Trade Agreement will, in no way, hinder each country's trading obligations with the rest of the world."

In June, as honourable senators will recall, the seven leaders at the Economic Summit, including our largest trading partners in Europe and Asia, strongly welcomed the Free Trade Agreement and noted the contribution it should make towards success in the multilateral trade negotiations. So rather than undermining the multilateral trading system, the Free Trade Agreement is building on it and is contributing towards success in the current round of GATT negotiations.

[Senator Murray.]

On this very point, Professor Lipsey and Mr. York said, and I quote:

• (1600)

The Agreement is founded mainly on the GATT and on GATT principles. Many clauses—including some of those that have come under severe criticism—merely repeat obligations Canada already has undertaken by virtue of its membership in the GATT. By embedding GATT rules and regulations in the Agreement, both countries have restated the agreed rules of international trade. The Agreement makes these rules more visible, and possibly more enforceable, than they are under the GATT.

In the very next paragraph, Professor Lipsey and Mr. York say of the Free Trade Agreement:

It extends the GATT. An important achievement of the Agreement is that it goes well beyond the scope and coverage of current GATT obligations. It includes important trade liberalizing measures in agriculture, services, business travel, and investment, and a commitment to develop bilateral rules for trade remedies. These achievements recognize the changing structure of world trade, and provide a prototype for future multilateral and bilateral agreements.

I ask honourable senators to read that document and to pay particular attention to the comments about the relationship of the Free Trade Agreement to the GATT and to multilateral trade liberalization. It says that this Free Trade Agreement enforces and provides a prototype for future bilateral and multilateral agreements.

How often do we need to remind skeptics and critics of the facts of life: that some 30 per cent of Canada's income and employment derives directly from exports; that, along with Australia and New Zealand, we are practically the only industrialized country that does not have free access to a market of at least 100 million. Japan's domestic market is 120 million people; the United States' is 240 million; the European Economic Community and the European Free Trade Association's is 360 million. The Canadian domestic market is 25 million people. That is the reality. It is the challenge that the Free Trade Agreement addresses.

What is the trade alternative of Mr. John Turner, who wanted us to walk away from the table a few months after we began the negotiations and who now is committed to tear up the agreement if he becomes Prime Minister? The Liberal Party released a trade proposal on June 13. It was announced by the Honourable Lloyd Axworthy on behalf of that party. Since then, a further proposal has been prepared and was, believe, presented by the Right Honourable Mr. Turner to the Premier of Quebec at their meeting in Quebec City on August 17. However, as we all know, Premier Bourassa emerged from that meeting, as before, fully committed to the Free Trade Agreement.

The latest Liberal proposal consists of five main elements: three relating to trade; one relating to international monetary policy; and one relating to domestic policy. While the elements are intended to reinforce one another, the three trade elements constitute what might be called the "Turner Alternative" to the matters dealt with in the Free Trade Agreement.

First, there is the GATT, which the Liberals hope to improve, especially in the dispute-settlement procedure. Well, so do we. That is why Canada is taking a lead role in the working party of the GATT that is now considering dispute-settlement mechanisms under the GATT.

The problem with the Liberal approach was put succinctly by Peter Bentley, Chairman of the British Columbia-based forest products firm, Canfor, when he recently said that we have no assurance when the current Uruguay Round of GATT negotiations will be completed. He said that it could take years.

I should say, in parenthesis, that the last GATT round took six years to negotiate. Mr. Bentley went on to state:

In the meantime, we could find ourselves in the embarrassing position of all being unemployed and bankrupt if U.S. protectionism prevailed before this event took place.

The second trade element of the Turner Alternative is to seek sectoral free trade arrangements with the United States rather than a comprehensive Free Trade Agreement, as has been negotiated. The sector-by-sector approach was tried in 1983-1984, as honourable senators will recall, and it did not work. The U.S. sought to press forward in sectors where they had an advantage; Canada wanted to do so in sectors where it had an advantage. The same problems would face any future attempt at sectoral negotiation.

There is another problem referred to by the Honourable Donald Johnston, M.P., in his speech during third reading of Bill C-130 on August 29. He said:

... as Members of this House probably know, although some may not, sectoral agreements are totally incompatible with the GATT and require waivers from two-thirds of the GATT members in order to enter into them.

These are not areas, and this is not an approach which enhances international trade. It restricts international trade.

The Honourable Gerald Regan, a former Premier of Nova Scotia and member of the other place, was Minister of International Trade when the sector-by-sector approach was tried and failed in 1983-1984. Here is what he has said:

When I was a member of Mr. Trudeau's government, I recognized the importance of obtaining better guarantees of access to the vital American market... I have come to the conclusion that the present free trade project is a more meaningful, courageous and important undertaking... more important than our limited negotiations.

The third trade element, honourable senators, of the Liberal proposal is to diversify our export markets, emphasizing trade with the Pacific Rim and Europe. In fact, this government has taken measures to do just that. The 1985 National Trade Strategy established a major initiative towards the Pacific Rim. Trade between Canada and Japan has increased and we have re-established a trade surplus with that country. However, the idea of increasing trade with other countries to substitute for trade with the United States has never worked. It did not work despite the gallant attempt of the Diefenbaker government in the late 1950s to divert 15 per cent of our trade from the United States to the Commonwealth. It did not work when Mr. Trudeau tried something of the kind. Mr. Trudeau's "Third Option" was no option at all. The proportion of our exports going to the United States increased steadily during those years. The sensible goal, and one that this government is following, is a balanced trade strategy seeking new markets wherever there is an opportunity to do so.

The Liberals' so-called "Alternative" to this Free Trade Agreement is no alternative at all. It ignores the threat of U.S. protectionism. It expresses high hopes for what the multilateral trade negotiations may be able to achieve if the 95 member countries agree. It ignores the benefits that have been achieved under this Free Trade Agreement with the United States, in terms of increased and more secure access to the United States market and the binding dispute-settlement mechanism.

The New Democratic Party's proposal was released in January 1988. Like the Liberal proposal, it calls for greater reliance on GATT and on diversifying overseas markets. However, instead of sectoral free trade, it calls for sectoral-managed trade arrangements such as the Auto Pact. Mr. Broadbent, if I recall correctly, mentioned chemicals and electronics as possible areas where this might be done. Honourable senators know that the situation of the automobile industry on the North American continent in the 1960s bears no resemblance to the situation of any sector in North America today. Negotiating the kind of arrangement Mr. Broadbent is talking about, under which the United States would agree to divide production on our behalf in order to gain access to the Canadian market, really has no hope for success. What would we permit the United States to export to Canada that they do not export now?

● (1610)

So that proposal suffers from the same failings as the Liberal proposal. Neither offers an effective alternative to the Free Trade Agreement. The central idea of both is profoundly negative, to repudiate a Canada-U.S. trade arrangement supported by virtually everyone in Canada's export community.

Bill C-130, the legislation to implement this agreement, has a single purpose: To make those changes to Canadian laws necessary to carry out Canada's obligations under the Free Trade Agreement. As the agreement is negotiated as a package, as are all international agreements, Parliament cannot pick and choose among the pieces. One accepts the whole agreement or rejects it.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, since the publication of Elements of the Free Trade Agreement on October 4 and the final text on December 10, 1987, Parliament has done a thorough study of the agreement: Six days of debate in the other place, fifty-eight briefs, a hundred and fifty witnesses and a hundred and twenty hours of testimony before the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on External Affairs and International Trade, twelve hours of debate on Bill C-130 in the other place, fifty briefs, fifty-three witnesses and eighty-five hours of testimony on Bill C-130 before the legislative committee of the other house, and since November 17, 1987, forty-two meetings plus the testimony of 90 witnesses before the Senate Committee on External Affairs.

On June 8 of this year, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate stated that the Liberal majority in this chamber would not agree with my proposal to start a preliminary study of Bill C-130.

When the government consulted the opposition parties in the House of Commons on the time frame for the two last stages of the bill, the opposition parties answered they wanted 350 days, which is more time than this Parliament has left to go. Furthermore, the procedural objections formulated by the opposition parties in the other place, all of which were ruled out of order by the Speaker, delayed consideration of the bill for three weeks. In subsequent weeks, further delay was caused when a recorded vote was demanded on first reading of bills presented by members of the opposition, including a bill to make hockey Canada's national sport.

It is partisan and misleading to claim that the government blocked examination of Bill C-130 in the House of Commons. In fact, it was the opposition parties that took advantage of every opportunity they saw to block and delay the bill.

[English]

This brings me, honourable senators, to the position of the Senate with regard to this bill and to our role, the role of this house, in Canada's parliamentary democracy. Honourable senators know, as I was just saying in French, that I would have preferred a pre-study on this bill. I made a proposal to that effect on May 31; four speakers spoke to the motion and then it was adjourned on June 9 in Senator Frith's name, and there it has stood. They have never allowed the proposal to come to a vote. Nevertheless, we have had the value of the Foreign Affairs Committee study, not of the bill, but of the agreement, and the bill is now before us for second reading.

What should happen now, and what usually does happen at this stage of a bill, is that a debate of fairly brief duration takes place, although Senator MacEachen, I note, has been quoted in the media within the last couple of days as saying that he expects a debate on second reading of several weeks' duration—

Senator MacEachen: Not me!

Senator Murray: It must have been Senator Frith then. I am getting my two friends confused.

Senator Frith: Two to three weeks I think I said.

Senator Murray: Two to three weeks Senator Frith said, but one always assumes that he speaks for Senator MacEachen. Can one not assume that?

Senator Frith: He does not, but I do.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: We shall see. As we all know, there is a debate of relatively short duration in this house on second reading, but one would understand if more than the usual two or three senators wanted to speak on a bill of this importance at this stage.

When honourable senators who wish to speak have done so, the bill is given second reading, or approval in principle, and it is referred to a committee for consideration. In due course, the committee reports the bill and the Senate has another decision or decisions to make. In the life of the current Parliament, there have been cases where we have run into games of legislative ping-pong occasioned by proposed Senate amendments to government legislation. These have ended either with the differences being resolved or with the House of Commons insisting on its view and the Senates' acceding.

In no case in the modern history of our Parliament has the Senate defeated a bill at second reading, nor has it thwarted the will of the elected house by blocking a bill, as Mr. Turner would have us do now.

As Mr. Turner said himself in the House of Commons on August 28, 1987:

Our position is quite clear on the jurisdiction of the Upper House . . . at the end of the day—

Senator Frith: Senator, whom are you quoting?

Senator Murray: The Right Honourable John Turner, Leader of the Opposition, the national leader of the Liberal Party.

Senator Frith: That is all right. That is the next Prime Minister of Canada.

Senator Murray: The ex.

Senator Frith: Next. Put an "n" and a "t" on that, sir.

Senator Murray: As Mr. Turner said in the House of Commons on August 26, 1987:

Our position is quite clear on the jurisdiction of the Upper House . . . at the end of the day, the elected House of Commons must prevail. That is the clear position of the Liberal Party.

Senator MacEachen has been quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying it was not the Senate's role "to thwart", as he put it, "to thwart the clearly expressed will of the House of Commons".

Honourable senators, on July 20, Mr. Turner—

Senator MacEachen: I cannot confirm or deny.

Senator Roblin: But you will.

Senator Murray: —Mr. Turner announced that he had called on the Liberal Caucus in the Senate, the Liberal majority in the Senate, and they had agreed to block Bill C-130 for the duration of this Parliament.

Senator Frith: No!

Senator Bosa: He said delay.

An Hon. Senator: B-L-O-C-K!

Senator Bosa: D-E-L-A-Y!

Senator Murray: They had agreed to block Bill C-130 for the duration of Parliament. As recently as Thursday, in the course of another debate, Senator Frith, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, confirmed for the first time so far as I am aware in this place that it was the intention of the Liberal majority in this place to accede to what he called the request of Mr. Turner and block the bill for the duration of this Parliament. Senator Frith told us that at a Liberal caucus, 80 or 90 per cent of the Liberal senators present unanimously agreed to accept what he called the request of Mr. Turner to block the bill for the duration of the present Parliament.

● (1620)

Senator Frith: Postpone.

Senator Murray: To refuse to pass the bill; to refuse to dispose of the bill during the present Parliament. Is the honourable senator playing with words? Can there be any doubt about the meaning of Mr. Turner's instruction? Can there be any doubt about the response of the Liberal senators—

Senator Frith: I hope not!

Senator Murray:—as conveyed to this place on Thursday last by Senator Frith? If that is their intention, it does raise the question: What is the point of continuing with the debate? But in any case, I should like to discuss some of the implications of the decision that the Liberal caucus had taken, as communicated to us by Senator Frith on their behalf last Thursday.

Mr. Turner's slogan, in issuing his unprecedented direction to the Liberal senators, is "Let the people decide". But the people will decide on the Free Trade Agreement whenever the election is held, and the people will have a clear choice. Mr. Turner, on October 26, 1987, has pledged to "tear it up"; Mr. Broadbent is apparently of the same view. They would, I gather, invoke the six months' notice provided for in the agreement and put an end to it. How could the choice facing the electorate between the government and opposition be clearer?

In his speech on third reading of Bill C-130 on August 30, Mr. Turner stated his rationale for giving the direction that he did on July 20 to the Liberal majority in this chamber. There were three elements: First, a government going into its fifth year has, he said, no right to press on Canadians a change so fundamental as a free trade agreement. Second, the government, he said, received no mandate in its election of 1984 to enter into a free trade agreement with the United States. Third, there had been inadequate debate in the other place, including no travel by the legislative committee studying Bill C-130.

Regarding the first element of this rationale, there is no difference, honourable senators, between the right of a government to govern in its first, second, third, fourth or fifth years in office. For example, Prime Minister Trudeau sought to achieve major constitutional change in the fifth year after his re-election in 1974. As I recall it, there was a federal-provincial conference that he called some five months after he had entered the fifth year of his mandate, a federal-provincial conference at which he laid before the provincial governments the most far-reaching proposals for constitutional change. Did the Senate object on the ground that Prime Minister Trudeau's mandate was going into its fifth year? When has the Senate taken a position on a government bill on the basis that that bill had been presented in the first, second, third, fourth or fifth year of a mandate? The federal elections of 1962, 1972, 1979 and 1984 were held well into the fifth year of the mandates of those governments. Did the Senate ever object to important legislation coming from the House of Commons on the ground that those governments were approaching, or had overtaken, their fourth anniversaries in office? No, it did not.

In any case, when Mr. Turner talks about fundamental change, I think the Senate should recall that reduction of trade barriers between Canada and the United States has been going on since the bilateral agreements of the 1930s. Adoption of the new rules for commercial trade, including services and investment—which are, by the way, under negotiation now in the multilateral forum—is not a fundamental change for Canada any more than was Canada's entry into the GATT in 1947. Professor Lipsey and Mr. York said of the agreement:

It comes close to completing the program, begun in 1935, of integrating the Canadian economy into the world trading system.

As I have stated, whatever change may be brought about from implementation of this agreement is reversible by any future Canadian government on the giving of six months' notice and termination. Mr. Turner has stated unequivocally that such is his intention; as Prime Minister, he would tear up the agreement. The people of Canada will have an opportunity to vote for that position.

Meanwhile, the duty of the Senate surely is to proceed with this bill and to pass this bill which has come to us from the elected House of Commons. That house has not sent the bill here for us to block it or to thwart the will of the elected representatives of the people.

The second element of Mr. Turner's rationale is that the government received no mandate in 1984 for this agreement. As I have said, that argument turns on whether this is some fundamental change in policy. However, as I have already pointed out, the Free Trade Agreement and Bill C-130 do not represent any revolutionary change in Canada's policy. This step, while it is important and while we believe it is vital for Canada's future is, in the context of history and in the context of politics, an evolutionary step.

In any case, to accept Mr. Turner's thesis would be to accept that the right to govern is somehow frozen on the day of balloting, but we know it is not. The right to govern bears with it the responsibility to respond to changing circumstances—in this case the dramatic increased threat of United States protectionism. The right to govern bears with it also the responsibility to respond to new opportunities, as evidenced by the willingness of the United States to negotiate an agreement that would significantly improve Canada's competitiveness in the United States and globally. You can invoke the so-called mandate theory of government and you can quote what Prime Minister Mulroney or some other Conservative said in the past about some hypothetical free trade arrangement between Canada and the United States, some customs union or some common market; you can go back to the position of Sir John A. Macdonald, who changed his position at least once, or you can refer to Sir Robert Borden or to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and their respective positions in their vastly different times. However, for a complete about-face, for an unmitigated betrayal of a mandate that had been sought and received from the Canadian electorate, the Senate has never seen, and probably never will see, anything to compare with the imposition of wage and price controls in 1975, one year after the government of Prime Minister Trudeau had waged an entire election campaign on the explicit pledge that they would not bring in such a program.

• (1630)

Senator Frith: That woke them up, by George!

Senator Murray: Where was the Senate then?

Senator MacEachen: Well, you tell us.

Senator Murray: The Liberal majority in the Senate approved Mr. Trudeau's legislation in 1975, and I am not aware of any dissenting voices in their caucus.

Another example where the Senate, by invoking the principle now proposed by Mr. Turner, might have acted differently was Mr. Trudeau's constitutional amendment of 1982. Prime Minister Trudeau had promised renewed federalism to the people of Quebec in the referendum campaign of 1980.

Mr. Raymond Garneau, Member of Parliament and Mr. Turner's Quebec lieutenant, has told us in recent months that if the people of Quebec had known what Prime Minister Trudeau meant by "renewed federalism" they would have voted differently in the referendum. Where were the Liberal senators then? Did they block or hold up the joint address in 1981? No, they did not.

Senator MacEachen: Was not Mr. Garneau talking about Mr. Trudeau's comments on Meech Lake?

Senator Murray: I would refer the Leader of the Opposition, and all others who are interested, to the position Prime Minister Mulroney and the Conservative party have taken consistently, which was expressed, in particular, in Prime Minister Mulroney's speech of September 7 in Sept-Îles. It is logical, normal and well justified for Prime Minister Mulroney and the Conservative government to claim that they have an overwhelming mandate, certainly from the people of Quebec and certainly from the people of Canada, to pursue national reconciliation in the way we have done.

Senator MacEachen: Please relate Mr. Garneau's comments.

Senator Murray: In response to Mr. Trudeau's statements on Meech Lake, which was the occasion for the comments, Mr. Garneau said that if the people of Quebec had known what Mr. Trudeau meant, if he had said during the referendum what he said here, the people of Quebec would have voted differently in the referendum. That is the point.

With the greatest of respect to my honourable friend, I would consider Mr. Garneau a rather more qualified authority on the feelings of the people of Quebec than either of our friends opposite.

Senator MacEachen: It is rather tortured logic, I must say.

Senator Murray: Having said that, I should like to refer again to the debate on the constitutional amendment. At that time, Senator Bonnell—and I am sorry he had to leave early—said:

We could also lose our bicameral parliamentary system . . .

through the constitutional resolution, he meant,

. . . But despite my objection to this section, I intend to support it, because I feel that if it represents the wishes of the members of the House of Commons, and of seven of the Canadian premiers, that the Constitution should be changed, then those seven premiers could well represent the respective regions. It would not behoove me to think that I know more than they, and therefore I intend to support this part of the Constitution.

Applying that same meticulous logic, I will commend this free trade bill, Bill C-130, to Senator Bonnell, because it has the support not just of the House of Commons and seven provincial governments but of eight provincial governments.

Senator Steuart: We will mention it to him.

Senator Murray: I thank my honourable friend for that. The Senate did not act in accordance with this principle on any previous occasion, certainly not in our modern history. One wonders if there is one set of principles for the Senate when the Liberal government is in office and a different set of principles when a Conservative government is in office.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: What are those principles? Will Mr. Turner spell this out during the campaign? Will honourable senators speak to this question during this debate?

I am told that the Liberal Party could have a majority in the Senate, as presently constituted, until the year 2008.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Under what circumstances, then, would Mr. Turner consider it legitimate to use the Senate again in this manner? Will he spell this out? Will honourable senators indicate under what circumstances they believe the exercise of this power—and it is a power—is legitimate?

Senator MacEachen: Case by case.

Senator Murray: If an old régime, one that has been repudiated massively by the electorate, can cling to power and can frustrate the legislative process long years into the future by virtue of having packed the Senate with its partisans, what becomes of parliamentary democracy in Canada? When refer to "old régimes," I am not referring only to Mr. Trudeau's régime, since he officially, at any rate, bears the responsibility for the appointment of many honourable senators opposite. I am referring also to the Turner régime, short-lived though it was.

Senator Steuart: Some on that side also.

Senator Frith: Senator Roblin, for example, is among that distinguished company appointed by Mr. Trudeau.

Senator Murray: Although Mr. Turner told us in 1984 that he had no option but to accede to the last final orgy of patronage appointments by Mr. Trudeau, it now appears about to be revealed in a book published on Mr. Turner by an Ottawa journalist that Mr. Turner was conniving—indeed, actively participating—in that orgy all the while he was telling the Canadian people that he had no option and that he was not really involved.

If the Senate should try to arrogate to itself the right to determine a dissolution of Parliament, what would become of the role of the elected house or the prerogative of the Prime Minister to recommend dissolution?

I should like to leave honourable senators with some thoughts on this matter from one of our most senior and most respected retired public servants, the Honourable Gordon Robertson, who has been Secretary to the Cabinet, Clerk of the Privy Council, Secretary to the Cabinet for Federal-Provincial Relations, and deputy minister of various departments. Mr. Robertson was speaking on August 23 about the role of upper chambers in federations. Of course, Mr. Robertson has been on record for a long time as favouring an elected Senate. He said:

Our senators do not represent the people in the provinces in which they reside: they represent no one. They cannot speak for any region, for they have no authority to do so. In short, a Senate appointed by the central government cannot discharge the basic function of a second chamber in a federation.

Senator Frith: And whom does Mr. Robertson represent?

Senator Stollery: Mr. Robertson.

Senator Murray: I should like my friends to listen very carefully to this next paragraph.

Senator Frith: We are not compelled to do so. There is nothing in the Constitution that says we have to.

Senator Murray: No, but I think they would listen for profit. Successive Liberal governments, and, indeed, some Conservative governments, have received and followed and seldom gone wrong in following, the advice of a distinguished public servant of the stature of Gordon Robertson. Senator MacEachen says that some of Mr. Robertson's advice was good and some of it not so good. Perhaps he will elucidate when he speaks.

● (1640)

Senator Frith: Make him an offer!

Senator Murray: It is easy to blame the public servants—

Senator MacEachen: You were quoting one of those—

Senator Murray: —for political disasters.

Senator MacEachen: —hangovers from the old regime.

Senator Murray: Mr. Robertson has been a distinguished public servant. He is now—

Senator MacEachen: Like the senators here—

Senator Roblin: Pay attention, now! It will do you good!

Senator MacEachen: Like the senators here, he is one of Mr. Trudeau's appointees.

Senator Murray: And my honourable friend should listen to what he has to say. He went on to say—

Senator MacEachen: Apparently he has more credibility than the rest of us! Just because we happen to be in the Senate, we have lost our credibility!

Senator Murray: No, no, not your credibility, your legitimacy.

Senator MacEachen: But Gordon still has it, even though he was successively re-appointed by Mr. Trudeau.

Senator Murray: You lack the legitimacy to do what John Turner is calling on you to do.

Senator Frith: Unlike Mr. Robertson!

Senator Murray: Let us listen to what he has to say.

Senator Frith: This is still Mr. Robertson speaking on behalf of his constituency!

Senator Murray: This is good!

Senator Nurgitz: Give them the whip!

Senator Murray: He went on to say:

It is to be hoped that the present cynical abuse of power by the Liberal majority in the Senate may, in the end, convince thinking people in Canada that this one serious mistake in our federal structure must at last be remedied.

Senator Roblin: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray:

The pious hypocrisy—

Senator Frith: Now, come on; no confessions, please!

Senator Murray:

—about protecting the democratic right of the people of Canada to decide on the Free Trade Agreement is clever and seductive—and it may work. But it is totally specious. What we have is a small group of people, appointed as an act of political patronage and with responsibility to no one, exercising a power that is technically constitutional for a purpose that is totally partisan.

Senator Steuart: Shame!

Senator Frith: Party politics again!

Senator Murray: Gordon Robertson went on to say:

The objective—

Senator Frith: Goodness sakes! Let's hear it for the U.S.S.R.—no party politics there!

Senator Murray:

The objective of this archaic cabal is to frustrate the operation of a democratically elected government. And why do they do it? Because they think it will help their party at the polls.

Senator Frith: Is this still Gordon?

Senator Murray: This is Gordon Robertson speaking—

Senator Steuart: A great democrat from Saskatchewan!

Senator Murray: —and I invite the attention of honourable senators—

Senator Steuart: He couldn't be elected as dog catcher!

Senator Murray: —to the following sentence:

As a test of the motives of the Liberals in the Senate, one might ask if they would have blocked the Free Trade Agreement if it had been a Liberal government proposing it. Obviously they would not.

Senator Sinclair: We wouldn't have signed the agreement.

Senator Murray:

The democratic principle they so virtuously defend would somehow not apply.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Is that the end of the Delphic pronouncements?

Senator Roblin: There is nothing Delphic about that;—

Senator Murray: As a matter of fact—

Senator Roblin: —it is straight to the point.

Senator Murray: —I will come back to Mr. Robertson in a few minutes.

Senator Steuart: The gospel according to Gordon!

Senator MacEachen: It shows how little he knows about politics!

Senator Roblin: He knows a lot about the Senate.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend took his advice for an awfully long time and, as I said, seldom went wrong.

Senator Flynn: But not when he was Minister of Finance!

Senator MacEachen: Sometimes.

Senator Murray: The third element of Mr. Turner's rationale is that there had been inadequate debate in the House of Commons. I have already set out the facts regarding the study and debate that the Free Trade Agreement—

Senator Steuart: You have already admitted that!

Senator Murray: —and the legislation have received in the other place and, indeed, here. In any case, the Senate, which is already quite familiar with the issues and has already spent considerable committee and house time on them, can give this legislation the careful consideration it deserves without frustrating and subverting the parliamentary process. Surely, the proper avenue for vindication and redress on the part of an opposition in the House of Commons is not to call upon the appointed Senate to block legislation.

Whatever conclusions one reaches about the rationale of the Right Honourable John Turner—and I believe the rationale is simply a contrivance—the conventions of Parliament and of the Constitution transcend any given issue. Proceeding in rigid adherence to the letter of the Constitution without having reference to its conventions would place Canada's government in an Alice-in-Wonderland situation. The Governor General could exercise personally various powers of the Crown with or without reference to the government of the day.

Senator MacEachen: Is this Murray speaking or is it Robertson?

Senator Murray: This is a statement of what the conventions are, and I am saying—

Senator Frith: But is this you talking?

Senator Murray: Yes, of course.

Senator Frith: It is not Gordon Robertson?

Senator Murray: Oh, did I not indicate where Mr. Robertson's thoughts had left off? Let me—

Senator Nurgitz: Read that again! We want to hear Robertson again!

Senator Murray: I wanted to come back to him anyway.

Senator Frith: He is so well plied on that side that you would like to hear him again!

Senator Murray: I have one more paragraph from Gordon Robertson to share with you.

Senator Molgat: Would the minister table the full text of what Mr. Robertson wrote?

Senator Murray: I will do so. I took a couple of pages—

Senator Molgat: Whatever you are quoting, you might as well table the whole document.

Senator Murray: I shall table the page with that quotation.

Senator Molgat: No.

Senator Murray: If you want the whole speech, I will obtain it.

Senator Molgat: I am sorry; I request the full document from which you are quoting.

Senator Murray: And you shall have it.

Senator Flynn: You don't have the right to ask for it!

Senator Molgat: Yes, I do!

Senator Flynn: Certainly not!

Senator Molgat: He is quoting from it!

Senator Murray: It certainly seems to have gotten under the honourable senator's skin.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Flynn: He has a good imagination.

Senator Murray: The point I was making, honourable senators, is that if we acted or allowed various public people to act according to the strict letter of the Constitution, all kinds of extraordinary things—things we regard as abnormal in our parliamentary democracy—could take place. The Governor General could exercise various powers of the Crown with or without reference to the government of the day. The government could in any case be dismissed and replaced by fiat of Her Excellency.

By the way, since it is Mr. Turner who has embarked on a program to destroy some of the conventions of our parliamentary democracy, it is worth asking whether he would consider it legitimate to instruct the Governor General to hold up her assent; whether he would consider it legitimate to instruct the Governor General not to sanction—

Senator Frith: "Instruct" or ask?

Senator Murray: I will use my honourable friend's term, "ask"—would Mr. Turner consider it legitimate or would Senator Frith consider it legitimate—

Senator Doody: That is more to the point!

Senator Murray: Would Senator Frith consider it legitimate for his leader in the other place—a Privy Councillor and an officer of the House of Commons—to request the Governor General not to assent to some important legislation until an election was held?

Senator Frith: No.

Senator Murray: Would they consider it legitimate to have Mr. Turner call on the Governor General to do that?

Senator Gigantès: It would be legitimate and proper under section 4 of the Charter to use the authority—

Senator Murray: The honourable senator says that it would be legitimate. I am glad to have that statement on the record.

Senator Gigantès: According to section 4 of the Charter—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Order!

Senator Murray: It would be legitimate and proper—

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Murray: It would be legitimate—

Senator Frith: Do you mean that he should not ask—

Senator Murray: I am glad to have that from a confidant of Mr. Turner's and one of his strong supporters in this place, when he is not supporting Mr. Trudeau. We now have it from Senator Gigantès that it would be legitimate and proper for the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the other place to call upon Her Excellency the Governor General—

Senator Flynn: He knows; he is a former adviser to the King of Greece!

Senator Murray: —to refuse her assent to important legislation emanating from Parliament—

Senator Frith: No, no, no.

Senator Murray: —until an election was held.

Senator Frith: That is not what he said!

Senator Gigantès: I rise on a point of privilege.

Senator Murray: That was the honourable senator's—

Senator Gigantès: That is not—

Senator Murray: I know what my—

Senator Phillips: Order!

Senator Gigantès: The honourable senator is—

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Murray: I heard my honourable friend's answer, and I thank him for it.

Some Hon. Senators: Order!

Senator Barootes: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Will the Senate allow him—

• (1650)

Senator Corbin: There is no order; sit down!

Senator Barootes: —to finish his statement?

Senator Stollery: Well, he asked him; he asked!

Senator Gigantès: I wish to reiterate that he asked the question, and I gave an answer. He is now misquoting me.

Senator Doody: You interrupted him. He asked a question.

Senator Gigantès: Article IV of the Charter gives the right to the House of Commons by a two-thirds majority to postpone elections beyond five years if Parliament accepts. Under such circumstances I claim that it would be legitimate on the part of the Leader of the Opposition to ask the Governor General not to accede to such a request from the Leader of a two-thirds majority in the House of Commons. That is what I said; that is all. He was misquoting me.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is pushing forward—

Senator Flynn: They are experts on every topic!

Senator Murray: —and is expanding the area in which he thinks—

Senator Stewart: No; you cannot have heard him, for that is not what he said!

Senator Frith: That is not right at all!

Senator MacEachen: That is not right!

Senator Murray: The Honourable Senator Stewart should not get quite so agitated.

Senator Frith: You may not have heard him. That is not what he said.

Senator Murray: I heard my question, and I heard the honourable senator's answer.

Senator Frith: You did not, though.

Senator Murray: My question is whether, and under what circumstances, it would be legitimate, or Mr. Turner would consider it legitimate and honourable senators would consider it legitimate of Mr. Turner—

Senator Stollery: In legitimate circumstances.

Senator Murray: —to request the Governor General to withhold her assent to important legislation—

Senator Frith: And he gave such a circumstance.

Senator Murray: —until an election was held.

Senator Frith: That was not your question; you heard wrong.

Senator Murray: That was my question. I am glad that honourable senators have obviously been considering the matter of what advice the Leader of the Opposition would have to tender to Her Majesty's representative. I wonder if this has been a matter canvassed by their caucus, or by their constitutional experts, or by their political strategists, some of whom are in this house.

Senator Frith: On second thought, let us get back to Gordon! He was bad enough!

Senator Murray: If Mr. Turner has his way, the conventions of our parliamentary democracy will be falling all around us. This debate may be even more rigorous than I thought.

Senator Stollery: Where is Gordon?

An Hon. Senator: Where is Gordon?

Senator Murray: The letter of the Constitution, by which the Governor General not only could reign, but could rule, by which she could dismiss governments and by which we, the government, the federal Crown, could disallow provincial legislation, is not the way the world works anymore—nor should it.

In that connection let me now—

Senator Frith: Back to Gordon!

Senator Murray: —produce a paragraph from the Honourable Gordon Robertson.

Senator Frith: Here is Gordon!

Senator Murray: He said—

Senator Steuart: The Tories never loved Gordon so much when he was here!

Senator Murray: During the whole term of its office, Mr. Gordon Robertson served the Diefenbaker government as a deputy minister and as Commissioner of the Northwest Territories.

Senator Steuart: I well remember.

Senator Murray: He has served in the Privy Council under governments of various stripes.

Senator Frith: Our Siberia!

Senator Murray: He is one of our most respected—

Senator Steuart: He was a good Saskatchewan boy!

[Senator Frith.]

Senator Murray: —retired, senior public servants.

Senator Frith: Up until about one hour ago!

Senator Murray: This will take me 20 seconds. Speaking of this abuse of power by the Liberal majority in the Senate Mr. Robertson states:

It is no excuse that something like the present ploy was perpetrated in 1913. A lot of things were considered acceptable 75 years ago that we do not tolerate today.

Senator Stewart: Like what?

Senator Murray:

It was acceptable then that women should have no vote:—

An Hon. Senator: You have your answer!

Senator Murray: Does my honourable friend want to comment on that?

Senator Steuart: No.

Senator Murray:

—they were not yet thought constitutionally to be 'persons.' An appointed, irresponsible, patronage-based Senate was acceptable in 1867—and in 1913—it is not acceptable today.

Senator Frith: It was in 1982. The chance was there to change it and it was not taken.

Senator Stollery: It was last year, too!

Senator Frith: It was acceptable six years ago.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I realize that some senators continue to speak perhaps nostalgically of the Senate's original intended role as representative of the regions. Some senators still conduct themselves in accordance with that.

Senator McElman: How did you fellows get in?

Senator Murray: But eight of the ten provinces—

Senator McElman: By Immaculate Conception?

Senator Murray: —support the Free Trade Agreement. In the only provinces where elections have been held since the signing of the Free Trade Agreement one ardent opponent of the Free Trade Agreement, Premier Pawley, was defeated, and the supporter of the Free Trade Agreement was elected.

Yesterday, as I do not have to remind my honourable friends opposite, the Government of Premier Buchanan, a staunch supporter of the Free Trade Agreement from the outset—

Senator Stollery: How many seats did he lose?

Senator Murray: —was elected for a fourth term in the province of Nova Scotia.

Senator MacEachen: He just lost 12 seats!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: A loss of 12 seats.

An Hon. Senator: Fifteen seats!

Senator Murray: My honourable friend wants to point out that Vince MacLean won a moral victory—

Senator MacEachen: No, I did not say that; I said that Buchanan lost 12 seats.

Senator Murray: I will put that on the record.

Senator McElman: He did not win Cape Breton!

Senator Murray: If honourable senators allow themselves to accept partisan direction from outside, what do we have to say of this supposed role of the Senate to represent the regions?

Some honourable senators continue to speak of the Senate as a chamber of sober second thought, but if the majority is to accept partisan direction from outside—

Senator Frith: For example, from the Prime Minister. Will you accept no direction from the Prime Minister?

Senator Murray: No. I am a minister of the Crown, of course.

Senator Frith: Will none of your colleagues accept it?

Senator Murray: I am governed by cabinet solidarity, as my friend well knows.

Senator Frith: That is partisan outside direction isn't it? It is outside direction. It is partisan. It is outside. It is direction. It has all the qualities.

Senator Walker: Be quiet!

Senator Frith: What about your colleagues? Will they take any directions from the Prime Minister?

Senator Murray: My colleagues will speak for themselves.

Senator Frith: They will take no direction from the Prime Minister?

Senator Flynn: According to you they want no one!

Senator Murray: My colleagues want this chamber to deal with this bill and to vote on this bill and not to try to block it for the duration of this Parliament.

If the Liberal majority in this place accepts partisan political direction even before the bill has arrived here, the deliberative role of acting as a chamber of sober second thought is a dead letter. It will have been sacrificed by the Liberal majority for partisan reasons.

Honourable senators, I believe that our duty in this appointed chamber is to debate this bill, give it second reading, approval in principle, give it detailed but expeditious consideration in committee, make a report with such comments as the committee sees fit, respect the conventions that have governed the conduct of this chamber in modern times and pass this bill into law.

Senator Frith: With amendments, perhaps? Send it back with amendments?

Senator Murray: Pass this bill into law—

Senator Frith: With amendments? Would amendments be in the same category?

Senator Murray: Our duty is to pass this bill into law and respect the conventions that have governed the conduct of this chamber.

Senator Frith: What about amendments? Well, that includes amendments.

Senator Murray: Why does my friend worry about amendments? He has already told us that unanimously he and his colleagues have agreed to block—

Senator Frith: We are listening to your description.

Senator Murray: I am telling the honourable senator that—

Senator Stollery: We are listening to your argument.

Senator Murray: —it is the duty of this house to pass the bill into law.

Senator Frith: Would amendments be acceptable?

Senator Murray: I have already told the honourable senator what I believe our duty is. Honourable senators cannot choose piece by piece.

Senator Stollery: It is another seamless web.

Senator Murray: This is an international agreement.

Senator Frith: A seamless web!

Senator Murray: We will see what honourable senators will do. I believe that honourable senators should honour and respect the modern conventions, that is, the conventions that have grown up in modern times in this place. Honourable senators are not here in the nineteenth-century concept to represent the property owners of the country.

● (1700)

On its merits, honourable senators, this is a bill which you have every reason to approve in order to master the economic challenges that face the Canadian people now and will in the coming years. The opponents of this bill have no alternative to the Free Trade Agreement. They have no alternative. In the immortal words of John Turner, they would "tear it up."

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I compliment the Leader of the Government for his valiant effort to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

Senator Flynn: Are you speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party?

Senator Gigantès: Yes, sir. I belong to it.

I heard in his speech at least two dozen misstatements of fact and I want to read it very carefully before responding tomorrow in case I find even more misstatements of fact. In particular, I shall prove tomorrow that the three aims of the government—enhanced access, more secure access and adequate institutional provisions—were not achieved, and to prove that I shall use the sources that the Leader of the Government himself quoted and the people whose names he dropped all over his speech today.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William M. Kelly moved the second reading of Bill C-143, to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse.

He said: Honourable senators, I recognize the lateness of the day, but I am rather anxious to move ahead with this bill and to have it referred to committee.

I am pleased, indeed, to speak today on Bill C-143, to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse.

Honourable senators, drug and alcohol abuse have been an area of deep interest and concern to me for some time. Like others of my generation, who dealt somewhat carelessly and cavalierly with lower, less damaging and less insidious forms of abuse, the spreading blight of drug abuse, in its nearly infinite combinations and permutations, presents to me a particularly frightening, bewildering and alarming phenomenon.

In Toronto, as in most other Canadian cities, we daily witness evidence of increased drug and alcohol abuse among all echelons of society, including children of 10, 9 or even 8 years of age, in our parks, on our streets, in schools, in the workplace—in fact everywhere. The impact on our social and economic fabric is potentially devastating and it is getting worse.

The statistics we have all heard are mind-numbing in themselves. According to the Addiction Research Foundation, using 1985 figures, about 3 per cent of students in grades 7 to 13 have used cocaine; about 25 per cent have used cannabis; about 2 per cent have used heroin; about 17 per cent have used stimulants of various types; about 3 per cent have used barbiturates; About 25 per cent have used tobacco; and over 70 per cent have used alcohol. I am talking now about students in grades 7 to 13.

Although the traditional focus for substance abuse is on drugs, alcohol remains, by far and away, the most important drug to worry about in terms of abuse. Furthermore, multiple drug use is common and cross-addiction is increasing.

The adverse impact of substance abuse includes an increased accident rate, lowered performance at work, physical ill health, psychological stress and pain, relationship problems at work and within the family, financial problems, loss of employment, loss of career opportunities, absenteeism from work or school and so on.

No parent or grandparent can feel immune from the scourge of drug abuse after following reports of the inquest into the tragic and completely senseless death of Benji Hayward, the 14-year old North York boy who drowned in Lake Ontario after taking LSD, marijuana and alcohol at a rock concert. Benji was from an evidently respected, stable, loving, middle-class family. Similar stories abound across Canada and leave us with the feeling: "There but for the grace of God go you and I."

No family, no segment of society and no area of the country is immune any longer from the relentless tide of drugs now readily available. I sense and fear that our institutions, already overburdened by more traditional demands and pressures, are simply not equipped to cope with the problem.

Honourable senators, in 1969 I became a founding director of CODA, the Committee on Drug Abuse located in Toronto. CODA is a non-profit organization funded in part by corporate donations and in part by one-time government grants. CODA's role is to bring drug and alcohol preventative education to schools, the workplace, teachers, parents and children. It also runs a reference service for drug abusers seeking help.

My experience with CODA taught me the realities, the very frightening realities, of drug and alcohol abuse in Canada and its pernicious and explosive impact on the individual, the family, our schools and our society.

For these reasons and with this background, I heartily endorse Bill C-143.

The bill originates from a commitment made by the Minister of Health in May 1987 upon the launching of the national drug strategy. "Action on Drug Abuse," as it is called, was designed as a $210 million initiative to reduce the harm to individuals, families and communities from abuse of alcohol and drugs. A report by Mr. David Archibald, the founder of the Addiction Research Foundation Council on Alcohol and Addictions, recommends ways in which the disparate resources can be drawn together to serve the country as a whole. A national consultative process on drug abuse was launched by the Department of Health and Welfare last year; and we have the review and report of the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare in the other place. The report, issued in March 1988, is entitled "Booze, Pills and Dope" and makes fascinating, if somewhat frightening, reading.

The bill before us today would establish a crown corporation, funded—at least for the time being—exclusively by the federal government. Rather than being a "doer", an operational entity, the centre will act as a catalyst and facilitator, an "honest broker", to bring together the expertise, resources and views of the federal, provincial and territorial governments, as well as those of the private and voluntary sectors, research organizations, distinguished experts and so on.

The centre would promote consultation and cooperation among all the players in the substance abuse field; it would promote information exchange, develop knowledge and expertise on substance abuse, perform policy and program analysis and development and promote knowledge and understanding of efforts and activities in other countries and through international organizations.

The business and affairs of the centre will be the overall responsibility of a board of directors, consisting of a chairman and up to 14 individuals, with up to 6 appointed by the Governor in Council and the remainder appointed by the board itself.

The chairman will doubtless be a person of national stature with expertise in the field, appointed by the Governor in Council. To oversee the day-to-day operations and staff of the centre, the board will have the power to appoint a president, subject to approval by the Governor in Council.

Honourable senators, I could go on at some length explaining the technical details of the bill. I suspect, however, that this would not be a productive use of our time, particularly at this hour. The structure and organization of the centre follow the approach for all federal crown corporations and are entirely consistent with Part XII of the Financial Administration Act that governs such matters. I feel, therefore, that I need to say no more on such aspects.

• (1710)

Let me close by noting that this bill was tabled in the other place on July 21 of this year and moved quickly through the system with the support of all parties. We should do no less here. I therefore commend this important bill to your quick and sympathetic attention. Its passage will be a step—albeit a small one, but a step all the same—to counter the scourge of substance abuse that, directly or indirectly, threatens and imperils us all.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, debate adjourned.

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cochrane, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bazin, for the second reading of the Bill C-123, An Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).—(Honourable Senator Marchand, P.C.).

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have not had a great deal of time to look at this particular bill, but in reviewing it I have not seen any reason to hold it up. It does make some improvements to the Indian Act in the way that the administration of certain minors' trusts are administered. There has been some controversy in our community about this, but basically it has all been ironed out. Amendments were passed in the other place that were put forward by the Indian community.

I should like the members of a Senate committee to be given an opportunity to question witnesses and have them explain in detail what exactly is contained in the bill. Therefore, honourable senators, I offer my cooperation, as I am sure the opposition will, in moving this bill along.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cochrane, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND (PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN)—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), for the second reading of the Bill S-16, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (protection of the unborn).—(Honourable Senator Anderson).

Hon. Margaret Anderson: Honourable senators, I wish to speak for a few minutes on Bill C-16 and to support the stated purpose of the bill, which is "to reassert society's vital interest in the unborn children."

I am sure no one is in favour of abortion as a form of birth control. Everyone would agree that prevention is the answer and it is to be hoped in the not too distant future Canadian society as a whole will oppose abortion for any reason other than the protection of the mother's life. At the same time, however, society will have to accept its responsibility to assist and encourage those women who have nowhere to turn for help.

Abortion itself is not easy. Under the best of conditions there can be serious physical as well as emotional problems. The only answer is prevention, and through the ages, and in all cultures, there has been a continuous drive towards this goal.

It is interesting to note that the earliest recorded medical methods for preventing conception are contained in Egyptian scrolls of about 1850 B.C.

Today, unwanted pregnancies can be avoided. Effective means of contraception are available and it is the responsibility of men and women to take advantage of these methods for family planning. And then, too, there are safe medical procedures to accommodate husbands and wives who do not wish to have children, or any more children as the case may well be.

In my opinion, there is little reason for mature men and women to be responsible for an unwanted pregnancy. For those women who are alone, without financial means or the support of a caring husband or concerned family, pregnancy can be a terrifying experience, and, whether they want it or not, abortion may appear to be the only way out. It is at this point that society, through government, must be ready to offer meaningful support through both financial help and experienced counselling.

Some persons think all babies should be wanted, and, if they are neither wanted nor planned for, terminating a pregnancy is justified. To have every baby wanted and planned for is an unattainable and Utopian goal. At some time or other in the earlier stages I am sure many women would be delighted to be free again.

For that matter, how many of us today know whether we were wanted or not? In past days, the days of the large families, when men and women had no recourse to contraceptives, how many women with three or four or even five toddlers, and with little or no help, would have jumped for joy at discovering they were expecting again? I am sure a great many must have been absolutely horrified. But I am also sure that when their babies arrived, they were just as precious and as much loved and wanted as every other baby in the family.

As I said at the beginning, I fully support the main purpose of Bill S-16, "the Protection of the Unborn". However, I am completely at odds with the severity of the penalties outlined in the bill, especially as they deal with women. Moreover, I cannot see how they could possibly be enforced. There are too many questions to be answered.

In many cases, the woman herself is a victim, perhaps young, unmarried and deserted by her partner, or with a partner who insists she have an abortion and helps her pay for it. If the law imposes a sentence, should not that sentence be shared?

Perhaps she is a teenager whose parents arrange for an abortion with little or no regard for her wishes. Their motives are good: social and family pride and, above all, love and ambition for their daughter, or for their son whose girlfriend may be in the same situation. Everyone can understand the dilemma of the parents in these circumstances, but one has to remember that there not only is the son's or daughter's future at stake, but a grandchild's life is in the balance. If this were declared a criminal act, how could any court place all the blame on the young woman?

And then there are those women—and always were, I am sure—who break every health rule in the book hoping for a miscarriage. This would be called "wanton disregard for the safety of the unborn." But how could legislation be enforced?

In the past, before contraceptives were available, many women used drastic methods against their own persons to try to end pregnancies—no doubt in some cases with the encouragement of their husbands. Some of these old remedies have gone by the board, but, legally, what could or can be done about it?

• (1720)

In the final analysis, the only solution is for society itself to condemn abortion by stressing the value of family, of children, and of all human life.

In closing, I wish to repeat that I am in favour of the main thrust of Bill S-16, which is to protect the unborn. However, only if major changes were made to the extremely severe penalties provided for, could I support the bill in its entirety.

On motion of Senator Haidasz, for Senator Turner, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION BILL

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

WEDNESDAY, September 7, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

THIRTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, July 27, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment but with the following comments:

Believing that the principles outlined in the preamble of the Bill are worthy objectives and essential to ensure that public confidence in our democratic system of government is maintained and fostered, the Committee is prepared to recommend the passage of Bill C-82 without amendment. At the same time, a majority of the Committee has concerns regarding the scope and language of the Bill.

The first concern relates to the Bill's failure to specifically address the information gathering activities of lobbyists. Since information gathering is a significant portion of a lobbyist's work, the Committee feels that some attempt should have been made to include in the Bill those information gathering activities that are intended to result in an attempt to influence government decisions.

Another of the Committee's concerns is derived from the division of lobbyists into two tiers. Tier II lobbyists, that is, individuals in the employ of organizations who spend a significant part of their duties communicating with public office holders, unlike their Tier I (third party paid) counterparts, are not required to disclose the subject-matter of their communications with public office holders.

It has been suggested that there is no need for Tier II lobbyists to disclose the subject-matter of their approaches to public office holders because their names alone will give an indication of the issues of concern to them. However, we have difficulty accepting the contention that a business card will provide all the information that the Canadian public and public office holders should know about the lobbying activities of these lobbyists. A Tier II lobbyist may have an interest in several subjects, some of which would not be readily apparent from the name of an employer.

Tier I and Tier II lobbyists are also treated differently when they attempt to influence the awarding of government contracts. A Tier I lobbyist would be required to file a return with the Registrar General while no filing would be required of a Tier II lobbyist. On a practical level, this avoids the onerous requirement of having every salesperson who approaches government on routine business register his activity.

Nonetheless, the Committee is concerned that corporations that do not hire a Tier I lobbyist to assist them in their attempts to influence the awarding of a government contract will be able to conduct their activities in this regard free of public scrutiny.

The Committee is also concerned with the Bill's ambiguous language. The word "policy" and the phrase "in an attempt to influence" are examples of such ambiguity.

Our last concern relates to the interpretation of paragraph 5 (2) (d) of the Bill. If lobbyists are required to file a return for each communication, administration of the Bill will become overly burdensome. The Minister assured the Committee that this is not the government's intention. We also recognize that regulations will be important to ensure effective administration of the Bill.

Finally, the Committee takes some comfort in knowing that, after three years, a Parliamentary committee will review the administration and operation of the Bill. At that time, an opportunity will exist to address the concerns raised in this report.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Deputy Chairman

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Alachlor's recent loss of its registration under the Pest Control Products Act has highlighted certain problems with the regulation of pesticides in Canada.

The Committee believes that, as in the United States, health and environmental information on pesticides should be made available to the public, while true proprietary information should be protected:

Health and environmental information used in the registration of pesticides should be made public, while at the same time ensuring that the data are protected from unauthorized use.

Similarly, any review board appointed in connection with a decision not to register a pesticide, or to cancel or suspend a registration, must have all necessary information:

Any review board appointed pursuant to the Pest Control Products Regulations must have full access to information on alternative products, or products of the same class.

Information should also be made available to the public in connection with the review of the registration of a pest control product; availability of position documents at various stages of the review process would allow all interested parties to know the government's position, and on what it is based, and to provide comments prior to the next stage:

Documentation should be published prior to the cancellation or suspension of a pesticide registration.

The Pest Control Products Act and Regulations are silent about the weighing of risk-benefit considerations in deciding whether a particular pesticide should be registered, or a registration cancelled or suspended. Such an analysis should be explicitly required, especially in respect of comparable or alternative products:

The Pest Control Products Act and Regulations should clearly specify that, where minimum standards have been met, risk-benefit or comparative risk-benefit analysis is to be carried out with respect to (a) the registration of a pesticide and (b) the cancellation or suspension of a registration.

As pesticides are by their nature toxic, it is important that users be educated on the safe handling of them. While this is primarily a matter of provincial jurisdiction, the Committee recommends that:

The federal government should encourage provincial initiatives leading to common regulation of the use of certain pesticides only by licensed users.

The roles of the various parties involved in the pesticide regulation and review board processes must be clarified:

The decision-making hierarchy must be set out clearly, and the decision must be final at each stage, subject to any appeal.

A review board appointed under the Pest Control Products Regulations acts only in an advisory capacity. While it would be possible to give more authority to a review board, it is important that there remain a strong element of political accountability:

The ultimate decision regarding the registration of pesticides, or the cancellation or suspension of a registration, should remain at the political level, with either a Minister or the Cabinet.

THE CANADIAN REGULATORY PROCESS FOR PESTICIDES

INTRODUCTION

The development and use of pesticides (including all types of insecticides, herbicides, fungicides and other such products) has been a major benefit to Canadian agriculture and forestry. Pesticides, however, often have unintended results and carry risks to human beings and to the environment.

In Canada, the use of pesticides is regulated, at the federal level, primarily by the Pest Control Products Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. P-10, as amended, and the Regulations thereunder. As a result of recent events, however, certain problems with the Act have become apparent. The Committee feels that it is imperative that these concerns be addressed at the earliest opportunity.

The use of chemical pesticides has expanded rapidly since the Second World War. Over the past few years, there have been a number of studies and reports regarding their use in Canada. In 1981, Dr. Ross Hall prepared the paper "A New Approach to Pest Control in Canada" for the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council. In 1984, Professors Liora Salter and William Leiss submitted their report "Consultation in the Assessment and Registration of Pesticides" to the Minister of Agriculture. Other groups, such as the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers (CCREM) and the Nielsen Task Force, have also looked at the registration and use of pesticides in this country. In 1987, the Law Reform Commission of Canada issued a study paper entitled "Pesticides in Canada: An Examination of Federal Law and Policy." It should also be noted that this Committee, in connection with the Senate report "Soil at Risk - Canada's Eroding Future", in 1986 issued a report on herbicide pricing that touched on this topic. All of these studies and reports have included comments on the existing system for the registration and use of pesticides and ways in which it could be improved.

The immediate cause of the Committee's current inquiry is the case of alachlor. Alachlor is a herbicide of the chloracetanilide chemical family used to control annual grasses and many broad-leaved weeds in such crops as corn, soybeans and canola. It has been widely used, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, on corn and soybean crops. While it provides full season control of weeds which pose major problems for these crops, it does not persist into subsequent growing seasons.

Alachlor was first registered for use under the Pest Control Products Act by Monsanto Canada Inc. in 1969, and was marketed under the brand name "Lasso." In 1977, concern arose about the validity of certain toxicological studies used to support the registration of many pesticides, including alachlor, and, as a result, new toxicological studies were requested by the Department of Agriculture. Monsanto submitted replacement studies for alachlor in 1982. As a result of its analysis of these new data, in June 1984 Health and Welfare Canada recommended to the Minister of Agriculture that the use of alachlor be cancelled because of its carcinogenic risk. At the same time, Health and Welfare Canada concluded that metolachlor, marketed under the brand name of "Dual" by Ciba-Geigy Canada Ltd., had not demonstrated carcinogenic activity under the test conditions, even though it was structurally similar to alachlor (Issue 25: 9,13).

In February 1985, therefore, the Minister of Agriculture cancelled alachlor's registration on the advice of Health and Welfare Canada. To accommodate farmers, a temporary registration was granted to Monsanto for the balance of the calendar year. Monsanto applied for a review of the Minister's decision, as provided for in section 23 of the Pest Control Products Regulations. The Minister of Agriculture subsequently appointed the independent five-member Alachlor Review Board, which heard evidence from 53 witnesses on safety, merit and value issues relevant to the ban on alachlor. The Alachlor Review Board, in its report of November 1987, recommended that the registration of alachlor be retained, subject to a yearly review. The Board felt that the existence of metolachlor, which was considered to provide equivalent benefits with less potential risk, had been a factor in the Minister's ban on alachlor; in the Board's view, however, metolachlor was also an animal carcinogen (Alachlor Review Board Report, p. 6). Notwithstanding this recommendation, in January 1988, the Minister of Agriculture announced that the registration of alachlor would not be restored, citing risks to farmers through exposure to the chemical and the availability of an acceptable substitute in metolachlor.

In February 1988, Monsanto filed an application with the Federal Court of Appeal to review and set aside the Minister's decision and to order the Minister to accept the Board's recommendation. Agriculture Canada responded by filing a motion challenging the Court of Appeal's jurisdiction to hear Monsanto's application. In April 1988, the Court of Appeal ruled that it did have this jurisdiction.

The alachlor case raises important issues and concerns that the federal government must address. Some of these are discussed in the report of the Alachlor Review Board itself. In addition, the Pest Management Advisory Board commissioned a legal analysis of the review board process by Professor Wade MacLauchlan of Dalhousie Law School; this study, received by the Pest Management Advisory Board in September 1986, has been submitted to the Minister of Agriculture, but has not yet been made public. In addition, the Pest Management Advisory Board has provided the Minister with a number of suggestions for improving the process, while the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture issued a report on the regulatory process for farm chemicals and pesticides, in particular alachlor, on 10 May 1988.

In response to the concerns raised by the alachlor case, the Senate Committee convened several meetings with interested parties to review the pesticide registration process and the review board procedures. The Committee appreciates the assistance of witnesses, and has carefully considered their views.

The Committee was urged by Monsanto Canada Inc. and other witnesses to ask the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider his decision and to renew the registration of alachlor in Canada. The Committee does not have ready access to the scientific, economic and other expertise necessary to carry out its own review of alachlor. Its observation is that the process set out under the Pest Control Products Act has been followed, whether one agrees with the final decision or not. Further, it is noted that the Minister's decision is currently the subject of proceedings in the Federal Court of Appeal. Accordingly, the Committee has chosen only to assess the process.

Beyond issues specific to alachlor, the Committee has concerns regarding the entire process for the registration and review of pest control products in Canada. It has been shown to be flawed and unsatisfactory; it needs to be improved if the Canadian public is to have confidence in the system and if the various interests involved are to be well served. This report will address some of the Committee's concerns.

THE PESTICIDE REGULATION PROCESS

Constitutional jurisdiction for the regulation of pesticides in Canada is shared by the federal and provincial levels of government. In general, it may be said that it is divided between federal control over the registration, classification and labelling of such products, and provincial control over their actual use through licences, permits and related regulatory techniques.

The regulation of pesticides in Canada has been influenced by three general objectives:

- a) to promote agriculture;
- b) to protect the public from poisons and adulterated food; and
- c) to protect the environment from pollution and contamination by toxic substances.⁽¹⁾

Historically, Health and Welfare Canada has played a prominent role in the regulation process. The first Canadian pesticides were homemade. Farmers generally bought chemicals in bulk, prepared their own mixtures, and applied them to their crops. They were free to sell these crops for food, providing there was insufficient residue to qualify them as adulterated within the meaning of the Food and Drug Act. The department protected the public by ruling that only pharmacists were able to sell the chemicals.

With the development of a commercial pesticide industry in the 1920s, authority over pesticides shifted from Health and Welfare Canada to Agriculture Canada. Farmers sought legislative protection from the sale of ineffective products and, in response, the Agricultural Pests' Control Act was passed in 1927.

This was the first Act to recognize "pesticides" as an independent matter for regulation. Since it was designed to protect farmers from misrepresentation, responsibility for the Act was given to Agriculture Canada. Farmers preparing their own mixtures generally knew the ingredients and what precautions should be taken. Commercial pesticides, however, were marketed under brand names and often gave no indication of the active ingredients.

Under the Agricultural Pests' Control Act, a manufacturer registered its brand and guaranteed that it would contain the amount of active ingredient claimed. Registration could be refused on four bases, including a decision by the Minister of Agriculture that the pesticide, when used according to directions, was generally detrimental or seriously injurious to vegetation (except weeds), domestic animals or public health. Essentially, any pesticide could be marketed, provided that it was effective and not acutely toxic to non-target organisms. The Act did not require that directions for use of the pesticide be placed on the label, or be otherwise available to the user, although one section did prescribe what the label was to show. The application for registration had to include three copies of the directions for use, which had to include: the time, frequency and method of application; the quantity to be used; and the purposes for which the pesticide was intended.

(1) Jill A. Browne, Pesticide Regulation in Canada The Federal Registration Process and Its Development Since 1927, Environmental Law Centre, Alberta Law Foundation, April 1985, p. 2.

The registration system enacted under the Agricultural Pests' Control Act largely remained unchanged until 1969. The main purpose of registration continued to be the protection of farmers from ineffective pest control products by prohibiting misrepresentation of a registered brand's ingredients or effectiveness. When an application was made for a new brand's registration, the government had the authority to test the product's effectiveness at the applicant's expense, although such testing was not mandatory.

In 1969, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture considered four related bills, including a new Pest Control Products Act. Whereas previously the legislation had regulated the composition, packaging and labelling of pesticides, greater public concern regarding their potential harmfulness was reflected in amendments that added manufacturing, handling and advertising to the activities covered under the Act and extended regulatory authority. In Committee hearings to discuss the proposed amendments, chemical manufacturers lobbied for an appeal process should an application to register a product be denied. Agriculture Canada, feeling registration was a "technical" rather than a "judicial" decision, determined that an appeal mechanism was inappropriate, and instead provided for a hearing into a refusal of registration.

The Pest Control Products Act, which has remained essentially unchanged since 1969, is the principal legislative mechanism controlling pesticides in Canada. Section 3(1) of this Act, administered by Agriculture Canada, prohibits the manufacturing, storing, displaying, distributing or using of a control product "under unsafe conditions." The importing and selling of such products in Canada are also prohibited unless the products have been registered, packaged and labelled according to certain prescribed conditions. There are also certain other regulatory requirements:

- a) the Minister of Agriculture must register all control products imported, sold or used in Canada;
- b) the Minister can specify the scientific information that must be submitted in support of a registration application;
- c) given labelling requirements, the Minister can prohibit any use of a pesticide that is inconsistent with such labelling; and
- d) the Minister may authorize record-keeping and inspections, and undertake a variety of enforcement actions; these actions may be administrative, such as seizures and detentions, and quasi-criminal, including prosecutions.

All pesticides, with certain limited exceptions, must be registered under the Pest Control Products Act prior to sale in Canada. According to section 18(c) of the Pest Control Products Regulations, registration may be granted only if the Minister of Agriculture is of the opinion "... that the control product has merit or value for the purposes claimed when...used in accordance with its label directions." In addition, sections 18(d)(i) and (ii) provide that the product's use must not lead to an unacceptable risk of harm to a variety of persons, animals or things, including things on which the product is intended to be used, or the public health, plants, animals or the environment.

In order to allow the Minister of Agriculture to assess the safety, merit and value of the product, section 9(2)(b)(i) of the Pest Control Products Regulations sets out that the applicant must provide scientific test studies and results regarding:

- a) control product effectiveness;
- b) occupational safety and exposure;
- c) the effects on host plant, animal, article or non-target organisms;
- d) control product and residue persistence, retention and movement;
- e) the analysis methods for detecting the control product and its residues in food, feed and the environment;
- f) the detoxification or neutralization methods with respect to the control product in soil, water, air or articles;
- g) the disposal methods for the control product and its empty packages; and
- h) information concerning the storage, display, stability and compatibility of the control product with other products.

An application for a pesticide to be used on products intended for human consumption must be supported by test results showing the effects of the control product or its residues on test animals. Animal tests to determine the pesticide's safety for human health include studies of acute toxicity, and short-term, long-term and special effects. These results will allow the Minister to determine human or animal risks associated with the product's use. Tests are conducted on both the active ingredient and the formulated control product to assess whether the toxicity of the active ingredient is affected by the inert ingredients. These data are reviewed by the Evaluation Section of the Pesticides Directorate of Agriculture Canada, which administers the Act. To aid applicants in meeting the requirements for technical data under the Act and Regulations, Agriculture Canada issues guidelines and trade memoranda. Although there is no legal requirement for other government departments to do so, some are requested by Agriculture Canada to review and comment on aspects of the scientific data; such departments include Health and Welfare Canada, Environment Canada and Fisheries and Oceans Canada. Although these departments may give advice from their own expertise, the final decision with respect to product registration is made by the Minister of Agriculture.

Agriculture Canada, beginning in September 1980, adopted a product-specific registration policy; this evolved in response to industry pressure to recognize data ownership and concern about possible microcontaminants in active ingredients. This policy, which more directly focuses on the active ingredient and the final formulated control product, links each registered product to a specific producer of the active ingredient and a specific data package. The generic approach previously used assumed that all sources of a chemical were equal, regardless of the manufacturer. Different manufacturing processes, however, can affect product quality. Moreover, under the generic approach, competing firms were able to obtain registration for similar products by using data provided by other companies. Manufacturers were formerly reluctant to develop further, and often costly, safety studies. With the adoption of the product-specific registration policy, however, they have a greater incentive to do so. The results are relevant to their product only and for their sole use; competitors must conduct their own research studies. This policy may, however, represent a barrier to entry into the industry and thereby limit competition. In addition, it may lead to a duplication of research on a particular chemical, and thereby possibly waste resources. It has been suggested that payment of compensation for the use of similar data might be a more effective and more equitable policy.

In December 1983, the Minister of Agriculture, responding to demands for meaningful public participation in decisions that could affect health and the environment, announced his desire to integrate consultative processes into the pesticide regulation procedure. Two consultants were commissioned to recommend ways in which this could be effected; their efforts resulted in a report entitled "Consultation in the Assessment and Registration of Pesticides" (the "Salter Report"), which was submitted to the Minister of Agriculture in March 1984. A principal recommendation of this report was the establishment of an independent Pest Management Advisory Board.

The Minister of Agriculture in July 1985 announced the creation of this Board, whose fundamental role was the development of a "representative, consensus-building process to meet the demand for meaningful participation in the pesticide regulatory process.”⁽²⁾ The Pest Management Advisory Board lacks separate enabling legislation establishing its role; its legal status is based on the personal service contracts between Agriculture Canada and the members of the Board, a full-time Board Chairman and two part-time members, one selected from the science community, the other from the public sector. The Board’s function is to use consultative processes to develop recommendations for the Minister of Agriculture on broad policy questions relating to the pest management process and to assess specific pest and pesticide issues, where warranted. In its working paper, the Pest Management Advisory Board noted that:

- a) the Board has no coercive or regulatory decision-making powers, and acts in an advisory capacity when making recommendations;
- b) the Board is not designed to be a second hurdle in the pesticide registration process; and
- c) the Board must be, and must be seen to be, independent in order to make effective recommendations, even though it is accountable to the Minister of Agriculture.

The Board is not restricted, however, to studying concerns solely within the jurisdiction of Agriculture Canada; the Canadian Forestry Service, Environment Canada, Health and Welfare Canada and Fisheries and Oceans Canada are also involved in pest management and could also lie within its scope.

THE PESTICIDE REVIEW PROCESS

The pesticide process has been primarily directed to the registration of new chemicals and pesticides. It has been pointed out, however, that many pesticides that are currently registered for use in Canada would not be granted registration today; this is partly because of present enhanced testing procedures and higher standards, especially with respect to environmental and health effects. Alachlor was one of a series of chemicals whose registration was called into question when it was discovered that the original tests supporting the application for registration may have been fraudulently prepared. The Department of Agriculture has begun a re-evaluation of all registered chemicals (Issue 28:

(2) The Role of the Pest Management Advisory Board: A Working Paper, Pest Management Advisory Board, Spring 1986, page 6.

19-20). As the Law Reform Commission of Canada noted in its 1987 study paper on pesticides, however, this process has been criticized as being too slow and not being prioritized properly (pages 66-68).

To date, most of the regulatory action against registered chemicals has been against specific uses, rather than against their registration per se. There have been very few product suspensions or cancellations under the Pest Control Products Act; indeed, there have been only three instances, since 1972, when the Pest Control Products Regulations were promulgated, in which review boards have been empanelled to hear a matter (leptophos, phosphamidon and alachlor). Of these, the alachlor case has been by far the most significant and contentious.

Clearly, the decision to suspend or cancel the registration of an existing product is fraught with difficulties. Unlike a refusal to register a new product, a decision to suspend or cancel a registration is bound to be disruptive. The manufacturer has become accustomed to selling his product, and has perceived rights of a sort; users have become accustomed to using the product, and have often become dependent on it to a greater or lesser extent. It is unlikely that such a decision is made lightly, but that seldom means that the affected parties are any more acquiescent. In the case of alachlor, for instance, there were concerns that cancellation would reduce competition in the market, thereby potentially increasing the cost of pesticides and making Canadian crops less competitive with the crops of countries where alachlor was still used.

The Regulations under the Pest Control Products Act permit a registrant to request the appointment of a review board if the Minister of Agriculture refuses, suspends or cancels registration. The Minister must then appoint a review board to hold a hearing (section 24) and that board must give the registrant "and all other persons who may be affected by the subject matter of the hearing an opportunity to make representations to the Board ..." (section 25(1)). The board must prepare a report, recommendations and its reasons as soon as possible after the hearing and file them with the Minister of Agriculture and the registrant (section 25(2)(a)), as well as send all the documents from the hearing to the Minister (section 25(2)(b)). The Minister can, after considering the board's report, take any action he deems advisable and notify the registrant of his decision (section 25(3)).

The review board's mandate is to "inquire into the subject matter of the application" and to "make a report containing its recommendations respecting the subject matter of the hearing." Moreover, it appears from the wording of the Regulations, and from experience in the alachlor case, that the issues reviewed by the board are to be determined largely by the party requesting the hearing.

Lack of experience with the review board process no doubt accounts for some of the difficulties encountered in the alachlor case. For instance, there was a lengthy period between the request by Monsanto for a review board (4 March 1985) and the empanelling of the Board (13 November 1985). As well, the Review Board's report was not made public until November 1987, over two and a half years after the Minister's original announcement that he was cancelling the registration of all alachlor products in Canada. The Review Board had to establish its own procedures for dealing with confidential information and the conduct of hearings. Professor Hajo Versteeg, Chairman of the Pest Management Advisory Board, told the Committee that he would make a number of recommendations to do things differently in the future, including appointing only three members, hiring experts as required rather than appointing them as members of the review board, and holding hearings without adjournments.

The Alachlor Review Board held 41 days of public hearings and heard evidence from 53 witnesses on safety, merit and value issues relevant to the decision to cancel the registration of alachlor. There were 10 parties to the hearings, most of whom were represented by counsel, and some of whom received government funding assistance. As Mr. Byron Beeler of Ciba-Geigy told the Committee, "The timeframe and turnaround for such a review should be reduced considerably as the cost for all participants can rise to a staggering amount" (Issue 28:27).

Despite the enormous investment of time, money and energy in this process, the Minister of Agriculture ultimately chose to disregard the Review Board's recommendations. In doing so, he relied on section 25(3) of the Pest Control Products Regulations which provides that:

After considering the report of the Board, the Minister may take such action with respect to the subject matter of the hearing as he deems advisable and shall notify the person who applied for the hearing of any action so taken.

The Review Board itself stressed that it merely made recommendations to the Minister of Agriculture. As its Guide for Parties stated, "The decision regarding whether or not a Certificate of Registration should be issued is the ultimate responsibility of the Minister, after considering the report of the Board."

The fact that the Minister chose not to follow the recommendations of the Review Board was obviously disappointing to Monsanto and to various users of alachlor. A number of witnesses told the Committee that, though they had been prepared to abide by whatever decision the Review Board made, they found it difficult to accept that the Minister could reach a different decision than the Review Board.

AVAILABILITY OF AND ACCESS TO INFORMATION

One of the most difficult issues in the regulation of pesticides is the availability of information. As discussed above, pursuant to the Pest Control Products Act, applicants are required to submit many studies and tests to the federal government in support of an application for registration. There is no provision for the disclosure of such information, and the industry takes the position that it should remain confidential, with the federal government seen as the trustee of such information, rather than its owner. This has meant that even provincial government agencies have had difficulty in obtaining information from the federal authorities. The confidentiality of pesticide data has also been justified on the basis of the common law protection of trade secrets and under the federal Access to Information Act, S.C. 1980-81-82-83, c. 111, although neither basis has been definitively demonstrated.

In the United States, federal pesticides law has been amended to override protection of trade secrets by providing for the release of health and safety data. Compensation schemes or exclusive use provisions protect the party initially submitting data.⁽³⁾ The U.S. position is that information about pesticide health effects should be made available to the public. In Canada, environmental groups have recommended amendments to the Pest Control Products Act to authorize public access to pesticide health and safety data. The Law Reform Commission's 1987 Study Paper on Pesticides recommended that the Act be amended generally:

(3) See, for example, the United States Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, 7 U.S.C., ss. 136 (1978), s. 3(c)(1)(d). These provisions have generally been upheld in the courts: see Ruckelshaus v. Monsanto Co. (1984) 14 E.L.R. 20539 (U.S.S.C.).

- a) to mandate public access to, and government and agency sharing of, pesticide health and safety data (concerning both active and inert ingredients); and
- b) to authorize compensation or a period of exclusive use to protect the initial data submitter from competitors seeking access to information, including trade secrets.

Clearly there are valid commercial reasons for giving protection to proprietary information. For example, a competitor might use certain information to obtain registration of his own product without having to conduct and submit the necessary toxicological testing. The costs of developing and registering a new pesticide are enormous; registrants, therefore, are entitled to consideration. Nevertheless, commercial interests must be balanced against the public interest. The decision to register and permit the use of a pesticide in Canada is not simply a matter between the manufacturer and the government, or between the manufacturer and the users. Because of the potential environmental effects of pesticides, the public has a valid interest in their registration and in obtaining access to health and safety data. Information relating to manufacturing and quality control may be more properly withheld from public scrutiny.

The 1984 Salter Report contained a number of recommendations designed to make information regarding pesticides more available to the public. We understand that most of these recommendations have been implemented. Still, more needs to be done. The Minister and departmental officials were quoted as justifying the decision not to re-register alachlor by saying that if the public had access to all the data, it would understand the decision. There appears, however, to be no provision for such access, so the credibility of the whole process is questionable. Decisions made behind closed doors, or on the basis of "secret" data, can raise the spectre of unfairness and of political interference. The Committee, therefore, recommends that:

Health and environmental information used in the registration of pesticides should be made public, while at the same time ensuring that the data are protected from unauthorized use.

The confidentiality of documents also arose in the course of the hearings by the Alachlor Review Board, in connection with both alachlor and metolachlor. The Review Board established a procedure for dealing with documents where a claim of confidentiality was asserted: such material was made available to the other parties to the hearing upon their undertaking not to disclose the information. The system appears to have worked reasonably well, except with respect to metolachlor, where the registrant, Ciba-Geigy

Canada Ltd., arguing that the product was not under review, would not agree to the tabling of toxicological data on metalachlor. The company did eventually permit a summary of the data package to be introduced before the Alachlor Review Board.

It is understandable that two groups of experts may arrive at different conclusions on the basis of the same information, particularly in the worlds of science and economics. In the case of alachlor, however, the Review Board and Health and Welfare Canada, we were told by Dr. Saul Gunner of the Health Protection Branch, seem to have based their decisions on different data (Issue 25:10, 13). This certainly creates the appearance of unfairness and confusion, and raises doubts about the decision-making process. To avoid this problem, it is important that any review board have complete access to relevant information, including that on the class of products, and any competing or alternative products. The Committee recommends that:

Any review board appointed pursuant to the Pest Control Products Regulations must have full access to information on alternative products, or products of the same class.

The problems encountered by the Alachlor Review Board with respect to the confidentiality of information could have been minimized if a new policy on disclosure of pesticide data had been in place. In this regard, we would refer back to the conclusions made in this Committee's 1986 report on herbicide pricing, which remain valid although the patent law for pharmaceutical drugs has been amended since that report was tabled.

A related difficulty is that a review board takes place some time after the original decision; therefore the information before it may be different from the information before the original decision-maker. This is particularly true in a case such as alachlor when a very lengthy period elapsed between the various decisions and reports. New data and new interpretations of existing data should not be ignored by the Review Board. The Alachlor Review Board, at the request of several of the parties, discussed the new information and its implications in a separate chapter from its discussion of information available at the time of the cancellation.

Another aspect of the problem of access to information was discussed in the Alachlor Review Board's report:

There is no requirement in Canadian law, nor has it been regulatory practice, to produce public documentation for comment prior to the cancellation of a registration. This contrasts with the process in the United States where the Environmental Protection Agency is required to publish position documents at various stages of its review in order that all interested persons can know the Agency's position, what it is based on, and provide comments prior to the next stage. The absence of formalized documentation made it difficult for the Review Board to reconstruct the process in this case. There was very little documentary evidence available to the Board with respect to the decision of the Minister of Agriculture that the risks presented by the use of alachlor were "unacceptable." (page 34)

The availability of position documents at various stages of the review process would allow all interested parties to know the government's position, and on what it is based, and to provide comments prior to the next stage. Accordingly, the Committee recommends that:

Documentation should be published prior to the cancellation or suspension of a pesticide registration.

THE NATURE AND SCOPE OF PESTICIDE REVIEW

As noted above, the bases for registration of pesticides in Canada are merit, value and safety. Sections 18, 19 and 20 of the Pest Control Products Regulations establish the standard that a product must meet in order to obtain and maintain registered status. In cases where the merit and value of a product are not at issue, the Minister is entitled to refuse to register a product or to cancel or suspend a registration if, in his opinion, the "risk of harm" or the "safety" of the product is not "acceptable" to him. Arguably, the standard for cancellation should be the same as that for registration: in either case, the Minister must first consider if there may be a risk associated with the use of the product and, second, if a risk exists, he must determine whether that risk is acceptable to him. Pesticides are by their very nature dangerous products: they are toxic agents designed to kill or control pests and their use implies some risk of harm. The issue generally revolves around the question of whether this risk is acceptable.

The Regulations contemplate that each specific use of a compound requires a separate registration, and that each registration can stand on its own merits. This implies that comparisons to other compounds need not to be considered in the evaluation. The determination of the "acceptability" of risks is a key element of the decision. As the Alachlor Review Board commented:

There are many ways in which "acceptability" can be judged. In the Board's view, the Minister may and should judge the acceptability of any risks in light of the associated benefits and, where an established product is being considered for cancellation, in the the risks and benefits of any substitutes that will probably replace it. (Report, page 24)

Neither the Act nor the Regulations give the Minister any guidance about how he is to assess or determine the acceptability of risk. Nor does the Department of Agriculture appear to have followed any set procedure in assisting him to reach his decision. The Alachlor Review Board recommended that the Pest Control Products Act should be reviewed and updated to provide more guidance on how to determine the acceptability of safety, merit and value of control products. Similarly, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture commented, in its Sixth Report, that "the lack of a definition of merit, value and safety in the Act reinforces the need to develop criteria and guidelines to ensure fairness of measurement and consistency of approach to products" (Issue 51:6).

A related issue is the role that risk-benefit analysis plays in the registration process. The burden of proof arising from the Regulations is on the applicant to prove the safety of any pesticide proposed for use or sale in Canada. Scientific uncertainty frequently accompanies determinations of the environmental and health effects of chemicals; absolute safety is not what must be shown, or indeed is being shown by applicants.

While the United States pesticide registration legislation (the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act) explicitly requires the weighing of risk-benefit or cost-benefit considerations in deciding whether a particular pesticide should be registered, Canada's Pest Control Products Act is silent on this subject. Testifying before the Alachlor Review Board, Mr. Wayne Ormrod, Pesticides Division of Agriculture Canada, stated:

There is no obligation to balance risks against benefits, nor is there a requirement to use formal risk-benefit analysis. The emphasis of section 3 of the PCPA is placed on demonstrating safety. (Alachlor Review Board Hearings, Toronto, November 1986, Exhibit 155 at 6).

Throughout the alachlor case, references to metolachlor as a comparable or substitute product appear to have affected the determinations of Health and Welfare Canada and the Minister of Agriculture. A comparative analysis of the two products was a major theme of the Alachlor Review Board Report.

Clearly, it is easier to keep risk-benefit analysis out of an initial pesticide registration determination; it becomes harder to study the product in isolation when it has already been registered. Moreover, it is in the borderline cases that it is most likely that some form of risk-benefit analysis will be undertaken.

The Alachlor Review Board made several recommendations (Report, page 30) regarding the comparison of alternative pesticides and risk-benefit analysis. As well, the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture recommended that the Department of Agriculture develop a method for establishing a risk-benefit rating for pesticide products designed for comparable uses.

Whether one pesticide can or should be evaluated in isolation is difficult to determine. Ciba-Geigy, in its appearance before the Senate Committee, raised its valid concerns about being "pulled into" the alachlor hearings. The scope of such inquiries needs to be clarified. There are arguments in favour of looking at each pesticide separately, and arguments in favour of evaluating pesticides within the context of a whole class. With the future re-evaluation of older registered pesticides, the issue is going to become more pressing. Risk-benefit analysis is extremely complex. The layman would find it very difficult to decide on the continued registration of alachlor without comparing its benefits with those of metolachlor; the existence of a substitute product certainly appears to be a relevant factor. Nevertheless, the application of risk-benefit analysis to the pesticide registration process needs to be reviewed and clear direction provided as to the extent of its applicability. The Committee recommends that:

The Pest Control Products Act and Regulations should clearly specify that, where minimum standards have been met, risk-benefit or comparative risk-benefit analysis is to be carried out with respect to (a) the registration of a pesticide and (b) the cancellation or suspension of a registration.

Under the Pest Control Products Regulations, there are different classifications of pesticides - domestic, commercial and restricted (section 26(2)). As a federal government document, Pesticide Use and Control in Canada, explained: "Classification is dependent upon toxicological and environmental parameters and is intended to confine products to channels of trade in accordance with the inherent risk and the capability of the user to avoid undue hazard to himself, third parties and environmental quality" (page 9). Among the restrictions that can be placed on pest control products are those which limit use of certain products to persons who, by training or authority, are qualified to use them. The Committee notes that certain provinces have recently started training programs leading to the licensing of the users of pesticides. Mr. Bruce Archibald, of the Ontario Corn Producers Association, told the Committee of the Grower Pesticide Safety Course, which is designed to educate growers on the safe handling of agricultural chemicals. Mr. Hajo Versteeg, Chairman of the Pest Management Advisory Board, in his appearance before the Committee, said:

The provinces are working very hard on developing acceptable, hopefully national standardized certification programs for their farmers and foresters. The interesting part of that initiative is that the impetus for it has come from the farming community. (Issue 28: 21)

The Committee, recognizing the programs which already exist, recommends that:

The federal government should encourage provincial initiatives leading to common regulation of the use of certain pesticides only by licensed users.

WHO MAKES DECISIONS

One of the most important issues in the alachlor case relates to the decision-making process. The Review Board, which consisted of eminent individuals carefully chosen for their expertise and independence, after many hearings and months of study, made certain recommendations; yet the Minister, as permitted by the Pest Control Products Act and Regulations, chose not to accept the Board's advice.

Dissatisfaction seems to stem from the fact that expectations had been created - inadvertently or not - that the Review Board's recommendations would carry more weight than they did. At the same time, Agriculture Canada has perhaps been less than forthcoming in explaining its reasons for not following the Review Board's recommendations. As noted above, this may be partly attributable to the constraints imposed by the confidentiality provisions. Still, there is a need for justice to be seen to be done. If there is unwarranted or excessive secrecy, or if the decision-maker is perceived as biased or the decisions as arbitrary, the whole system falls into disrepute.

Sometimes there is an unfortunate tendency for pesticide regulation matters to develop an adversarial relationship between farmers and environmentalists. The agricultural community is usually the most directly affected by decisions. Farmers are vitally interested in increasing their yields and reducing their costs, and they wish to remain competitive; yet, farmers are also extremely conscious of the risks and dangers inherent in the use of pesticides. Not only are they experienced in using such products, but they bear the greatest risk of resulting sickness or contamination. Indeed, in the case of alachlor, one of the concerns is the effect of the pesticide on the users, not on the ultimate consumers of treated crops.

One of the problems in pesticide regulation in Canada may be that since the 1920s, when governments first became concerned about the chemicals being sold to farmers, it has been administered by the Department of Agriculture. The issues in the 1920s, however, were vastly different from those of the 1980s.

Agriculture Canada is primarily interested in assisting the farming community and increasing agricultural output. Should such a department also be charged with regulating the use of pesticides? There is a danger that it will be perceived as biased in favour of farmers or, conversely, that it will bend too much the other way to avoid being so perceived. In any event, such a mandate would seem to place the Minister of Agriculture in a potentially awkward situation.

For similar reasons, the regulation of pesticides by Health and Welfare Canada or Environment Canada may give rise to the same concerns: each has its own interests and biases.

The answer may lie in some sort of interdepartmental organization, a consultative committee, or an independent regulatory agency. In the United States, pesticide regulation has been given to the independent Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). In Canada, Dr. Ross Hall has suggested that a Commission be established, to be jointly administered by the Departments of Environment, Agriculture, and Health and Welfare, which would be empowered to examine pest control problems in their totality. In any event, as the report of the Alachlor Review Board makes clear, the roles of the various government departments need to be clarified. Therefore, the Committee recommends that:

The decision-making hierarchy must be set out clearly, and the decision must be final at each stage, subject to any appeal.

It is clear that at present the review board acts only in an advisory capacity, in a sense as a double-check on the Minister's decision. As noted above, when the current Pest Control Products Act was passed in 1969, the idea of an appeal of the Minister's decision was considered inappropriate. Though it would be possible to give more authority to a review board, in the Committee's opinion either the Minister or Cabinet should be required to make the ultimate decision, or at least be able to accept or overturn it. In an area such as this, it is important that there be such an element of political accountability. It seems entirely appropriate that a politician be charged with balancing the complex interests and factors involved; such decisions should not be left only to experts or bureaucrats. The Committee, therefore, recommends that:

The ultimate decision regarding the registration of pesticides, or the cancellation or suspension of a registration, should remain at the political level, with either a Minister or the Cabinet.

CONCLUSIONS

The controversial cancellation of alachlor's registration is only a symptom of wider difficulties. In this brief report, the Committee has attempted to set out a number of its concerns. The various parties and interests involved - such as farmers, pesticide manufacturers, environmental groups and the general public - must be consulted and be intimately involved in the formulation of a revised system.

In this connection, we note that the Minister of Agriculture has received a legal analysis of the review board process carried out by Professor Wade MacLauchlan, and a number of suggestions for improving the regulatory process from the Pest Management Advisory Board. We urge the Minister to make these documents public. As a basis for public discussion, the federal government should prepare options for the improvement of the pesticide review process.

The alachlor case has brought to light various problems with the regulation of pesticides in Canada, and we believe that it is important for all concerned that the process be improved. We urge the Minister of Agriculture to use the experience to public advantage as a catalyst for change.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Ian Sinclair, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, presented the following report:

Thursday, September 8, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

TWENTY-NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-139, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and other related Acts, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, August 31, 1988, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

The Committee initially contacted the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bar Association, who together had appeared as witnesses and presented a brief from their Joint Committee in November of 1987. This Joint Committee was of the view that as Bill C-139 contained essentially the same material as the previous tax reform proposals, their appearance at this time would be redundant.

Officials from the Department of Finance during your Committee's first hearing on Bill C-139 reviewed provisions in the Bill that are "moderately significant changes" from what the Committee initially reviewed. These changes included:

1. child tax credits: (doubled from $65. to $130. for third and additional children);

2. automobiles: (individuals or firms who acquire cars with a price of more than $20,000 will not be eligible to deduct capital cost allowance for that amount in excess of $20,000);

3. farmers:

—(cash-crop farmers now have the same flexible inventory evaluation method as livestock farmers)

—(confinement of benefits of cash accounting to farmers for whom it is intended);

4. changes in taxation of life insurance companies, investment income tax and preferred shares;

5. changes in respect of associated corporation rules;

6. removal of $8,000 per family limit on child care expenses;

7. payments to former common-law spouses now treated as alimony.

The Committee also heard testimony with regard to the provision of customers' social insurance numbers to banks holding their savings accounts.

The Committee also heard detailed testimony from the Honourable T. Hockin, Minister of State (Finance).

Respectfully submitted,

IAN SINCLAIR
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Bazin, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, another report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has not yet been received from Translations, but it is my understanding that it will be available later. Therefore, I ask for leave to revert to Reports of Committees later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, 9th September, 1988 at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Senator Frith: Will you be here, Jacques?

Senator Flynn: Not unless I have the assurance that Senator MacEachen is going to speak. He speaks outside to the TV cameras, but never here.

[Senator Sinclair,]

Senator Frith: We should sit on Friday—but "only if I get what I want."

Senator Flynn: As long as he won't continue to hide.

An. Hon. Senator: Where will you be?

Senator Frith: Senator Flynn will be hiding somewhere; he won't be here.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

IRAN-IRAQ BORDER PEACEKEEPING CONTINGENT—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO FURTHER QUESTIONS

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, the other day I received a reply in the form of a delayed answer to a question I had raised regarding the cost of paying for the Canadian contingent to the peacekeeping force on the border between Iran and Iraq.

I have some further questions to ask, but I understand that some negotiations are going on between Canada and approximately 24 other countries. Therefore, in the meantime, I would ask the Leader of the Government to give an undertaking to provide the Senate with an answer when the negotiations are completed.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I shall do that, honourable senators.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

UNAVAILABILITY OF FRENCH TEXT OF C.D. HOWE INSTITUTE DOCUMENT DISTRIBUTED BY HON. JOHN CROSBIE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On August 19, a memo dated August 18, 1988 and sent by the Honourable John Crosbie, P.C., Q.C., M.P., was delivered to my office. Attached was a brochure published under the title: Evaluating The Free Trade Deal.

By the way, the brochure is published by the C.D. Howe Institute. In his memo, the minister tells us:

It is unfortunate that this publication was published in English only. Since no translation is available, I apologize for any inconvenience.

In the following paragraph the minister says:

I am sure you will find this information useful in informing your constituents about the various aspects of the free trade agreement.

I take exception to the fact that a minister of the Crown, who is otherwise to be commended for sending his memo in French, expects me to send this brochure to my constituents, eighty-five per cent of whom are French-speaking, and read and discuss the contents with them. I think this is unfortunate, especially since the minister also says in his memo:

The C.D. Howe Institute has an impressive track record, based on the quality of its surveys . . .

If the institute's track record is so impressive and if its studies are as valuable as Mr. Crosbie claims, why isn't this brochure available to members of the House of Commons and senators in French? Why doesn't the C.D. Howe Institute, which claims to be a national survey organization, publish studies of this nature and calibre in both official languages?

I therefore ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to make inquiries and find out from his colleague, the Honourable John Crosbie, whether a French version of this brochure, which is currently available in English only, could be made available to parliamentarians.

I think that is our right. Strictly speaking, the Official Languages Act does not oblige the minister to send me the brochure in both official languages, but it seems to me that the intent of the Official Languages Act would dictate this. Otherwise, how can we expect to have an intelligent debate, not just on the substance of the issue but on all aspects relating to it?

I think it is practically an insult to French-speaking parliamentarians, and to all French Canadians, to ask them to analyse a publication that is not available in French.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the study in question, Evaluating The Free Trade Deal, is a publication prepared by Professor Lipsey and Mr. York. I referred to the study yesterday in my speech on Bill C-130. I even quoted from this particular study.

Senator Corbin must be aware of the fact that the C.D. Howe Institute is a private organization. This means that the responsibility for translating their publications in both official languages lies with the institute and not with the government.

As for Senator Corbin's suggestion that the minister should have his publications translated before sending them to members of the House of Commons and senators, I will make sure Minister Crosbie is informed of Senator Corbin's feelings on the matter.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I don't mind telling the minister myself, but I think the C.D. Howe Institute is even more to blame. After all, it has a long history in this country and has offices in Toronto, in "la belle Province" in Montreal, and also in Calgary. It is time the Institute woke up and realized that we have two official languages here in Canada and that if it expects us to give its studies serious consideration, it should make them available in both official languages.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

VERIFICATION OF SIGNATORIES TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday in his speech on the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, the minister took some pleasure in reading out from previous reports of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee the names of those who had allegedly signed these reports. Could he tell me whether, when he mentioned my name in particular and those of other senators, he was referring to the report entitled Canada-United States Relations, Volume II, March 1982?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I had a photostat of the page in front of me at one point during my speech yesterday. Subject to correction, I believe I was referring to volume 3 of the report, tabled in March 1982. As I pointed out, his name appears on the list of senators who were members of the committee at that point.

Senator Molgat: Thank you very much. I was going to raise the matter on a point of privilege but I wanted to assure myself, before I did, that, in fact, he was referring to this document. I asked the Parliamentary Library for a copy of the document, which I have here before me. The only names of senators that I can see anywhere in this document are those of the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator van Roggen, and our Speaker pro tempore, who was then the deputy chairman. There is not a single other name mentioned in this report.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we will have to compare notes because I assure the honourable senator that the photostat of the page that I had in front of me after our exchange yesterday contained his name. I satisfied myself on that point. I shall send for the publication again and compare notes with my friend.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS BY IRAQ AGAINST KURDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Amnesty International, a highly respected, non-governmental organization concerned with protecting human rights around the world, which has branches in Canada and elsewhere, has made an unprecedented appeal to the United Nations respecting the deplorable, systematic and deliberate policy of the Government of Iraq in reference to the elimination of Kurds. Severe allegations have also been made by other governments in connection with the alleged use by the Government of Iraq of chemical weapons on the Kurdish population and during the recent Iran-Iraq war. That would be contrary to the Geneva Protocol of 1925, which prohibits the use of chemical weapons.

● (1420)

Has the Government of Canada made any representations in order to stop this obscene practice? What steps, if any, can the Government of Canada take to ensure that the Geneva Protocol is adhered to?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in this regard.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers to questions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—POLITICAL RIGHTS OF SPOUSES—STATUS OF REGULATIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked by Senator Marsden on September 1 regarding National Defence—Canadian Armed Forces—Political Rights of Spouses—Status of Regulations. I ask that this answer be printed as part of today's proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

The new regulations governing political activities on military bases will be in effect in the very near future. Until such time, as was indicated by the Honourable Senator, the Minister of National Defence has directed that Commanding Officers will apply present regulations in accordance with the intent of the policy changes. Civilian members of military families are to have the same rights as other civilians. Attached is a copy of the direction that was given.

With regard to recommendation 2 of the Advisory Group's Report, it was recommended that civilian spouses and dependents be given the option of voting in federal elections in selected places of residence. Discussions have been ongoing with the Chief Electoral Officer. Legislation is presently before the other place which would permit Canadian citizens living outside Canada to vote in federal elections.

A supporting document is also available and it is my intention to table it. I will not ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings because it is quite long. When tabled, it will be available to those honourable senators who would like to see it.

Document tabled.

[Senator Grafstein.]

THE ENVIRONMENT

GOVERNMENT INVENTORY OF PCB STORAGE SITES AND GUIDELINES FOR STORAGE AND DISPOSAL OF PCBs

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have a delayed answer in response to a question raised in the house yesterday by Senator Haidasz regarding The Environment—Government Inventory of PCB Storage Sites and Guidelines for Storage and Disposal of PCBs. As senators can see, this is a rather weighty tome. I would ask that it also be tabled and made available to those honourable senators who may be interested in looking at it.

Document tabled.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Richard J. Doyle, moved the third reading of Bill C-82, respecting the registration of lobbyists.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I have a few brief remarks to make at third reading of this bill. I intended to speak yesterday upon the presentation of the committee's report, but because we had many things on the agenda I left it until today to explain to the Senate the brief comments of the committee. I had undertaken with our chairman, Senator Neiman, to make some comments in addition to those that senators will have read on the tabling of our report.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are the committee's comments to be found in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate?

Senator Nurgitz: They should be, although I do not have the page before me.

Senator Frith: Yes, they are; they appear at page 3319.

Senator Nurgitz: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs supports the bill's objectives and believes that there is a need for the public to know who is attempting to influence government decisions. In doing so, it decided not to propose amendments to the bill. However, this should not be interpreted to indicate that the committee has no concerns about Bill C-82. Indeed, the main purpose of the report is to express these concerns. In general terms, the committee would have preferred that the bill go further than it does.

The committee's foremost concern relates to a matter that is fundamental to the bill's approach to the registration of lobbyists—that is, the division of lobbyists into two tiers and the differing disclosure requirements that flow therefrom.

Tier I lobbyists, that is, third-party, paid lobbyists who undertake to arrange a meeting or to communicate with a public office holder in an attempt to influence certain government actions are required to disclose identifying information about themselves and their clients, along with the proposed subject matter of their meetings or communications. On the other hand, lobbyists such as directors of government relations of various organizations, who spend a significant part of their employment duties communicating with public office holders on behalf of their employers, are classified as Tier II lobbyists and are required to disclose only their names and their employers' names, but not the subject matter of their communication. For a Tier II lobbyist, then, a business card is all that is required.

In the committee's opinion, the assumption that a business card will provide all the information that the public needs to know about a Tier II lobbyist's activities is questionable at best. Tier II lobbyists, like their Tier I counterparts, are likely to be making representations on several issues, some of which may not be readily identifiable from the name of the employer. By requiring only identifying information from Tier II lobbyists, the bill would seem to fall somewhat short of achieving the objectives of openness and transparency in government.

The committee also noted that when a Tier I lobbyist communicates with a public office holder in an attempt to influence the awarding of a government contract, for example, that lobbyist must file a return with the Registrar General. However, if a Tier II lobbyist engages in this very same activity, no filings are necessary. It is not clear why corporations that are lobbying to obtain government contracts are excluded from the purview of the bill as long as they do not hire a Tier I lobbyist to act on their behalf.

Lobbyists spend a great deal of time gathering information on government activities for their clients. In fact, many lobbyists would argue that information gathering comprises the bulk of their work. Bill C-82, however, does not appear to cover specifically information-gathering activities.

Although opinions differ as to whether, for the purposes of this bill, this kind of function should be classified as lobbying, there is no doubt that the distinction between directly lobbying government on behalf of a client and gathering information to assist that client in influencing government is not clear. In the committee's view, the bill might have addressed this issue better by expanding its parameters to include those information-gathering activities that are intended to result in an attempt to influence government decisions.

Another issue examined in the committee's report relates to a possible interpretation of clause 5 of the bill, which suggests that a Tier I lobbyist would have to report each and every communication with the public office holder on any given subject matter. If that is the case, it would appear to the members of the committee that it might be an administrative nightmare. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advised the committee, however, that it is not the intention to require a filing for each communication. The committee recognizes that regulations will be vital to administer this bill effectively and to clarify ambiguities in the registration.

Bill C-82 calls for a review of its operation and administration by a parliamentary committee after three years. We can all take comfort in knowing that parliamentarians will have a second opportunity to look at this bill and to address the matters raised by this report.

Senator Frith: That will be in the third year of our mandate.

Senator Nurgitz: Yes, it will be in the third year of our mandate. I thank Senator Frith for helping me with that.

Finally, the members of the committee recognized the importance of attempting to make the processes of government more open and understandable to the public at large. I believe, honourable senators, that this bill, notwithstanding some possible imperfections, is an important step towards achieving that goal.

Senator Frith: So the end justifies the means.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, Senator Nurgitz has ably presented the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs concerning our consideration of Bill C-82, respecting the registration of lobbyists.

● (1430)

I merely wish to emphasize some of the concerns of the committee and indicate those that were not included in the report.

Senator Nurgitz has faithfully explained to you the concerns which the committee agreed should be recorded as the principal concerns of a majority of the committee, and those relate to the bill's failure to address specifically the information-gathering activities of lobbyists, the artificial division of lobbyists into two tiers with different rights, and a consequent concern as to whether those provisions offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Senator Nurgitz also reported our worry about the ambiguous language in the bill and an interpretation of the principal operative section of the bill which would turn the whole thing into an administrative nightmare.

My purpose is to point out to honourable senators that the concerns mentioned in the report are only the most serious concerns of the committee and do not reflect the general conviction of the majority of the members of the committee that the whole bill is flawed and will be found to be impossible to administer. As a matter of fact, two of our witnesses, who are former deputy ministers, gave that as their opinion. The bill, when it becomes law, will be unadministrable.

In the opening recitals the government states that lobbying public office holders is a legitimate activity, that it is desirable for the public to know who is attempting to influence government, and that a system for registration of lobbyists should not impede free and open access to government. This government is awfully good at writing opening recitals. It is hard to disagree with them. However, as is frequently the case with this government, the substantive legislation that follows the statement of worthy purposes either fails to do the job or does a bad job of implementing those purposes.

In the first place there is no definition of "lobbyists," although the proposed legislation is called "An Act respecting the registration of lobbyists." The act of lobbying is an attempt to influence a public office holder with respect to various actions of government for a fee or as an employee of a company or association. The term "public office holder" is cast so widely as to include not only a member of the Senate or the House of Commons, or any person on the staff of a senator or member of the House of Commons, but also any person appointed to an office or a body of the Governor in Council or a minister of the Crown, an officer, director or employee of any federal board, commission or tribunal, a member of the Canadian Armed Forces, and a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Those are the people to whom a Tier I lobbyist must not talk without registering.

An offence is committed if an individual, for payment, undertakes to arrange a meeting with the public office holder or to communicate with a public office holder in an attempt to influence, without filing a prescribed form with the registrar within ten days. A reasonable interpretation of that section is that a form must be filed for each call and each communication, conjuring up an image of warehouse after warehouse full of forms that nobody looks at. "Ridiculous" you say? Of course! But if that is not the intention, then why not clean up the wording of the section to make the intention clear. Otherwise we have to depend on regulations, and regulations are intended to implement legislation, not to clarify it.

The avowed purpose of the bill is to let the public know who is being paid to influence government. I invite you to cast your mind about the Ottawa scene. Who is it that you think of as being the principal lobbyists in Ottawa? Who has representatives on the Hill and in the department offices almost continuously, speaking with officials at every level, making friends for future reference and generally equipping themselves to give the best possible advice on government relations and what is going on in government? The people I think of are the 47 companies listed in the Yellow Pages of the Ottawa telephone book under the heading "Government Relations Consultants". Apart from the employed representatives of trade associations and a few major companies, those are the people who form the interface between government and business in Canada.

However, under this legislation, in all probability, they will not be required to register as lobbyists at all. That is because most of them will say, "We only acquire information and pass it on to our clients with advice on how to use it. We don't arrange meetings with officials. We don't communicate with a public office holder in an attempt to influence the actions of government. It is quite incidental that we spend so much time with public office holders learning what's going on in government and that they get to know who our clients are and, quite incidentally, develop an urge to be helpful." This legislation does not require anyone carrying out that kind of activity to register at all.

The bill is just as bad in dealing with the distinction between Tier I lobbyists and Tier II lobbyists. A Tier I lobbyist is an individual who gets paid for making some representation. He has to file a form for each intervention. He has to give his name and address, his firm, the name and address of his client, and, if his client is a corporation, the name and address of each of its subsidiaries, the proposed subject matter of the meeting or communication and such further information about the client as may be prescribed. There is no room for professional confidentiality or commercial security. Those are the things he must disclose. On the other hand, a Tier II lobbyist, who is an employee of a company or an organization whose job it is to communicate with public office holders, just has to register once a year and does not have to disclose the subject matter of his lobbying even if it has to do with obtaining government contracts.

Senator Nurgitz, in presenting the report, has already commented on some of the sloppy language in the bill. Without registering as a lobbyist you must not attempt to influence "the development or amendment of any policy or program of the Government of Canada". What is a "policy" or a "program" and at what stage does the conveying of a bright idea turn into an attempt to influence the development of a policy? How is "an attempt to influence" to be interpreted? Is it a simple phone call to determine the status of a matter? Is it a casual mentioning to a friend who is a public office holder that you or someone you know has an interest in the matter, and what happens if it is an official who phones you?

The committee, in its report, recognizes that we are very much in the hands of those who draft regulations, and finally, it takes some comfort in knowing that after three years a parliamentary committee will review the administration and operation of the bill. It is sad when legislation as inadequate as this bill manages to pass through both houses of Parliament. The best that can be said for it is that it does make a first step toward an important objective, well expressed in recitals at the beginning of the bill. It does provide a means of registering some of those who influence the actions of public office holders and thereby the actions of government. Because there is a worthy purpose involved, I believe that my colleagues will support the third reading of the bill. However, we must clearly say that this is another example, of which there have been so many recently, of hastily drafted bills which, because of an uncaring, irresponsible majority in the House of Commons and an arrogant government that refuses to accept amendments, find their way into law.

Senator Frith: Well said!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Nurgitz: Thanks for your vote, Dick!

Senator Frith: "Apart from that, Mrs. Lincoln!"

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, yesterday I promised I would quote the sources used by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Lowell Murray, to demonstrate, using the sources he himself used, that what he said about the Free Trade Agreement was not what his sources had to say about the agreement.

Before getting into that, first I would like to talk about something he said, because this is part of his psychological make-up, about past successes in 1980 and 1982 during the debate on patriation of the Constitution.

He said a number of times, for instance in La Presse of June 15, 1987 and in The Globe and Mail, on the same day:

• (1440)

[English]

The solemn promise made to Quebecers during the referendum that federalism would be renewed and the Constitution amended to reflect the distinct identity and aspirations of Quebec was unfortunately not kept.

There was no such solemn promise; on contrary, Quebecers were told clearly during the referendum campaign that the things which they were given in Meech Lake were not negotiable and they would not be given to them.

Mr. Trudeau, for instance, specified during that debate that if there were any mention of the Quebec society's distinctiveness in a preamble this should not be used as an interpretative clause.

Was it possible to misinterpret his statement in the Paul Sauvé Arena on May 14, 1980, in which he said:

... I can make a most solemn commitment that following a NO vote, we will immediately take action to renew the Constitution ...

Could he intentionally or unintentionally have misled the people of Quebec into believing he would grant them special status or greater autonomy? Or could Mr. Trudeau have allowed Quebecers to mislead themselves?

Mr. Lévesque was under no illusion whatsoever immediately after the referendum. He did say that they would not get special status and added that they would not get recognition of Quebec as a distinct society.

On April 6, 1980, on CTV, translated and rebroadcast in French, with headlines in all French newspapers in Quebec the next day, Mr. Chrétien, who was speaking on behalf of the federal government at the time on this issue—he was the point man—was asked by columnist Jeffrey Simpson about the constitutional changes that might occur after the referendum. Mr. Chrétien replied:

What we have to do, basically, is to recognize some principles that should preside over the elaboration of a new Constitution. The principles are that you need a national government, ... that the federal government should be strong enough to be able to redistribute the wealth of Canada, and all that being done without giving any province a real special status.

It could not be any clearer.

Did the people of Quebec mind what Lévesque said immediately after the referendum? I will now quote him. He warned that Trudeau's renewed federalism would be:

[Translation]

... more centralizing ... than ever.

In Le Devoir Lévesque asked on May 16, 1980, "What kind of renewal are we talking about?" He went on to say:

The only valid indication we have, according to [Lévesque] is recent statements by Mr. Trudeau, where he said he wanted to tear up the agreement between Ottawa and the provinces, signed under the Clark Government, which left this area to the provinces, and where he also said that he wanted to reverse the agreement with Newfoundland which gave the province offshore mineral rights.

[English]

It was therefore clear to Premier Lévesque that renewed federalism certainly did not mean giving Quebec greater autonomy.

So the Parti Québécois strategists, doing their duty according to their lights, and serving their cause, mounted a campaign to convince the people of Quebec that they had been had. It was a difficult campaign to mount, and it did not work.

A Gallup poll on December 10, 1981, after the various negotiations were completed and the shape of the new Constitution was known, showed that 34 per cent of Quebecers sided with Premier Lévesque—they had had time to digest what had happened—46 per cent disagreed with him; 12 per cent had no opinion; and 8 per cent were not familiar with the facts.

What happened in 1981 and 1982 had been accepted by the people of Quebec. It was not a case of fooling them or betraying them. To my mind, it is uncalled for to use this issue, to scratch this most fundamental wound in Canada's heart, for electoral purposes, as this government has done in order to win votes in Quebec.

This is an attitude that also pervades this government's selling of free trade. It sells it the way diapers are sold—photographs in all the newspapers of some cute person saying, "I am for free trade! I like Huggies." The value of the agreement legally is not much better, I am afraid, than that of Huggies.

I spoke on this issue on July 20, and I will not go over those points again, except to give you a summary.

You all have before you a text called "The Free Trade Agreement". I am now reading the summary on page 3. It consists of a series of propositions and the evidence that proves these propositions.

Proposition 1: Before Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Reagan signed their "Free Trade Agreement", the FTA, Canada's international trade was not broken and did not need fixing. With the U.S. and the rest of the world, our trade was healthy and had been growing fast. Our partners benefited more from their trade with us than we did. The multinational GATT gave us reasonably good security against the unfair protectionism of other nations.

All the details are on page 8 of the text. I challenge any person in this chamber to find fault with any of the facts.

(1.1) Though we are America's largest trading partner, we are an infinitesimal part of America's current account problems or trade problems.

(1.2) The Americans' current account deficit with Japan is 96 times larger than their deficit with us.

(1.3) The Americans' current account deficit with Europe is 50 times larger than with us.

(1.4) On average, the U.S. has had a considerable surplus in its transactions with us.

(1.5) Trade between Canada, the rest of the world and the U.S. has been increasing steadily and fast—much faster than our labour force and our economy.

(1.6) Tariffs have come down spectacularly in trade between Canada and the U.S.

(1.7) Canada-U.S. trade means better jobs and more technology for Americans than for us. Honourable senators, the facts are found on page 9.

● (1450)

(1.8) Our trade with Japan and Europe also means better jobs and more technology for them than for us.

(1.9) In view of the above, our principal trading partners have no objective reason to keep out our exports. I address myself here to such comments as "We have no access. We lack a market. We are threatened." I do not think our partners will cut off their noses to spite our face. They buy from us because it is to their advantage. It is profitable for them to do so.

(1.10) The GATT has given us good security against unfair protectionism by others. Honourable senators, this is found on page 10. We have done very well in GATT.

(1.11) We are the glacies, the clear ground, that is essential to the defence of the United States. I will submit later that it is unlikely that the U.S. would disregard our interests and our mood towards them.

Proposition 2: Mr. Mulroney promised that a trade treaty with the U.S. would give our exporters better protection than under the GATT. He also promised that we would sign a trade deal with the United States only if such a deal gave us better protection for our exporters than the GATT and, thus, a better investment climate and more jobs. Under "Proposition 2" I give all the citations in which the Honourable Mrs. Pat Carney, when she was our Minister for International Trade, and Mr. Mulroney, himself, said how unfair the Americans were; how unfair U.S. protectionist legislation is; and how much in danger we are facing U.S. bad faith. All of those quotations along with the data are found on pages 13 and 14.

Proposition 3: Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, in his trade deal with the U.S., did not obtain his main "vital condition"—exemption for Canadian exporters from unfair protectionist U.S. trade laws. We have no more protection than we had before the FTA. We do not have a better deal. I prove this from page 15 through page 19 by citing, side by side, the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement. Honourable senators can see there, if they care to read it—and they should—that we have not got anything we did not have before.

Proposition 4: Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal do not predict prosperity. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal, which was not "better," if we hold to his definition of what would have been a better deal. His definition of what would have been a better deal is contained in (2.8). Yet, according to the self same economic forecasts that were quoted by the Leader of the Government yesterday, the risks of not signing were minimal—a loss of some 8 cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years. Hardly a catastrophe.

(4.1) "Without the free trade deal, we could lose 22,000 jobs to additional American protectionism in 11 years," said the Economic Council after Mrs. Carney had stated it would be 500,000 jobs.

(4.2) "Without the free trade deal, additional protectionism by the U.S. could cost each Canadian some 8 cents per day 11 years from now," said the Economic Council. It is hardly ruination.

(4.3) The trade deal might give us one-third the jobs the Mulroney government originally promised.

(4.4) Job creation under the Mulroney trade deal is slower than even during the 1974-84 years of explosions in oil prices, hyper-inflation, sky-high interest rates, the deep recession that began in 1981 and massive unemployment. We did better in those 11 years than the government's figures forecast we shall do in the next 11 years under the Free Trade Agreement.

Honourable senators, I now invite you to turn to page 22 of the text.

(4.5) By the time the Mulroney trade deal is fully in place in 1998, personal incomes may have increased by some 10.5 cents per person per day. Honourable senators, these are not my figures; these are the government's figures. The Economic Council of Canada says that after 11 years the economy will be 2.5 per cent greater with the Free Trade Agreement than it would be without the Agreement. That total growth of 2.5 per cent over 11 years turns out to be an added average growth of 2.25 tenths of 1 per cent per year. These figures are derived by using the standard formula for calculating compound rates of growth.

If our gross domestic product grows an extra 2.25 tenths of 1 per cent in 1988, the first year of the Free Trade Agreement, each Canadian man, woman and child will have an extra 10.2 cents per day—or less than the price of one cigarette. By 1998, that extra income for each Canadian would be 10.5 cents in 1981 dollars—still not enough for one cigarette. Senator Frith will be glad, as I am, that they will not be able to buy that extra cigarette, but that is the image we should have in our minds. We are entering this trade deal to be able to buy one more cigarette per day. The calculations are based on the figures of the Department of Finance publication Quarterly Economic Review for June, 1988. By any comparison, then, the trade deal is no great deal for the average Canadian, according to the government forecasts. For a fuller treatment of all these calculations, with all the references, please see item (4.5) in the appendix to this text.

I would now ask the Senate to allow this appendix to be printed at the end of the text of the debate. Do I have your permission, honourable senators?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of appendix see Appendix "A", p. 4336.)

Senator Frith: What appendix?

Senator Gigantès: There is an appendix which gives the calculations.

(4.6) Mr. Mulroney did not get a better deal, yet he signed it even though he said he would only sign a better deal. Mr. Mulroney told the New York Times on April 3, 1987, "there were several vital conditions the (trade agreement) would have to meet. Most important among these, "Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the U.S.'s fair-trading laws." This permanent exemption was his most important vital condition and Mr. Mulroney did not get it. Yet, we have the Leader of the Government saying that what we wanted was enhanced access, more secure access, and adequate institutional provisions—to which I shall turn shortly.

What Mr. Mulroney may have got, according to projections he uses and publicizes, is a GDP per capita and a rate of job creation considerably slower than in our worst post-war decade. That is not a better deal, as Mr. Mulroney, himself, defines "a better deal."

He said that "if our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal." This was quoted by the Honourable Pat Carney in the Commons Debates of October 9, 1986 at page 255. Yet, he signed it.

In sum, the evidence shows that economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal do not predict prosperity. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal which was not better, if we hold to his definition of what would have been a better deal. Yet, according to the self-same economic forecasts, the risks of not signing were minimal, a loss of some 8 cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years. By the way, the 2,000 per year falls through the calculations of Statistics Canada. Their model for prediction cannot predict a figure as small as 2,000 jobs.

• (1500)

Proposition 5: Here I come to much of the speech by the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate. I will demonstrate that we were paid far too little and we gave far too much. We score a plus for an advantage gained, a minus for an advantage lost and a zero for no change. The Free Trade Agreement gives Canada no pluses, 12 zeros and six minuses. The U.S. scored the converse: six pluses, 12 zeros and no minuses.

In view of the evidence in sections (3) and (4) above, how then does the Mulroney government defend the FTA? You heard yesterday that it uses Dr. Richard G. Lipsey, whose book is being distributed at government expense all around the country by the Honourable John Crosbie, P.C., M.P.—

Senator Frith: Not at the government's expense, at the taxpayers' expense!

Senator Gigantès: At the taxpayers' expense. Thank you, sir. I stand corrected. I will never make that mistake again. They are papering the country with this as they were earlier papering the country with the publication of Statistics Canada that promises just under an extra cigarette per day per person in 1998.

Senator Barootes: That is a collector's item you are holding up here!

Senator Gigantès: This thing is a collector's item? Okay.

Senator MacEachen: Is it any good?

Senator Gigantès: It is quite obvious that neither the Honourable Senator Barootes nor Mr. Crosbie has read the book. They probably read the introduction and the conclusion, as most journalists have, but they have not read the inside, because if they had read the inside they would have reached the inescapable conclusion, which I am about to demonstrate, that either Mr. Lipsey did not reread his text or he and Mr. York divided the writing of the text and then did not read one another's work, because it is full of contradictions.

At any rate, Dr. Richard G. Lipsey analyzes the FTA and grades it with pluses, minuses and zeros and gives it his blessing. He says:

It seems reasonable to judge the Agreement on the balance between its pluses and minuses and not on the places where it scored zero.

This is Lipsey, page 22.

Senator Frith: What proposition are we on?

Senator Gigantès: We are on proposition 5, page 23: We were paid far too little and we gave far too much.

Dr. Lipsey is one of the most respected economists in the country. Critics of the FTA are often told, as we were told yesterday by the Honourable Lowell Murray: "But Lipsey likes it." Inescapably, therefore, any analysis of the FTA must review Dr. Lipsey's grading of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

His views are laid out in his book, which you have all received, and he says that, unfortunately, the status quo was no longer good enough before the FTA.

The GATT is arguably the most successful of all the international institutions that were established after the end of World War II. It has presided over major reductions in trade barriers that have caused dramatic increases in world trade.

This is the terrible GATT that we have to replace.

Senator Doyle: Who said it is terrible?

Senator Gigantès:

Since the early 1970s, concern has grown over the GATT's ability to sustain world trade liberalization... The most important reason...

We will come back to what Mrs. Carney and Mr. Mulroney were saying—

... is that the GATT's success in rolling back tariffs has been partly offset by the growth of non-tariff barriers to trade usually referred to as NTBs. As the term suggests, a non-tariff barrier is any instrument other than a tariff that is used to restrict trade. Examples are import quotas, voluntary export restraints... and various forms of harassment by customs officials when goods cross a country's borders.

I am not quoting him just for the pleasure of reading his prose. With the exception of Mr. MacEachen and perhaps Mr. Galbraith, economists do not have very good prose.

Still quoting Dr. Lipsey:

One of the most serious sets of non-tariff barriers in place today has arisen from the misuse of domestic laws designed to establish the rules of fair trade... Fair trade laws are meant to 'level the international trade playing field'... The three main trade remedies in widespread use today are countervail,...

Remember this!

... antidumping and temporary import relief.

The theory of the level playing field—

This is the case of the government.

Senator Frith: What is the theory of the level playing field?

Senator Gigantès: It means that nobody must take advantage of anybody else.

Senator Frith: Why the playing field? Does that mean it is on a tilt?

Senator Gigantès: It is used because Americans think in terms of a football field on which they are playing.

Senator Frith: Is it on a tilt that is fair to both sides?

Senator Gigantès: If you imagine the common playing field of the U.S. and Canada, it is like the Canadian football field which has 11 divisions from side to side. We own one of the 11 and they own 10. I ask you to imagine to which level it would be levelled.

Senator Frith: It is a terrible metaphor. It does not mean anything.

Senator Gigantès: It is not mine, sir.

Senator Frith: Carry on just the same.

Senator Gigantès:

The theory of the level playing field is hard to object to in principle. In practice, however... in the case of Canadian softwood lumber, for example... it is hard to avoid the conclusion that (the reason for imposing countervail duties on us) was the U.S. political and economic climate rather than Canadian resource policies.

Dr. Lipsey continues:

... Antidumping duties can be more than just a 'fair trade measure'... such duties can become significant obstacles to trade.

I give you all the things he finds wrong, to see whether the trade deal deals with them. Dr. Lipsey continues:

From a Canadian perspective, one of the most worrisome developments in U.S. trade policy has been the growing tendency to resort to 'temporary' (relief from imports) for industries subject to intense international competition... There are two main... import restraints... quotas and tariff surtaxes. The other is through voluntary export restraint... agreements, whereby the exporting country agrees to restrain its exports, often to avoid... even more severe restrictions... The frequent use of (such) action tends to undermine the basic principle of liberalized trade: that market competition should determine trade patterns.

This is Dr. Lipsey, pages 3 to 7. In other words, Dr. Lipsey thinks that the so-called U.S. fair trade laws are the principal obstacles the Canadian exporter faces; that they are unfairly applied and often undermine the basic principle of liberalized trade: that market competition should determine trade patterns.

He is in apparent agreement, therefore, with the Hon. Pat Carney, who when she was Minister for International Trade, said:

No one knows better than I about the effect American trade remedy laws have had on our exports. We have seen it in shakes and shingles, fish, lumber, and farm products... (Their) unilateral decisions on what they call unfair practices are the problem between us... (The) Americans call them fair trade laws but they are not.

This is from Commons Debates, March 16, 1987, page 4178. You could also look at pages 13 and 14 above for more details on this issue. As Dr. Lipsey says:

The objective of the negotiations was access.

That is exactly what we were told yesterday by the Leader of the Government. That, of course, is what Mr. Mulroney had told the New York Times, which I would like to repeat:

There were several vital conditions the (trade agreement) would have to meet. Most important among these, Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the United States' fair-trading laws.

● (1510)

With the above perception of the problems facing Canada, Dr. Lipsey concludes that:

... to assess this case one needs to look at what the two countries did and did not give up in the Agreement. (Lipsey, p. 116).

This is exactly what the Leader of the Government tried to do yesterday when quoting Dr. Lipsey. Instead of actually telling us what Dr. Lipsey said, he simply dropped his name—there were Lipseys bounding all over this red carpet, along with the Gordon Robertsons and all the other authorities that the Leader of the Government was scattering around, like flowers in front of a bull being led to the slaughter—an ancient Greek custom.

(5.1) Score Zero. The FTA gives us a "right to national treatment" which is no greater than the rights we already had under the GATT.

Critics of the FTA ask:

Since the objective of the negotiations, to provide security of access to the U.S. market by gaining exemption from U.S. fair trade laws, was not achieved, shouldn't the agreement be rejected?

Yesterday the Leader of the Government told us that we had achieved enhanced access, more secure access and adequate institutional provisions, and he quoted Dr. Lipsey to us. Yet here is Dr. Lipsey saying, "Since the objective of the negotiations, to provide security of access... was not achieved", and that is Lipsey at page 21. But he says—perhaps we should not just reject; let us look at the rest.

Senator David: That is not what is said in your paper, sir. You say "significant progress... was achieved".

Senator Gigantès: I will get to significant progress in a moment, sir. The words are very carefully chosen in these quotations. Thanks to the taxpayers of Canada, you have a copy of my speech so you can go on checking.

The right of national treatment gives blanket assurance that the United States will not discriminate against Canadian producers in any activities covered by the Agreement, except where the treaty explicitly provides otherwise (Article 501).

Well, here is Article 501 of the Free Trade Agreement:

Each party shall accord national treatment to the goods of the other Party in accordance with the existing provisions of Article III of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), including its interpretative notes, and to this end the provisions of Article III of the GATT and its interpretative notes are incorporated into and made Part of this Agreement.

What have we here? We have, in effect, an inclusion in Dr. Lipsey's list of "how the agreement increases access", a GATT article guaranteeing our exporters "national treatment" in the U.S. The FTA, therefore, gives us something we already have because both Canada and the U.S. are already members of the GATT.

(5.2) Score Zero. The FTA gives protection against the use of U.S. taxes as barriers to trade, but this protection is no greater than what we already had under the GATT. Honourable senators, I have given the score of zero when there is no change. I quote Dr. Lipsey:

Internal taxes, such as sales or excise taxes, no longer can be used as concealed trade barriers—for example, by levying rates on imports higher than those levied on domestic goods: (Article 501). (Lipsey, p. 14)

The same Article 501 of the FTA—I have just quoted it—is cited a second time as "increased" access in Dr. Lipsey's list, even though, as we have seen, it merely refers to Article III of the GATT, which was already in place and applied to us before the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

(5.3) Score Zero. The FTA gives us protection against U.S. quantitative restrictions to keep out our exports, but this protection is no greater than what we already had under the GATT. This is the famous sidewipe thing, honourable senators—we have been saved from the sidewipe no more than we were saved from the sidewipe under the GATT.

Senator Barootes: It is "sideswiped", senator.

Senator Gigantès: "Sideswiped", then. I think of being "wiped" by the Americans—that is why I misquoted myself. Thank you, sir.

Senator Sinclair: One Greek to another!

Senator Flynn: It is all Greek to you, is it?

Senator Frith: Beware of Greeks bearing gifts.

Senator Gigantès: As above, Article 407 of the FTA enunciates rights we already have under the GATT. It reads:

Subject to further rights and obligations of this Agreement, the Parties (Canada and the U.S.) affirm their respective rights and obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) with respect to prohibitions or restrictions on bilateral trade in goods. The Parties understand that the GATT rights and obligations... prohibit, in any circumstances in which any other form of quantitative restriction is prohibited, minimum export-price requirements and, except as permitted in enforcement of countervailing and antidumping orders and undertakings, minimum import-price requirements.

Honourable senators, nobody who speaks on behalf of this Agreement seems to have done his reading, nor does he seem to have referred to that which he should have referred to. Article 407 simply says that we have the right already under the GATT. Once again, Dr. Lipsey cites an article of the FTA—407—as new "increased" access, even though it merely refers to rights we already had. Honourable senators will remember the list that our Leader of the Government read in the Senate yesterday. It was a list of 18 items, to which I am now referring. Every one of them was a right already granted under the GATT and we are being given these items as "increased access" when we had that access already.

(5.4) Score Zero. This, honourable senators, is another sideswipe aspect. The FTA gives us protection against being sideswiped by American trade measures against others, but no more protection than we already had under the GATT. Dr. Lipsey says that Articles 1101 and 1102 of the Free Trade Agreement protect us against being sideswiped when the U.S. is taking measures against other countries (Lipsey p. 16). These articles deal with so-called "emergency action" when there is such a surge of imports that it endangers domestic producers of similar goods. Here again, the alleged new "increased" access listed by Dr. Lipsey is the same under the FTA as it was under the GATT. The relevant passages are given in items 3.3 to 3.5 of the text that I have just distributed.

(5.5) Score Zero. Neither the FTA nor the GATT shields us from U.S. red tape and regulatory delays. Honourable senators may remember that we played that trick on the Japanese. We just would not pass their cars through customs. The French decided that until Japan exercised voluntary restraint in the exportation of VCRs, all the VCRs from Japan had to pass through the customs house at Poitiers, where there was one customs officer who was not particularly zealous. He asked that every number on the manifests be opened and checked with the corresponding number on the VCR. He was taking forever, and this is the sort of bureaucratic red tape to which I refer here.

Dr. Lipsey says that another form of action which distorts "the basic principle of liberalized trade" is the use of regulatory delays and red tape.

The Agreement cannot guarantee that such invisible barriers will be eliminated . . . (Lipsey, p. 60).

As in the GATT, we have to deal with these invisible barriers under dispute settlement procedures, according to Dr. Lipsey.

(5.6) Score Zero. If, in a dispute, the American elephant disobeys the findings of an arbitration panel, the Canadian mouse has the right to retaliate under the FTA as under the GATT.

In his list of "How the Agreement Increases Security of Access", Dr. Lipsey cites "the dispute settlement procedures outlined in chapter 19" (Lipsey, pp. 16-17). Chapter 19 of the Agreement is on "Dispute Settlement in Antidumping and Countervail Duty Cases." The risk before the Agreement was:

the misuse of (U.S.) . . . fair trade laws (against us because of) the U.S. political and economic climate rather than Canadian . . . policies . . . The frequent use of (such laws as countervail and antidumping) tends to undermine the basic principle of liberalized trade: that market competition should determine trade patterns. (Lipsey, pp. 4-7).

There is a dispute if we think the Americans are misusing regulations or laws and they do not think so.

Disputes on the general operation of the Agreement are to be overseen by a cabinet-level committee and referred, if necessary, to a binational dispute settling panel. (Lipsey, p. 12).

In earlier conversations that I had in this chamber with the honourable Leader of the Government, he disputed that the Canada-U.S. trade commission would have to deal with such disputes. Yesterday, however, he was quoting Lipsey approvingly. I assume that he has read Lipsey, but perhaps that is a dangerous assumption. At any rate, I will hold him responsible for what Lipsey says:

• (1520)

That dispute settlement mechanism does not give us any more than we had before. Here is what the FTA says about what happens next, after a dispute has gone to arbitration:

If a Party fails to implement in a timely fashion the findings of a binding arbitration panel and the Parties are unable to agree on appropriate compensation or remedial action, then the other Party shall have the right to suspend application of equivalent benefits of this agreement on the non-complying Party. (Free Trade Agreement, Article 1806.3)

That is exactly what Dr. Lipsey says happens in the GATT:

Trade disputes are initially dealt with by GATT panels which decide whether or not particular national policies conflict with that country's national obligations. Dispute resolution then usually occurs on the basis of consensus and compromise. This process . . . leads members to change their policies voluntarily when these are ruled to be inconsistent with GATT obligations. If this is not done, the only recourse for the offended parties is to take retaliatory action that has an effect equivalent to that of the offending policy. (Lipsey, page 3)

For the relevant GATT texts, I would refer you to item 3.2 above in this text.

Surely, Dr. Lipsey has read the last two paragraphs which demonstrate, if language means anything, that in the FTA, as in the GATT, the settling of disputes comes down to the identical thing: the right to retaliate. How can he say we have a new dispute settlement mechanism that "increases" security of access when under the FTA we have exactly what we already had under the GATT?

(5.7) Again, I score zero. The elephant may kick the mouse, but dare the mouse kick the elephant? On retaliation as the ultimate recourse in case of disagreement on how to settle a dispute, Dr. Lipsey writes that Article 2005 of the Agreement—

. . . illustrates that the United States had always reserved the right to retaliate in kind against Canadian cultural policies (or any other policies for that matter) that hurt its interests . . . Surely Canada would never have agreed to allow the United States to adopt the policy that upset the agreement without reserving the right to retaliate . . . (Lipsey, page 109).

But can retaliation be used by the Canadian mouse against the American elephant? Dr. Lipsey approvingly quotes Professor Paul Wonnacott on this. Writing of retaliation we could apply if the U.S. contravenes the Auto Pact, Professor Wonnacott states:

... one may ask whether this threat could be carried out in practice... Serious thought... would have to be given to the danger of U.S. (counter) retaliation. (Lipsey, page 65).

For a more extensive discussion on this matter, please see items 3.8 and 3.9 above.

Referring now to item 5.8—and these are all these wonderful items that will increase access, according to the honourable Leader of the Government, citing Dr. Lipsey as his evidence.

Negotiations with the United States over the next seven years to develop an agreed code on subsidies are not necessarily good for us. Again, here is Dr. Lipsey. So far, all the “gains” Dr. Lipsey sees in the free trade deal turn out to be things we already had. Can we hope the Agreement will make things better in the future? Dr. Lipsey writes:

The Agreement improves the prospects for increasing future access by requiring consultations... to develop an agreed code on subsidies and antidumping... (Lipsey, pages 17 and 22).

However, he says he—... is not yet persuaded that an agreed subsidies code would be in the national interest. (Lipsey, page 21).

Therefore, he seems to be saying that something which may not be an advantage is, nevertheless, an advantage. I do not follow the logic of that. I hope the honourable Leader of the Government, when he came to that point, paused.

As for the success we are likely to have in negotiating with the U.S. mutually advantageous common rules on countervail and antidumping, Raymond Koskie, a Toronto lawyer and a member of the Economic Council of Canada, writes:

Canada has, however, committed itself to reviewing its own and U.S. trade laws with a view to harmonizing trade legislation within the next five to seven years. These negotiations will take place after Canada has already made its major concessions outside the social policy, culture and natural resources conservation area... (This leaves Canada) in a weak position to obtain substantial progress on U.S. trade legislation without making important concessions on social policy and other matters of essential national interests.

This quotation is taken from page 36 of Venturing Forth, which is an Economic Council of Canada publication. For the concessions that Canada has already made in negotiating the FTA, see items 5.9 to 5.16 below, and we will come to those.

(5.9) Score minus: Dr. Lipsey points out that some articles of the FTA permit us to discriminate against U.S. firms, goods, services or investments, if such discrimination is already in place before the Agreement goes into effect. However he does not point out that Article 2011 of the FTA takes the permission back.

The FTA, according to Dr. Lipsey,

... protects existing discrimination laws... The Agreement leaves in place most existing policies that discriminate between foreign and domestic firms and products. Existing programs, practices, and policies are exempt from all obligations of the Agreement, except where they are explicitly included. By such blanket ‘grandfathering’ of laws as varied as those that control ownership of Canadian energy firms... the Agreement guarantees that its impact, outside of trade barriers, will be on new laws rather than existing ones. (Lipsey, page 12)

But Article 2011 of the FTA could cancel this protection of existing Canadian laws if the Americans decided to get tough about it since Article 2011 of the FTA says:

If a Party considers that the application of any measure, whether or not such measure conflicts with the provisions of this Agreement, causes nullification or impairment of any benefit reasonably expected to that Party, directly or indirectly under provisions of this Agreement, that Party may... proceed to dispute settlement...

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I wonder if the honourable senator could enlighten me a little. I have in my hand a copy of his document entitled the “Free Trade Agreement—Introduction”. Is that document compliments of Senator Gigantès, or is it a government document? Is it published by some department? Who is the author of this document?

Senator Gigantès: This document I wrote all by myself on my own word processor, with my own hands.

Senator Doody: Your modesty is touching. There is no author identification on the document that I have on my desk.

Senator Gigantès: I told honourable senators when I started that the document was of my own devising—

Senator Doody: I must have been inattentive.

Senator Gigantès: That is highly regrettable. I am glad to repeat that I am the proud author of the document that you hold in your hands. There is not a word in that document, except for the citations, that has not been written by me; the quotations were found by me; the research was done by me.

Senator Doody: Does it mesh in with the text that the honourable senator is delivering?

Senator Gigantès: Yes, it does. From time to time I interject a few little reminders of what your honourable leader has said here and there.

• (1530)

Senator Doody: There are no directions with this. I was wondering if we could follow your text.

Senator Gigantès: If you take the whole document and turn to page 3, you will see that there are directions on how to find your way through it, sir. I provided it especially for people who might find reading it difficult, as there are some members of this government—

Senator Flynn: Senator Corbin is very unhappy that you have made your remarks only in English.

Senator Gigantès: I do regret his unhappiness. There are translators, and there will be a printed text in French. I will circulate that when a French-speaking constituent asks me about it.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: On a point of personal privilege, I should like to state that I have said no such thing that Senator Flynn attributes to me. I have been silent.

Senator Flynn: I know. I was trying to interpret your silence.

Senator Gigantès: Senator Flynn, the sooner you let me continue the sooner this sitting will end.

Senator Barootes: This torture.

Senator Doody: Who can refuse an offer like that? Continue!

Senator Gigantès: Of course, when one gives the facts, people who do not want to hear them consider it torture. You prefer pictures of adult babies saying that they like Huggies.

Senator Barootes: Are you ashamed to sign this?

Senator Gigantès: No, sir, I am not ashamed at all. I claim it with great pride.

(5.9) Score Minus. Dr. Lipsey points out that some articles of the FTA permit us to discriminate. Bluntly put, using Article 2011 of the FTA, the Americans could say, "In light of what we consider reasonable, your measures are denying us a benefit we had expected: the Agreement states that we have the right to make this claim even if the measures you took existed before the Agreement. It says so, right here, in Article 2011." This is a piece of dialogue with Americans that I invented, Senator Doody.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Sir, may I ask a question?

Senator Gigantès: If we disagree on this we go to dispute settlement, and in that procedure the bottom line for the FTA is the same one we had under the GATT.

Senator Barootes: I will be right with you.

Senator Frith: Submit them in writing on Saturday.

Senator Gigantès: If one partner decides to be tough and break the rules, the other can retaliate; the mouse kicks the elephant or the elephant kicks the mouse. In this sort of scenario, it is clear that Article 2011 can be used to very much greater effect by the Americans than by us (See items 5.6 and 5.7.)

Would you like to prolong this? I thought you people were in a hurry to send this bill to committee. Do you not want the answer to the leader's speech completed so that others can make speeches and it can go to committee?

Senator Barootes: Senator Gigantès, this is my question: Does the paragraph that says the Americans have the right to cancel apply to Canadians having the right to cancel?

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator Gigantès: I come to that right now.

Senator Barootes: Does it apply bilaterally?

Senator Gigantès: Yes, it does.

Senator Barootes: If it does, are you not expressing only the American advantage? Are you anti-American, similar to the man you followed previously in the government administration of a former period? This is pure anti-Americanism.

Senator Sinclair: What utter nonsense!

Senator Gigantès: I will come to that later. On page 26, if you have been listening, senator, or have read—and as I say, there are too many people who do not—under 5.7 in the second paragraph I said: But can retaliation be used by the Canadian mouse against the American elephant? Dr. Lipsey approvingly quotes Professor Paul Wonnacott, who is a defender of the trade deal, on this. Professor Wonnacott states:

"... one may ask whether this threat could be carried out in practice ..."

This is a threat by us to them.

Serious thought ... would have to be given to the danger of U.S. (counter) retaliation.

Twenty-four per cent of our gross domestic product is involved in trade with the U.S. Two per cent of their gross domestic product is involved in trade with us. Therefore, retaliation by them against us is much more effective than retaliation by us against them. It affects, as I will tell you later, one Canadian in four if they retaliate, and it affects one American in 50 if we retaliate.

Perhaps you can read this at your leisure. Perhaps you could join Mr. Crosbie and encourage him to do some reading himself. You will see that it is you who are the anti-Americans, because I do not assume they are monsters; you do.

Finally, in many instances, this protection of grandfathering, as Dr. Lipsey calls it, will be meaningless. Our agricultural marketing boards are grandfathered by the FTA, but that will not help at all; according to one of Canada's most successful businessmen, Harrison McCain of the multinational food company that bears his name:

In the case of this particular deal (the FTA) I'd have to say, don't dupe us in the food industry. The problem is that we have to buy our mozzarella cheese for the pizzas we make in Canada through marketing boards. That means it costs 39 per cent more than it would in the United States. At the moment the Americans are not allowed to ship their cheese into Canada. But with free trade they'll be selling their pizzas here duty free. How do we buy cheese in Canada at 39 per cent more and still be competitive? We can't be. And we have exactly the same problem with our frozen dinners because of chicken marketing boards, and so on. Mr. McCain says that if such circumstances were to make the continued presence of his plants in Canada untenable, "we're a multinational and have other options. Unfortunately our employees and growers don't." In other words, he'll transfer production to his U.S. installations and ship in pizzas and frozen dinner from there into Canada. (Maclean's, May 1988, p. 46)

The next item is (5.10). Again, I score zero.

Senator Corbin: There are 600 jobs in my home town that will disappear.

Senator Gigantès: 600 jobs in your home town.

[Translation]

I am going to say it in French. In Senator Corbin's home town, 600 jobs will disappear.

[English]

(5.10) Score zero. Under the FTA, America gives Canadian firms the right to relocate in the U.S. But they had been doing so anyhow at an ever increasing rate before the FTA.

National treatment is extended to the establishment in the United States of Canadian business enterprises covered by the Agreement. See Lipsey, page 15.

However, again Mr. Lipsey says:

Canada is an important investor country; its stock of investment in the U.S. is increasing about three times as fast as . . . U.S. investment in Canada. It is, therefore, in Canada's own interest to get rules of national treatment . . . before there is any backlash against the rapidly growing stock of foreign investment in the United States. A decade from now, this . . . may turn out to (be) one of the most far-sighted measures in the whole Agreement. See Lipsey, pages 88 to 89.

So, Canadian businesses have been relocating in the U.S. at a very fast rate. The American authorities are not putting a stop to this movement of capital from Canada to the U.S. Since the U.S. has an enormous current account deficit, it needs every dollar of foreign capital that comes in to compensate for this deficit. In household terms, the U.S. owes so much that it must sell assets to keep afloat.

Can the Americans shut their doors to a substantial part of the foreign capital that flows into the U.S.? Only if the U.S. stops spending more than it earns on the world market. There are two ways the U.S. can do that: One is to sell more abroad; the second is to block imports and replace them with more expensive products made in the U.S.

To follow the second course, the U.S. would have to break just about every rule in the GATT. And if the U.S. gets into a treaty-breaking mood and breaks the GATT treaty, it would also be breaking our Free Trade Agreement, so much of which, in effect, simply reaffirms rights we have under the GATT. For example, see items 5.1 to 5.6.

We must judge the security the Free Trade Agreement gives us by what is likely to happen if the U.S. turns tough, not if things remain more or less normal between us.

If things do remain more or less normal, if we suppose that a possible U.S. backlash against the rapidly growing foreign ownership is a mild and reasonably selective backlash, then we might go relatively unscathed. The Americans will hardly fear becoming vassals of Canadian entrepreneurship, however formidable it may be. As we shall see later, it is domination by Japanese and German capital that the U.S. fears.

(5.11) Score Zero. On increasing protection for Canada's right to set its own policies, in the face of harassment through U.S. countervail actions, the Free Trade Agreement scored zero, says Dr. Lipsey. In sum, here is how Dr. Lipsey describes our progress in curbing the American's main non-tariff barriers to trade: We "will be at risk to U.S. countervail action as much, no more, no less, as . . . before the Agreement. It seems reasonable to judge the Agreement on the balance between its pluses and minuses and not on the places where it scores zero." So when it comes to increased access, secure access, adequate institutional arrangements, Dr. Lipsey himself, who has been quoted by the Leader of the Government, says we score zero.

Item 5.12. Score minus. The FTA gives the Americans guaranteed and unlimited access to our energy resources at the same price charged to Canadians. In exchange, the U.S. promises not to keep out our energy exports if these are competitive in price.

Here are the relevant passages of the FTA: Article 904(a) states that neither party may "reduce the proportion of the total export shipments of a specific energy good made available to the other Party relative to the total supply of that good" in the exporting country. In other words, if we have been selling half the energy we produce to the U.S. and lower our production, the U.S. will still be entitled to half our lower production. This is not anti-American; this is factual.

Article 904(b) of the FTA states that neither party may "impose a higher price for exports of an energy good to the other Party than the price charged for such energy good when consumed domestically" by the exporting party. It is by offering energy at less than the export price set by the free market that we attracted investment to Canada; for example, the Pechiney and Reynolds aluminum plants in Quebec. This was one important attraction we offered to counter the many ways the U.S. has for luring investors. Professor Wonnacott tells us that:

choice of U.S. over Canadian sites (for building Japanese car factories) was not simply the result of market forces. The Japanese were responding to political pressures in the United States, and the establishment of plants in Canada would have done little to ease their political problems south of the border.

This is from Dr. Lipsey's book, pages 67 and 68.

One instrument we had to compensate for such U.S. behaviour was cheap energy. We gave up this instrument; the U.S. has not given up its pressure tactics to attract foreign capital. I do not blame the U.S. If we were in their position, we would do the same.

I score minus for Canada in the energy field because the Free Trade Agreement will stop us from using our energy to compete with the U.S. for investment.

However, it is precisely for this selfsame reason that Dr. Lipsey gives a plus to this provision. He dislikes a two-price system for energy, one lower for domestic consumption and a higher price for export. He gives three reasons for his view:

- domestic price of energy below the world price . . . (1) discourages the development of new sources of supply. (2) It is nationally divisive because it forces the energy producing provinces to subsidize the energy consuming ones. (3) Furthermore, alternative tools are available to satisfy any goal of policy . . . Energy can be taxed and revenues used . . . for the benefit of consumers or firms.

That can be found at pages 56 and 57 of Dr. Lipsey's book.

Let us deal with Dr. Lipsey's three arguments.

Senator Barootes, we are on page 30. Argument 1 refers to the three arguments in the last paragraph and the penultimate paragraph on page 29.

What keeps private companies from developing our tar sands and our offshore oil fields on their own is that the world price for oil is too low. Such megaprojects as the tar sands extraction plants and Hibernia cannot be profitable without government help, as Senator Doody knows full well and as Senator Barootes knows with regard to Lloydminster.

Canadian governments, both Liberal and Conservative, have sunk billions into these megaprojects for reasons other than the profit on the next quarter's balance sheet. Governments, or rather Canadian taxpayers, absorb a considerable part of the development costs so that the megaproject energy can be sold at the world price; for the foreseeable future, energy from such projects will be sold at competitive prices only because we Canadians subsidize it. If our governments stop subsidizing energy projects, these projects and the economic activities they stimulate will stop, and I do not think that Saskatchewan, Alberta or Newfoundland would like that. If we continue subsidizing energy projects, we will be subsidizing U.S. consumers of Canadian energy, since we must sell them energy at the same price we charge Canadians.

Argument 2. Dr. Lipsey argues that—

Senator Barootes: Why aren't you bringing self-sufficiency into your argument, or security of supply?

Senator Gigantès: Terrific! Wonderful! This is a great Conservative argument—let's bend the market rules.

Dr. Lipsey argues that having lower oil prices for domestic consumption than for export is "nationally divisive because it forces the energy producing provinces to subsidize the energy consuming ones." Why should it? There is nothing that says that Canadians cannot guarantee to the energy producing provinces the right to sell their energy to other provinces at the free market price. Let us put the guarantee in the Constitution, if necessary. Then each producing province could offer energy at less than free market price for industries that settle in that province. Resource provinces could, thus, diversify.

Argument 3. If we tax energy and use the revenue to benefit firms here in Canada, these could be attacked by competing firms in the U.S. for "being unfairly subsidized", as has been happening in the past through the American countervail laws which have now been enshrined in the FTA. See item 3.6 above.

But would the Americans feel so resentful that we might not charge as low a price as we charge ourselves that they would stop buying energy from us? Of course not, provided we sold them energy at the free market price—they would not buy for more than that. We could offer to the Americans contracts long-term enough, but indexed, to let them feel safe in building whatever pipelines and electricity transmission lines were necessary. In any case, the Americans know that since they are our largest customer, we would not risk losing their custom by playing fast and loose with their supply. Moreover, to whom would we sell our electricity or our gas if we did not sell it to the U.S.?

The Americans want safe sources of energy supplies. Aside from their own dwindling stocks, we are their safest source. It is hard to conceive of their shutting us out of their market if we sold at the free market price, no more, no less.

Item 5.13. Score minus. The FTA rules for trade in automobiles and their parts will allow manufacturers to "export" the high-technology jobs to low-wage countries.

As another instance of "how the Agreement increases access"—one of the instances quoted by the Leader of the Government, Dr. Lipsey cites article 1005 to claim that "the Agreement changes the rules of origin for automotive products to provide more protection against offshore parts producers and, thus, to increase the access of Canadian and U.S. parts producers to each other's markets." See Lipsey, page 15.

Article 1005 of the FTA simply cites point 4a of the Annex to Article 301.2:

the value of materials originating from the territory of either Party or both Parties used or consumed in the production of the goods, plus the direct cost of assembling the goods in the territory of either Party or both Parties constitute no less than 50 per cent of the value of the goods when exported to the territory of the other Party.

● (1550)

The introduction to chapter 10 of the Free Trade Agreement puts it more simply. It states that 50 per cent of the direct production costs of any vehicle trade under the Free Trade Agreement will have to be incurred in Canada and the U.S. to qualify for duty-free treatment.

In answer to this I should like to quote Mr. Grant R. Wilson, a supporter of free trade and past-president of the Canadian Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association, who said:

With a 50 per cent rule of origin, we feel we are possibly going to lose the technological base of our industry, that being the power train, the engine of our automobile.

This is from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the House of Commons Legislative Committee on Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement, July 28, 1988, page 19:21.

To put it even more simply, North American auto manufacturers can have all the high technology done abroad, under the FTA, and can fulfil their requirement for 50 per cent North American content by having the low technology and the assembly done in either the U.S. or Canada. This would only accentuate the existing trend among U.S. car manufacturers to have as much of their high-tech production done offshore, which means exporting good jobs to Asia and Latin America.

(5.14) Score Zero. Our Minister of Finance does not guarantee that lower tariffs will bring lower prices for consumers.

Asked whether he could guarantee that the wholesalers and retailers would pass on to the consumer what savings they make from a reduction in tariffs, the Honourable Michael Wilson, P.C., M.P., said: "I do not think that anyone in the world can guarantee things for Canadians." I refer to Commons Debates, August 12, 1988, page 18264.

(5.15) Score Zero. Canadian small businesses are unlikely to benefit from the $4 billion in U.S. government spending available to Canadian enterprises under the FTA.

American small businesses will receive preferred status over their Canadian counterparts when Washington allocates the portion of U.S. spending set aside for this category of business; so says Ms Catherine Swift, Research Director for the Canadian Federation of Small Business. They are artisans of the Free Trade Agreement. They state:

We're not delighted with the government procurement provisions in the Agreement. There's no advantage to small firms. (Financial Post, July 5, 1988)

Ms Swift was voicing an inevitability, considering that: "... Under the Free Trade Agreement, Canada has been excluded from bidding for large U.S. government purchases in aircraft and components, ships, communications equipment and electrical and electronic equipment components." That is a quotation from Venturing Forth, a publication of the Economic Council of Canada, pages 39 to 40.

This is a publication that the government has been waving in the air to prove how great the agreement is. They haven't read it, obviously.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Will Senator Gigantès permit a question?

Senator Gigantès: Yes, sir.

Senator Molgat: I want to verify this one particular item that you mentioned—that is, the communications equipment. We know that Canada has a substantial expertise in this field. Will our Canadian firms not be able to bid on U.S. government contracts?

Senator Gigantès: So it says in the Economic Council booklet entitled: "Venturing Forth," on pages 39 to 40. They are saying this to explain why the jobs that they calculate after the agreement was published are so many fewer than the jobs they were calculating before it was published, when they were operating on Mr. Mulroney's "wish list" rather than the actual text.

Senator Barootes: Horse feathers! Pure horse feathers!

Senator Frith: Those, too!

Senator Gigantès: Those are not included in the agreement, senator.

Senator Frith: No, that was on horse feathers. They move freely across the border!

Senator Gigantès: Take this document entitled "Venturing Forth". You have it. Look at pages 39 to 40. Read it for yourself. Reading is improving, you know; television by itself is not enough.

As our small businesses were not getting a share of U.S. government procurement before the FTA, there is no change and the score of zero is warranted.

We are now on page 32.

(5.16) Score Minus. It will be much harder, under the FTA, to establish national or provincial programs like auto insurance or, say, a national drug purchasing plan, if we finally conclude that we were totally shafted with Bill C-22, as seems likely.

Article 2010 of the FTA says that "subject to Article 2011, nothing in this Agreement shall prevent a Party from maintaining or designating a monopoly . . . And where the designation may affect interests of persons of the other Party, a Party shall . . . endeavour to introduce such conditions . . . as will minimize or eliminate any nullification or impairment of benefits under this Agreement."

Let us assume that yet another Canadian province decides to establish a crown corporation to provide auto insurance; or let us assume that Canadian governments decide that the chemical and drug multinationals are charging us too much for their products and do not do enough research here. That government might wish to establish a crown corporation to buy and distribute prescription drugs, pesticides, herbicides and fertilizers.

Senator Barootes: The NDP!

Senator Gigantès: Being a powerful monopoly buying for the whole Canadian market—

Senator Haidasz: He said "fertilizer."

Senator Barootes: That is the NDP.

Senator Gigantès: —that corporation could force down prices and use its profits to finance massive research within Canada. After the FTA, Canadian governments would not be able to afford such initiatives.

Bluntly put, the American insurance conglomerates and the drug and chemical multinationals would say—and here I imagine what they would say—"in light of what we consider reasonable, your measures are denying us benefits we had the right to expect for many years to come. It is not a simple matter of reimbursing us for our installations here or buying us out at fair market price. It is also a matter of what profits we expected to make from now until forever: the Agreement states we have the right to make this claim. It says so, right here, in Article 2011."

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Why is it in quotes?

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, this passage is in quotes because I said: "They would say". I said that.

[English]

Article 2011 says:

If a Party considers that the application of any measure, whether or not such measure conflicts with the provisions of this Agreement, causes nullification or impairment of any benefit reasonably expected to that Party, directly or indirectly under the provisions of this Agreement, that Party may... proceed to dispute settlement.

In the FTA dispute-settlement procedure, if one partner decides to be tough and to break the rules the other can retaliate; the mouse kicks the elephant and the elephant kicks the mouse. In this sort of scenario it is clear that Article 2011 can be used to much greater effect by the Americans than by us. See items (5.6) and (5.7) above.

We now come to item (5.17).

(5.17) Score Minus. The FTA forbids us to ask that foreign companies in Canada buy parts here; export part of their Canadian production; sell shares to Canadians; do some research in Canada.

● (1600)

Article 1603 of the FTA states:

Neither Party shall impose on an investor of the other Party, as a term or condition of permitting an investment in its territory, or in connection with the regulation of the conduct or operation of a business enterprise located in its territory, a requirement to (a) export a given level or percentage of goods; (b) substitute goods or services from the territory of such Party for imported goods or services; (c) purchase goods or services used by the investor in the territory of such Party or from suppliers located in such territory or accord a preference to goods or services produced in such territory; or (d) achieve a given level or percentage of domestic content.

Please note that research, of course, is a service and we cannot demand that research be done here.

Dr. Lipsey lists the above FTA Article among "what Canada has given up." He comments: "Canada will no longer demand performance requirements of U.S. firms investing in this country. Insofar as they relate to exports and imports, these requirements are not consistent with Canada's GATT obligations...".

I now turn to page 33 of the text. Dr. Lipsey seems to forget that the U.S. took us before a GATT dispute settlement panel over these very same requirements that were being set for U.S. investors in Canada by the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The GATT found that we had the right to impose these requirements. We gave up that right in the FTA.

Any time we shall try to impose conditions on Canadian investors, if we want to, they will, naturally, say that we make them uncompetitive because their U.S. competitors within Canada need not feel bound by those same conditions.

(5.18) Score Minus again. Canada may no longer prevent the takeover of any Canadian firm by Americans. The Annex to Article 1607.3 of the FTA says that "commencing on the third anniversary of the date of the entry into force of this Agreement (Canada will not review takeovers by Americans of Canadian firms worth less than) current Canadian $150 million."

Any self-respecting corporate lawyer—and there are many in this chamber—can divide any company into separate entities each worth less than $150 million. Article 1607.3 of the FTA, in effect, removes all limits on American takeovers of Canadian businesses.

On the danger foreign takeovers represent for national independence, here are the views of Felix Rohatyn, the senior partner of Lazard Freres, a major American merchant bank. Rohatyn, a U.S. citizen, is often credited with saving New York City from bankruptcy some years ago. He said:

More than two hundred years after the Declaration of Independence, the United States has lost its position as an independent power. While we are still without question the world's leading military power, our predominance in weapons does not give us the freedom to act on our own... U.S. assets owned abroad... may consist of... controlling interests in many of our major companies and financial institutions... Should we allow SONY to acquire control of Time Inc.?... Would we allow... foreign control of the Morgan Bank?... We must be able to carry on our business whether or not it is in Japan's interest... or... in Europe's interest... No other major industrial power... certainly not Japan, and not even Great Britain allows major companies of strategic importance to be acquired by foreign interests... A highly selective review mechanism may become necessary...

Shades of fear. He goes on to say:

... this would not cause the flight of foreign capital any more than such procedures have caused capital flight from the U.K., Germany or Japan.

If honourable senators wish to verify this quotation, it can be found in the New York Review of Books of February 1988.

As senior partner of Lazard Freres, Mr. Rohatyn is as globalized as can be. He shifts billions in all currencies from one end of the earth to the other, daily. If he worries about the giant American economy losing its independence because of foreign ownership, surely there must be some danger in the foreign ownership of a small economy like Canada's.

To recapitulate: Before the FTA, and while we still had the Foreign Investment Review Agency, we could say to an American firm buying a Canadian firm, "You must continue the research activities of the Canadian firm. You cannot shut down its foreign operations. You must offer a fair proportion of the company shares to Canadian investors." We cannot say that now, after the FTA. Now Americans can buy any promising Canadian firm and move all that matters in it, including the brain power, south of the border, and we have renounced the right to stop them. See item (5.18) above.

There is no reason why a U.S. multinational with splendid research laboratories in Denver or Santa Barbara would want to duplicate part of its research here. It is cheaper to move talented Canadian researchers south. We could say, before the FTA: "It is your right to invest here or not, but if you want to invest here, we want you to do research here; buy parts here; subcontract here; export some of your production. You do not have to come here if you do not like these conditions." After the FTA, we can no longer impose such conditions. I would refer senators to item (5.17) above.

Before the FTA, foreign investors were not put off by our rules. American investors certainly were not; otherwise, how is it that they have bought so much of our economy already?

We have given up the right to use our abundance of energy to lure investment here. After the FTA, the next generation of petrochemical plants will be built south of our border, using raw materials from western Canada to which the Americans will have rights equal to ours, at Canadian domestic prices. See item (5.12) above.

Cheaper energy for foreign investors choosing Canada over the U.S. was one important attraction we offered to counter the many ways the U.S. has for luring investors. A proponent of the free trade deal, Professor Paul Wonnacott writes, nevertheless, that—and I repeat his very important quotation—the "choice of U.S. over Canadian sites (for building Japanese car factories) was not simply the result of market forces. The Japanese were responding to political pressures in the United States, and the establishment of plants in Canada would have done little to ease their political problems south of the border." That is from Dr. Lipsey, pages 67 to 68.

However, without even the lure of cheaper energy, all the foreign investors our cabinet hoped to entice through the FTA have no incentive to choose Canada over the U.S. Please see item (2.6) above. If they locate in the U.S., they can compete for the nearly half trillion of dollars spent on procurement by the various levels of the American government. The FTA gives Canadians the right to compete for less than one one hundredth of this U.S. procurement pie. We are allowed to compete for $4 billion.

The U.S. says that it will challenge our right to insist that east coast fishermen land their catches in Canada. Should we lose that case, any smart Canadian entrepreneurs buying the latest in factory trawlers would be financially improvident if they did not land their catch in Boston or New York to save transport costs; and they would be further improvident if they did not build their new fish processing plants in Boston or New York, again to save transport costs from Newfoundland.

In fact, any successful Canadian manufacturer, who expands and who wants to save on the cost of transporting his products, will build his expansion plant in and near his bigger American market, not in his smaller Canadian market. These are not imaginary fears; they are simply common sense for the ambitious businessman. The FTA bestows "American corporate citizenship" upon those Canadian entrepreneurs who want to move to the U.S. As says Harrison McCain, the giant food processing firm, "We're a multinational and have other options. Unfortunately, our employees and growers don't." In other words, he will transfer production to U.S. installations and ship frozen food from there into Canada. That reference is from Maclean's, May 1988, page 46.

● (1610)

The issue is not whether the particular Canadian policy tools that the trade deal renounces are good or not. The issue is that we are renouncing them through a treaty with a neighbour ten times our size, who is also our major commercial partner. This is very binding for us, the much smaller partner. To use a metaphor, through this trade deal we are like a driver whose steering wheel is blocked so that it will only turn in one direction. It may be the right way to turn now, but some may think that an unblocked steering wheel is safer.

Should this Canadian Parliament approve this trade deal, it will be much more costly for future Canadian Parliaments to launch new programs of government intervention—see item 5.16—to promote employment, research, development or use our abundant energy to attract investment here, as in the past. We could launch such programs, but Americans might ask us for heavy compensation because our government programs might be taking future benefits away from U.S. entrepreneurs. We gave up so much to gain increased and secure access to the U.S. market, and we did not get it.

In sum, the evidence shows that we got far too little and we gave far too much. Scoring a plus for an advantage gained, a minus for an advantage lost and a zero for no change, the Free Trade Agreement gives Canada no pluses, 12 zeros and 6 minuses, out of 18 points. The U.S. scored the converse: 6 pluses, 12 zeros and no minuses.

I now come to proposition 6. There was a better alternative for Canada that the U.S. would accept, even now, instead of the FTA: a free trade area in tariffs alone, immediately; abolish the rest of the tariffs in ten years; negotiate everything else as always, adapting to the circumstances as they change. This is, in effect, what Donald Macdonald was saying, and what Senator van Roggen said in his earlier reports. These inclusions of financial institutions, services and investment groups are totally new, and they are a change from the fundamental thought that went into those earlier reports. So when the Leader of the Government in the Senate tries to say that what we have here is a continuation of what was happening earlier, I am afraid he is either deceiving himself or he is ill informed.

Admittedly, so vast and so complex an economic relationship as the one we have with the U.S. needs adjustment when the terms of trade change and the terms of global trade have certainly changed for the Americans. They are adjusting to change and so must we.

We are on page 35, Senator Barootes.

A useful suggestion on how to adjust was made by Canadian big business through its spokesman, Mr. Thomas d'Aquino. He is the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Business Council on National Issues, the BCNI, the major leaguers' club of Canadian enterprise whose 155 companies have revenues equal to half the total revenues of Canada, or so they say. Speaking to a convention of the U.S. Federal Bar Association on September 13, 1985 in Detroit, Mr. d'Aquino said:

I believe our respective governments should move quickly to declare their support for a Comprehensive Trade Agreement and begin the process of negotiation this autumn. The agreement itself would, of necessity, follow along the lines of a free trade accord as defined by Article XXIV of the GATT. Given the various options under the GATT for establishing a regional trade agreement, it would be appropriate to first negotiate an interim agreement leading to the establishment, over time, of a bilateral agreement consistent with the GATT rules.

The most important requirement is that 'substantially all trade' between the parties be freed under the terms of the regional agreement. Previous experience suggests that the freeing of trade in 80 per cent of traded goods is sufficient to meet this test.

Mr. d'Aquino, an attorney who specializes in international economic law, would be particularly careful about his choice of words when addressing a convention of U.S. lawyers on the matter of free trade, an issue of most vital interest to the Canadian entrepreneurs that Mr. d'Aquino represents.

The key words used by Mr. d'Aquino are: negotiate an interim agreement consistent with the GATT rules, freeing trade in 80 per cent of traded goods. There is nothing about services, investment or sharing of resources; only goods. Mr. d'Aquino often points out that close to 80 per cent of all trade in goods between the U.S. and Canada flows across the border free of tariffs. So, in effect, Canada's major business people were proposing that we convince the U.S. to start with an "interim agreement" that would give to the status quo the name of a regional free trade area, as defined by GATT, which covers only trade in goods.

The emphasis that Mr. d'Aquino placed on GATT is important because the GATT does not have an ideological aversion to subsidies:

...Signatories recognize that subsidies are used by (GATT) governments to promote important objectives of social and economic policy... It must be demonstrated that the subsidized imports, through the effects of the subsidy, are causing injury (to the importing country)... and the injuries caused by other factors must not be attributed to the subsidized imports.

That quotation is from the GATT Tokyo Round Agreements, Articles 8 and 6. I put 8 first and 6 afterwards because the first part of the quotation is from Article 8 and the second from Article 6.

In Detroit in 1985, Mr. d'Aquino said that, over time, we could negotiate something more than an interim agreement, but still consistent with the GATT rules. In the meantime, by virtue of the interim agreement, we would be officially labelled fair traders by the U.S. and given better treatment than others.

Unfortunately, this BCNI strategy enunciated by Mr. d'Aquino in 1985 was not used by our cabinet. No doubt, after Prime Minister Brian Mulroney signed his deal with Mr. Reagan, many members of the BCNI must have asked what went wrong. The President of the Bank of Nova Scotia put down his dismay in a letter, which was leaked, saying that we gave too much and got too little. However, the agreement has been signed and it is safe to assume that BCNI members are wondering about the risks we might incur if we renounce this deal.

The d'Aquino strategy can still serve as part of an alternative to the Mulroney trade deal, an alternative that would not damage our relationship with the United States. We should tell Washington that America's main trading problems are with the European Economic Community, Japan and other Pacific Rim nations. They do not buy enough in goods and services from the U.S.; Canada does. It is with those other countries that the U.S. must reach an accommodation within GATT. What the U.S. negotiates with its small neighbour, Canada, cannot possibly serve as a pattern for a settlement with economic giants such as the EEC or Japan. On the contrary, a Canada-U.S. agreement that is biased too much in favour of the U.S. could make the other GATT partners wary and reluctant to make concessions.

So, for now, the U.S. and Canada should content themselves with a free trade area, as far as tariffs alone are concerned, and negotiate on the other issues in parallel with the GATT negotiations. We could suggest that the Canada-United States Trade Commission of the FTA act as the negotiating agent for the constant adjustment of our trade relations to make sure that our current accounts with one another remain balanced.

• (1620)

Obviously, in the GATT, the U.S. would be negotiating with 95 other nations. It would have to make more concessions in such a context than when dealing with us alone. Of all nations, we are the most dependent on trade with the U.S. and, therefore, the most likely to bow to American demands. Within the context of GATT negotiations, Canada would get the benefit of all the concessions the U.S. would make to others, and the price of those concessions would not be paid by us alone but would be shared with 95 others.

Would the Americans be furious if we did not go through with the FTA? Undoubtedly they would be disappointed, since the deal is so much to their advantage. But I do not think they would exact revenge; our relationship benefits them too much.

The Americans buy from us because it is to their advantage to do so. They are shrewd customers who know a good deal when they see it. If they could find a better buy, they would. In matters of trade, we should not expect our neighbours to act against their own interest, to cut their American nose to spite our Canadian face—that would be stupid and they are anything but stupid.

The proponents of the FTA contradict themselves. (A) To convince us that we should support the FTA, they say: the Americans are so mean and unfair that we need the Free Trade Agreement to tame them. See items 2.4 to 2.6 above. One argument of the proponents of the FTA, then, is that if we do not sign the agreement, this ravaging American monster will kill us. Critics of the FTA suggest that it gives the U.S. power it can abuse to our detriment, to which the pro-FTA faction replies that its critics are essentially anti-American and always assume the U.S. will be unfair.

Senator Barootes: Are you?

Senator Gigantès: No, I believe the Americans are not going to be monsters.

Senator Barootes: Are you anti-American?

Senator Gigantès: I am not.

Senator Barootes: Thank you.

Senator Gigantès: We should not be so idiotic as to scare ourselves silly by seeing the U.S. as a ravaging monster that is thirsting for our blood. I do not believe that the Americans wish us ill. They are good neighbours, as we are.

Besides, the EEC did a calculation for the government of what it would cost us if we did not go through with the FTA and the Americans pulled out all their protectionist stops—it would cost us 22,000 jobs over 11 years and some 8 cents per day per person. I would refer you to items 4.1 and 4.2 above.

Let us also remember that we are an infinitesimal part of America's trade and current account deficit problems. See items 1.1 to 1.7 above.

We are also America's most essential glacis, the buffer that separates the U.S. from Russia. We are faithful allies and the U.S. would not want to damage us economically or sap our genuine goodwill towards our southern neighbour through excessive trade bullying.

There are those who fear that our neighbours to the south will turn themselves into an economic "fortress America", severely protectionist. It is not an easy thing for the U.S. to do. Too much foreign capital is invested in the United States. Japan and West Germany are too powerful economically to be ignored by any U.S. administration and the U.S. owes them too much money to disregard their interests totally. Washington is much more sophisticated than in the era of the Smoot-Hawley Act, the infamous piece of protectionist U.S. legislation which brought on the great depression in the thirties.

Yes, the Americans will fight for more reciprocity in their foreign trade, even if this means bending the spirit of GATT. But they will not say "Stop the world; I want to get off".

The trick for us is not to be within the American fence or to be left outside it. Somehow we must straddle it and we have been very good at that in the past. The BCNI's Tom d'Aquino showed us how, in Detroit, in 1985. It was a better alternative for Canada, which the U.S. would accept, even now, instead of the FTA: a free trade area in tariffs alone, immediately; an abolishing of the rest of the tariffs in 10 years; negotiations about everything else, as always, adapting to the circumstances as they change.

I have concluded, honourable senators, except for one question I should like to put to the lawyers on the Conservative side and I hope they will be able to give me an answer in a few days. My question has to do with the chapter on agriculture. Article 711 of the Free Trade Agreement, to be found at page 88, gives definitions of agricultural goods and states:

For purposes of this Chapter:

agricultural goods means all goods classified within chapters 1, 2, 4... 21 and 24 of the Harmonized System and all goods classified within the following specific tariff headings of the Harmonized System:

I have in my hand the Harmonized Commodity Description Code to which the agreement refers and I will be glad to give a photostat of it to any senator who wants to see it. One of the items mentioned is 2201, which appears at page 163 of the Harmonized Code, and it is "water". Item 2201.1 is "mineral water and aerated water"; item 2201.9 states "other". Further, it states:

This heading covers natural water of all kinds other than sea water.

Honourable senators, already tankers-full of water are being exported from Vancouver. In Bill C-130 there is a notification that water is not included in the bill. It is, however, included in the agreement.

Senator Barootes: Do red herrings swim in water?

Senator Gigantès: It is in the agreement, honourable senators, and I think it is an oversight. I should like the government to go to the Americans and ask them to declare that bulk shipments of water are not covered by the agreement. It is not enough for us to say that they are not, because in that case the dispute settling mechanism will come into play, Article 2201 will come into play and the Americans may say, in the case of a major drought down the road, "If you don't give us water, you are denying to us benefits you could reasonably expect under Article 7. Therefore, we are going to retaliate against you." I ask the government to have a look at that and I thank senators for their patience.

Senator Molgat: Would Senator Gigantès permit a question?

Senator Gigantès: I will permit all the questions senators would like to ask.

Senator Molgat: In view of his exhaustive study of the subject, did he deal with the question of marketing boards and the effect that the Free Trade Agreement may have upon the continuation of those boards in the field of agriculture in particular? Secondly, what effect will the agreement have on the food processing industry in Canada? The reason I ask questions on this subject specifically is that in my own province of Manitoba there is at present an argument going on as to the effect the agreement will have on firms like McCain Foods and Carnation Milk, who have established major food processing plants in that province. McCain Foods, at least, has said that it will have to cease production in Manitoba and move to the United States if the Free Trade Agreement goes ahead. Others say that that is not so. Has the honourable senator checked into this matter?

● (1630)

Senator Gigantès: Honourable senators, if a commodity that is controlled and regulated through a marketing board is sold here in Canada for more than a similar commodity is sold in the United States, people such as McCain, Carnation, et al would be foolish businessmen if they did not move their production to where the raw materials are cheaper, and, as Mr. McCain says, he can export his pizzas and his frozen dinners to Canada from the United States and pay 39 per cent less for cheese than he does here. I am not arguing for or against marketing boards, but the fact is that the Americans have a much longer growing season than we have. It is obvious that it must cost them less to grow food than it costs us here. Inevitably, because of heating costs for the plants, et cetera, the food-producing and processing industry, according to Mr. McCain—and I cannot fault his judgment—will move south of the border.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I wonder if the honourable senator could assist us. You raised the question of water, saying that it is provided for in the agreement both in the narrow sense and in the broader sense.

Senator Gigantès: On that point, senator, I am not sure. I asked the lawyers to elucidate this area.

Senator Sinclair: Let me put this to you—

Senator Gigantès: Very well.

Senator Sinclair: The honourable Mr. Crosbie has said that bulk water is not included in the agreement and, as you said, there is an exclusion of it in Bill C-130. However, you point out that that is unilateral. Have you looked into the proposition that where both sides agree on a matter that is only interpretative, there does not have to be anything other than a signatory of both parties to carry out the interpretation? What I am saying is that, if Mr. Crosbie says it is not included and if Mr. Yeutter says it is not included, then all that is needed is what we might call a side letter or a side agreement of interpretation, and all that requires is a signatory on each side of the agreement to sign it. Have you looked into that question?

Senator Gigantès: Indeed, I should like to see that provision. I have not seen that yet. However, I agree with you, sir, that, if both sides agree in writing that this is how a specific article should be interpreted, that indeed bulk water is not included and this is actually then stated in writing by both parties, then it is covered. I believe that is the intention of the government; but I am saying that the way in which the text is now phrased, unless we get such an instrument as you suggest, sir, then down the road many years from now we might find ourselves without legal coverage on this issue.

[Translation]

Senator David: Honourable senators, I listened patiently, but also with great interest, to Senator Gigantès' long speech. I noticed that Dr. Lipsey was quoted in about thirty-four out of the thirty-seven or thirty-eight pages you gave us.

I gathered the doctor was not a medical doctor but probably had a Ph.D. in economics. I would have appreciated some additional details on his professional life, because I have the impression that you are very critical of his book, to a certain extent. Basically, your speech is a response to statements which according to you are inaccurate.

I would like to know something about the author's professional background so that I can draw a comparison between two giants in economics, between him and yourself.

Senator Gigantès: I am hardly a giant in economics. Professor Lipsey, and I said as much in my speech—maybe you were not present—is considered to be one of the most eminent economists in this country. However, even very respected economists are capable of saying on one page that significant progress was made and on the next page that we scored zero in the same area. That gives me heartburn.

But perhaps, as a researcher for the Library of Parliament said when he read the book, half was written by Dr. Lipsey and the other half by Mr. York, and they didn't read each other's contribution. That may be the reason why this economist at the Library of Parliament said there were so many contradictions. It's full of holes, what can I do! Even great men make mistakes!

In this case, I wish you would read the book, while following the text of my speech. You will see I made no mistakes in my quotes. I did not criticize the man, his training or his work. I said that his arguments were often contradictory and that this book deserved to get a number of comments.

What did Senator Lowell Murray say yesterday? It was raining quotes from Dr. Lipsey, the same as it was today. Dr. Lipsey is the great Manitou. Dr. Lipsey says so. The big cheese of economics said so. But sometimes people make mistakes.

Senator David: Your answer leads me to believe that the same book can be interpreted in two different ways. There is your interpretation, but that does not mean Senator Murray can't have his. This can happen among economists, as it does among physicians.

Senator Gigantès: I maintain my position. It might take me three hours to explain, however. The only reason I can see for Senator Murray's supporting this book is that he didn't read it. If he had, since he is a very intelligent man, he would never have quoted from it.

If Mr. Crosbie, who is also very intelligent, had read it, if he had ever read the studies by the Economic Council of Canada and had asked one of his assistants to calculate the value of a 2.5 per cent increase in eleven years to figure out what that would mean on an annual basis, per capita, in other words, 2.25 tenths of 1 per cent—but no one asked that question. If someone had, it would have been clear right away that we are talking about one cigaret per day per person. As increases go that is ridiculous.

[Senator Molgat.]

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Senator Gigantès, you have taken considerable time this afternoon to debunk various authorities quoted by the Leader of the Government here yesterday. I perhaps missed what you might have said about one of the authorities that the honourable leader drew upon. However, because you have made some very definitive references to water, I would ask if you have given any thought to the statements made by Senator van Roggen, who spent some six months or more studying the Free Trade Agreement and gave us a bold, clear statement on water. Did you find no reassurance in his statement, or is he among the authorities we are to consider as having been debunked?

Senator Gigantès: One of the unfortunate things about being in the Senate is that one either speaks or one listens. Even my former boss and editor, who used to read my material so carefully with a blue pencil, obviously did not grasp what I said. If he reads the record tomorrow, he will see that I said I asked the lawyers on the Conservative side to look at this issue and tell me whether there is a danger because of Article 2201 of the harmonization. I asked a question; that is all.

Senator van Roggen thinks that there is no danger. I have talked to other lawyers who say there is. Senator Sinclair has suggested a way of correcting this. I am not suggesting that the government wants to sell water in bulk. I accept the word of the government that it does not. However, there is a possible loophole that might catch us down the road. I have talked to several lawyers about this. It can be corrected. I am asking the lawyers on this side to check, and not rely only on Senator van Roggen. He is one lawyer; there are others.

Senator Barootes: My learned friend and national compatriot was good enough to quote Thomas d'Aquino, who is the BCNI executive director and a learned counsel and economist. He quoted him from 1985 in a manner that rather hurts the Free Trade Agreement, where d'Aquino said he had a better idea.

Senator Gigantès, have you read his more recent speech given to the same group, the American Bar, on August 18, 1988, three years later, after the Free Trade Agreement had been signed, in which he spent a good hour and some 14 pages—being much more concise than yourself—debunking all the myths that people like yourself have put up, in which he totally and completely supports the Free Trade Agreement of Canada? Do you have any comment?

Senator Gigantès: Oh, yes. If you look at all these myths, you will find that he sets up straw men and then knocks them down. One is the cultural straw man, which I did not mention. I have read his 1988 speech. He is paid to write these things.

Senator Barootes: You did not quote it.

Senator Gigantès: No, I did not quote it. In 1985 he knew what he was talking about; in 1988, terrified because all the pro-free-traders, I think, are the real anti-Americans and terrified that the Americans are monsters, he now has to make a silk purse out of a sow's ear.

Senator Barootes: Oh, come on!

Senator Gigantès: So you take your choice of d'Aquino now; I take my choice of when I thought d'Aquino was right. You do not expect me to quote d'Aquino as an alternative with his views now, because they are not an alternative. I am saying that what he suggested three years ago was a better idea. I was very polite about it. He sets up all kinds of straw men in his 1988 speech, none of which I mentioned. He becomes very theatrical about this issue, but that is his job. He is a lobbyist. We are trying to regulate lobbyists now, and he is one of them. Would I believe Mrs. Erola, do you think? Of course not!

Senator Barootes: He is a nice man in 1985; he is bad in 1988. I get it.

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Balfour, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the thirtieth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce concerning Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "B", p. 4341.)

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a few words to say about this report. As an appendix to the report, you will find a letter that extends significant protection to members whose terms of office have been terminated by statute. I would ask that you look at that letter carefully.

The committee has received significant assistance from the ministers of the Crown in dealing with this bill. I believe that that is reflected in the commitments and assurances that have been set out in the report. I hope that the bill will receive the support of all honourable senators.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE BILL SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Kelly seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill C-143, An Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse.—
(Honourable Senator Haidasz, P.C.).

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I thank you for your patience and I shall try to expedite the second reading stage of Bill C-143. I will not talk about drug prices or the nature of drugs or their complications. We all know that some drugs are addictive and are abused, even though we have stringent laws against such abuse and illegal purveyance.

Throughout the years the Canadian government has reacted to the abuse of drugs by repeatedly legislating restrictions and imposing criminal sanctions through the use of the Criminal Code. It has established many government agencies, departments and the so-called "non-medical use of drugs directorate." Despite this, the abuse of drugs—especially the mind-altering ones—has increased. In 1970, when cannabis or marijuana—also called hashish—became an increasingly serious problem in our society, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Honourable John Munro, whom I served as parliamentary assistant, initiated a commission of inquiry into the non-medical use of drugs, chaired by law professor, Gerald Le Dain, now a member of the Supreme Court of Canada. In response to the Le Dain Commission report, the federal government in 1972 decided against legalizing possession of cannabis, even though there were many people in Canada asking for its legalization.

However, a permissive society and the aggressive money-hungry drug pushers produced more drug victims and problems for our society and government. In 1974, when the taxpayers were paying for the consequences of drug abuse to the amount of more than $1 billion, further efforts had to be made.

A few weeks ago the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police appeared before one of the parliamentary committees to emphasize that illicit drug trade in Canada is not only very dangerous, but also one of the most profitable criminal activities in this country, with profits estimated in the billions of dollars annually. They also said that this problem of drug abuse not only seriously affects our social and welfare programs, but injures the quality of life. There is a degeneration of society because of the problems associated with drug trafficking and the illicit use of drugs. I now just want to mention, as Senator Kelly did yesterday afternoon, that non-governmental agencies have been very helpful in this problem. He mentioned CODA, the Council on Drug Abuse, which I served as an advisor in the 1970s. However, such non-governmental agencies are always hampered by lack of funds, either from the government or the private sector.

Rather suddenly in September 1986, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney became aware of the illicit drug program, apparently while in Vancouver, where he announced to a stunned nation that drug abuse had become an epidemic which was undermining our economic and social fabric. It is curious that his statement followed almost within 24 hours a similar statement made by the U.S. President, Ronald Reagan. In response to the Prime Minister's statement, in December 1986 the House of Commons Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare began hearings into illegal drugs in Canada. Early in its hearings, the committee extended the scope of its study to include other forms of substance abuse, both legal and illegal, including the use of alcohol. In May 1987, in advance of the completion of the in-depth study being conducted by the Health and Welfare Committee, our health minister, Jake Epp, announced a $210-million five-year plan to curb drug abuse. However, this announcement was met with some cynicism and criticism from many interested health officials, and even editorialists, across the country. The announcement of $42 million per year was described as meager help, when one considers that New Brunswick, with less than 3 per cent of Canada's population, estimates its medical and social service costs associated with alcohol and drug abuse at $275 million per year. Furthermore, there was little help in the minister's announcement for increased enforcement by the RCMP, or for our native people, particularly those who live off the reserves.

A few months later in October 1987, the committee chairman, Dr. Bruce Halliday, whom I know very well, tabled a unanimous report entitled Booze, Pills, and Dope—Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada. Here I should like to add that Dr. Halliday, Member of Parliament for Oxford in the province of Ontario, was a medical classmate of mine at the University of Toronto along with Dr. Harry Harley, a former Member of Parliament for Oakville who also chaired the Commons Health and Welfare Committee that did the study on tobacco and its effects on the respiratory system.

The report of the committee, chaired by Dr. Halliday, and its 31 recommendations were well received by groups and individuals active in the drug addiction field. In March 1988 the health minister finally tabled the federal government's response to the Health and Welfare Committee's report. It was disappointing that the federal government accepted only two of the 31 recommendations proposed by the committee: the creation of a Canadian centre of substance abuse, funded to the tune of $2 million annually, and the development of a new cost-shared alcohol and drug treatment and rehabilitation program focusing on youth addicts, funded to the tune of only $20 million annually. Whatever the amounts, we must be grateful and satisfied that at least two recommendations were adopted by this short-sighted government, which is generous where the votes are plentiful but stingy where the genuine needs are greatest. However, this centre is a good addition in the war against drug and alcohol abuse.

The purposes of this centre are outlined in the first paragraphs of the bill, so I shall not go into them. I merely want to say that, to meet the challenge of such a national crisis, what has been done to date is not enough. In Canada there are 21,000 heroin addicts alone, according to the law enforcement bodies, including the RCMP. Cocaine trafficking is increasing. Thefts and muggings are on the rise, while drug treatment centres are lacking, and laws are unenforced or ineffective.

Canada needs more well-staffed chronic pain clinics to reduce the pressure on physicians caused by the increasing number of patients demanding relief from chronic pain. The other problems in this area are double doctoring and other drug diversion activities. I recommend to the federal government that, if it is serious in attacking this grave social disease and this serious criminal activity, it appoint a national director to oversee and coordinate the war against drug and alcohol abuse; that it put into action, without delay, all 31 of the recommendations of the committee; and that it provide more federal funding and resources for more comprehensive programs along with better enforcement and more effective legislation. At present the federal government is dissipating the taxpayers' money by using five or six cabinet ministers—each vying for the limelight—instead of attacking forcefully and fully this national problem.

Honourable senators, in conclusion I wish to reiterate that we support Bill C-143, but we urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to implement fully and without delay the other 29 recommendations of the health committee's report on reducing substance abuse in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-130 DISCHARGED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think it is evident to those who are still here and those who have been here for the past two days that Bill C-130 is now before the Senate. I have spoken to Senator MacDonald about this order and he agrees with me that it should be discharged.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Order discharged.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INQUIRY—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Gigantès calling the attention of the Senate to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that this particular item is now before us in the form of a bill, I would move that it be discharged. Before we go any further, I should indicate that I have not checked with Senator Gigantès. During his address, he drove me to such a peak of exasperation that I took the adjournment—and have regretted it ever since! I shall check with Senator Gigantès.

Order stands.
The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10:00 a.m.

APPENDIX "A"

*(See p. 4319)*APPENDIX TO SENATOR GIGANTÈS' DOCUMENT ENTITLED: THE FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

APPENDIX

This is a fuller version of Proposition 4 as it appeared on page 21 above.

Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal do not predict prosperity. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal which was not "better", if we hold to his definition of what would have been a better deal. Yet, according to the self same economic forecasts, the risks of not signing were minimal, a loss of some eight cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years.

The facts that follow deal with the economic benefits the Mulroney government said would flow from The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and the "dire" consequences of not signing this Agreement. In making these predictions, members of the Mulroney cabinet were citing two studies by the Economic Council of Canada: Discussion Paper 331, Impact of Canada-U.S. Free Trade on the Canadian Economy, August 1987; and eight months later, Discussion Paper 344, An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The first was based on what the government hoped the Agreement would say, the second, no. 344 was a revision of the first and was based on the actual text of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement.

These two studies have been combined in a 40-page booklet by the Economic Council of Canada entitled Venturing Forth, An Assessment of the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement. In a foreword, Ms. Judith Maxwell, Chairman of the ECC, writes: "This Statement assesses the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the U.S. on 2 January, 1988. The Statement reflects the views of the Council members and is based upon an in-depth analysis of the agreement by a team of Council researchers." (my emphasis)

In its conclusion, Venturing Forth states: "Canadians in general have learned about themselves and about the United States in the past two and a half years, through months of negotiations and millions of hours of study ..." This is serious-sounding stuff and the Mulroney government has practically papered the land with Venturing Forth.

Venturing Forth and studies 331 and 344 which it explicitly recognizes as its source (p.ix), try to predict where our economy will go with the trade deal ("the most likely outcome") and without ("the base case"). The "base case" does not assume that the Americans will become more protectionist against us if we do not implement the trade agreement. However, the researchers of the ECC have studied the possibility that the Americans might become even more protectionist if we did not sign the Agreement; the ECC calls this scenario its "Simulation 5".

Such projections use the past to predict the future but the future seldom fails to surprise us. Nevertheless, computers and armies of equations representing the past relationships among existing aspects of the economy, turn out studies full of such projections which are widely used by the Bank of Canada, the Department of Finance as well as the ECC. They have limitations but they do provide some sort of starting point for thinking about the future.

Presumably, the Mulroney government takes these studies by the ECC seriously since it quotes them at every opportunity as evidence of the good the free trade deal will do Canada. Notably, on Monday July 11, 1988, the Hon. John Crosbie, P.C., M.P., Minister for International Trade, said:

"Let us look at what the Economic Council of Canada has to say ... The Council identifies scenario 2 as the most likely outcome which shows real output up by 2.5% and employment higher by 251,000 ... a net increase in jobs of 251,000". (Minutes of the Proceedings of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and The United States, pp. 2-46)

Here, then, is what the ECC studies used by the Mulroney government, say about our future after the FTA has come into full effect in our two countries, by December 31, 1998. Figures are given, hereunder, in 1981 dollars which are the "constant" dollars the ECC uses to factor out inflation:

(4.1) Without the free trade deal, we could lose 22,000 jobs to additional American protectionism in 11 years.

Ms. Carney predicted that if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. "we could lose half a million jobs." (Commons Debates, March 16, 1987, PP. 4178-4181). The ECC's study 344 has done a calculation of how many fewer jobs the Canadian economy would create between now and December 1998, if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement and the U.S. took the protectionist measures we fear. The figure is 22,000 jobs.

(4.2) Without the free trade deal, additional protectionism by the U.S. could cost each Canadian some eight cents per day 11 years from now.

Venturing Forth, p. 18, shows that if we did not sign the Free Trade Agreement and the U.S. took protectionist measures against us (Simulation 5), by 1998 our economy will be smaller by two thousandths (that is, by two tenths of one per cent) than it would be with the Free Trade Agreement. Study 344, p. 69, shows that in 1998 the GDP, our Gross Domestic Product (the size of our economy), without the free trade deal, will be some $437.16 billion, in 1981 dollars. Two thousandths or two tenths of one per cent of that is $874.32 million. If we divide this sum by the 28.6 million Canadians that Statistics Canada says will be our population in 1998, we see that in 1998, each Canadian man, woman and child will have some eight cents less per day, if we do not go ahead with the Mulroney trade deal and the Americans turn very protectionist against us.

(4.3) The free trade deal might give us one third the jobs the Mulroney government originally predicted.

The Hon. Pat Carney, as Minister for International Trade, forecast that, thanks to the FTA, "370,000 jobs could be created in the next five years." (Commons Debates, March 16, 1987, pp. 4178-4181). She was using the ECC's Study 331, based on Mr. Mulroney's wish list.

But the ECC's Study 344, based on the actual text of the Free Trade Agreement, set the net new jobs to be created by the FTA at 251,000 in 11 years. (Of the 251,000 jobs in 11 years, more than half are for clerks, salespersons and the like and few are in high tech). This figure of 251,000 in 11 years means 114,000 in five years, or less than a third of the 370,000 Ms. Carney originally promised.

The authors of the ECC's two studies on the impact of the free trade deal, say that the job figures changed from their first to their second study because the actual Free Trade Agreement contained far fewer goodies for Canada than had been on the Mulroney wish list. Here is what the ECC says about how tough the Yankee traders were in the FTA negotiations:

"In the earlier study, a hypothetical, comprehensive, bilateral Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States was simulated ... It was assumed that all of the existing trade barriers (except subsidies) between the two countries would be removed. But under the agreement signed in January, most of the non-tariff barriers will remain intact ... Our calculations indicate that only about 25 per cent of the existing non-tariff barriers are removed under the Free Trade Agreement. Similarly, the impact of the Agreement on federal government procurement is substantially smaller in scope than the one assumed in Discussion Paper 331 ... Under the Free Trade Agreement, Canada has been excluded from bidding for large U.S. government purchases in aircraft and components, ships, communications equipment and electrical and electronic equipment components." (Venturing Forth, pp. 39-40)

(4.4) The rate of job creation under the Mulroney trade deal is slower than even during the 1974-1984 years of explosions in oil prices, hyper-inflation, sky-high interest rates, the deep recession that began in 1981 and massive unemployment.

On page 70 of the ECC's Study 344, we are told that the 251,193 net, new FTA jobs represent 1.8 per cent of the total jobs that will exist at the end of 1998. If the figure 251,193 is 1.8 percent, we can obtain what 100 per cent is by multiplying 251,193 by 100 and dividing it by 1.8 (an economist from the Library of Parliament confirms this). Thus, 100 per cent is 13,955,167 to which one must add 251,193 (+ 1.8%) to obtain 14,206,360, the number of people who will be employed in Canada in 1998, if the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal is in operation.

We know from Statistics Canada (Canadian Economic Observer) that 11,955,000 Canadians were employed in December 1987. We can work out at what rate employment will have grown per year and on average, between January 1, 1988 and December 31, 1998, by using the formula: $C = A$ times $(1 + i)$ to the eleventh power, the standard formula for calculating compound rates of growth.

So, $C = 14,206,360 = 11,955,000$ times $(1 + i)$ to the eleventh power, where (i) stands for the average yearly growth rate. The result is that, thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, we shall have an average annual growth rate in jobs of 1.58 per cent over the 11 years ending December 31, 1998.

By the use of the same formula, and with Statistics Canada figures, we can find the average annual growth rate in jobs for the 11 years from 1974 to 1984 inclusive, years of huge jumps in oil prices, hyper-inflation, sky-high interest rates and the worst business downturn since the Great Depression, with massive unemployment. Without a free trade agreement, in the 11 years 1974-1984, the average annual growth rate in jobs was 1.7 per cent, more than the free trade deal is expected to give us.

Those two 11 year periods, 1974-1984 and 1988-1998 inclusive, are comparable because population in the next 11 years is projected to grow at one per cent per year, the rate at which it grew between 1974 and 1984.

(4.5) By the time the Mulroney trade deal is fully in place in 1998, personal incomes may have increased by some 10.5 cents per person per day.

On page 69 of the ECC's Study 344, we are told that by December 1998 Canada's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) will be 2.5 per cent bigger than it would have been without the Mulroney trade deal.

To make these figures clearer for readers who do not have economics as their hobby, the GDP is the sum total of all the goods and services we produce. If we divide the GDP by the population, we get the Gross Domestic Product per capita or per person; this is often used as a measure of how citizens are faring relatively, as between one country and another or one period and another.

It stands to reason that this is a key economic measure. If the GDP per capita is falling (after inflation), chances are that consumer spending is falling; and that, consequently, investment in new plant is falling; government revenues are falling; there is less money to pay for medicare, pensions, child care. The reverse is likely if GDP per capita is rising.

The ECC is not talking of GDP calculations that are "expenditure based" and include government spending. Instead the ECC is talking of GDP at "factor costs" which does not include government spending.

The ECC (Venturing Forth, Table 3) predicts that the GDP would be greater by 2.5 per cent at the end of 1998 than it would have been without the Free Trade Agreement.

Table 1.3 of the Canadian Economic Observer published by Statistics Canada in July 1988, shows the GDP at factor costs at the end of December 1988 running at a yearly rate of some $387 billion (in 1981 dollars). So by using the formula in the second paragraph of item (4.4) above, we find that if we are talking of GDP at factor costs, then the ECC is predicting that the Canadian economy will grow, thanks to the FTA, from $387 billion this year to $448 billion 11 years from now, or at an average rate of 1.3 per cent per year (all figures in 1981 dollars).

In the 11 years 1974 to 1984, with the two price explosions in oil and the biggest business recession since the Great Depression of the 1930s, Canada's GDP at factor costs grew at an average annual rate of 2.3 percent, after allowing for inflation. This is to say that between 1974 and 1984, the Canadian economy grew at a rate varying between 77 per cent to 500 per cent faster than the rate of growth the Mulroney government's calculations predict for the first 11 years of the Free Trade Agreement.

Those who feel uneasy about comparing the next 11 years with the past 11 years should reject the ECC's forecast exercise because it uses equations based on past relationships in the economy to predict the results of future relationships in the economy. The Mulroney government obviously does not feel uneasy about using these forecasts.

But we could use the ECC's projections to predict what will happen in 1988, if the ECC's rate of growth had applied. The ECC says that after 11 years the economy will be 2.5 per cent greater with the Free Trade Agreement than it would be without the Agreement. That total growth of 2.5 per cent over 11 years turns out to be an added average growth of 0.002247 or 2.25 tenths of one per cent per year (these figures are derived using the formula in the fifth paragraph of item 4.5 above).

If our 1988 GDP grows an extra 2.25 tenths of one per cent, each Canadian man, woman and child will have an extra 10.2 cents per day or less than the price of one cigarette. By the end of 1998, this "extra" income due to the FTA will be 10.5 cents per day per Canadian (all figures in 1981 dollars). The calculations are based on the Department of Finance publication Quarterly Economic Review for June 1988. By any comparison, then, the trade deal is no great deal for the average Canadian, according to the government forecasts.

(4.6) Mr. Mulroney did not get a "better deal" yet he signed it even though he said he would only sign a "better deal".

Mr. Mulroney told the New York Times on April 3, 1987, "there were several vital conditions the (trade agreement) would have to meet. Most important among these, Mr. Mulroney said, is that Canada must be permanently exempt from the U.S.'s fair-trading laws." This permanent exemption was his most important vital condition and Mr. Mulroney did not get it.

What he may have got, according to projections he uses and publicizes, is a GDP per capita (in 1981 dollars) and a rate of job creation considerably slower than in our worst post-war decade. That is not a better deal, as Mr. Mulroney himself defines a better deal.

He said that "if our negotiations do not result in a better deal for Canada, there will be no deal," (quoted by the Hon. Pat Carney, Commons Debates, October 9, 1986, p. 255).

IN SUM, THE EVIDENCE SHOWS THAT:

Economic forecasts used by Mr. Mulroney to sell his deal do not predict prosperity. Even so, Mr. Mulroney signed this deal which was not "better", if we hold to his definition of what would have been a better deal. Yet, according to the self same economic forecasts, the risks of not signing were minimal, a loss of some eight cents a day per Canadian in 1998 and a loss of 22,000 jobs over 11 years.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL BILL

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

THURSDAY, September 8, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

THIRTIETH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-110, An Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, July 26, 1988, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

OBJECTS OF THE BILL

Bill C-110 has two primary purposes:

First, it will create a new tribunal, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal (CITT), to replace three existing tribunals: the Canadian Import Tribunal (CIT), the Tariff Board (TB), and the Textile and Clothing Board (TCB). Each of these three tribunals is now empowered to inquire into import-related matters, resulting in needless duplication and complexity in our administrative structure for the implementation of import policy. Their amalgamation into a single agency is an attempt to rationalize that structure. In the words of Finance officials appearing before the Committee: "With the inquiry functions of the three tribunals under one roof, expertise and knowledge regarding trade matters will be more efficiently focused and this will help ensure harmonization in the treatment of import and other international trade issues and provide a central focus for examining the trade-related concerns of Canadians."

Second, the Bill will extend the right of direct access for safeguard-action inquiries to all Canadian industries. Safeguard actions are temporary measures implemented to protect domestic production against imports that are fairly traded; that is, imports that are neither dumped nor subsidized. Article XIX of the GATT permits member countries to take such measures in cases where a product is being imported "in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers". In Canada at present, only the textile and clothing industries are able to petition directly for safeguard inquiries, under section 8 of the Textiles and Clothing Board Act. Other industries must petition and convince the government to initiate such an inquiry. Bill C-110 will enable any domestic industry to petition directly for a safeguard investigation by filing with the CITT a properly documented complaint of serious injury from increased imports.

COMPOSITION AND STATUS OF CITT

CITT will consist of a Chairman, two Vice-Chairmen and up to six other permanent, full-time members appointed by the Governor in Council for terms not exceeding five years. Up to five temporary members may also be appointed whenever the workload of the Tribunal requires it. By comparison, the combined membership of CIT, TB and TCB, which CITT will replace, is fifteen.

CITT is to be a court of record with the same powers to summon witnesses, require production of documents and enforce orders as are vested in a superior court of record. This is the same status as that now enjoyed by CIT and TB. The TCB, on the other hand is simply a research and advisory body.

CITT will have power to make by-laws respecting the calling of meetings and the conduct of business, and rules governing its general practice and procedures. The Governor in Council will also have authority to issue regulations respecting the conduct of inquiries by CITT into possible safeguard actions and will generally be responsible for carrying out the purposes of the Act. To ensure easy access, hearings before the CITT will "be conducted as informally and expeditiously as the circumstances and considerations of fairness permit" (clause 35). These provisions are similar to those now governing the procedures of the CIT, TB and TCB.

FUNCTIONS OF THE CITT

The functions of CITT will be essentially those of the bodies it will replace:

General economic inquiries at the request of the Government (clause 18).

- Tariff-related inquiries at the request of the Minister of Finance (clause 19).
- At the request of the Government, inquiries relating to the importation of goods and services that might retard or cause injury to domestic production (clause 20).
- Inquiries in response to written complaints by domestic producers that imports are causing or threatening "serious injury" to production in Canada (safeguard action inquiries) (clause 23).
- Inquiries to determine whether imports that are being dumped or subsidized are causing or threatening "material injury" to domestic production of like goods. The procedures for the conduct of such inquiries are established under provisions of the Special Import Measures Act, which remain unaffected by C-110 (except for the substitution of CITT for CIT).
- Appeals from decisions of the Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Customs and Excise regarding classification of imports and the assessment of import and excise duties. These functions are currently carried out by the Tariff Board.

ISSUES

Transitional Arrangements

Clauses 54-57 of the bill provide that the members of the TB, TCB and CIT (the three tribunals to be replaced by the CITT) plus the Secretary of the CIT shall cease to hold office effective on the day the bill comes into force. The bill makes no provision regarding any means of compensation for these dismissed members.

In a brief to the Committee, the Canadian Bar Association (CBA) argued that the absence of explicit provisions about compensation in the bill means that dismissed members will have to rely on the common law or the principles of the Civil Code of Quebec. The brief expressed doubt, however, whether common law or Civil Code principles would extend to provide dismissed tribunal members with any compensation, citing the case of Reilly v. The King (1934) as a source of that doubt. The brief went on to characterize the bill's transitional provisions as unfair and detrimental to the quality and independence of federal tribunals. The dismissal through reorganization of all the members of an independent tribunal is, according to the CBA brief, contrary to well-established Canadian tradition: "Regulatory tradition would suggest that some of the incumbents be given a chance to apply the new legislative policy in good faith, rather than assuming that all of them are incompetent or unwilling to do so."

Anyone not re-appointed, the brief stated, should be compensated fairly for the loss of the remainder of his or her term of appointment.

The Minister of State (Finance), The Hon. Thomas Hockin, was asked to address these concerns when he appeared before the Committee. He said that all members of the tribunals being eliminated by the bill will be considered for appointment to the CITT. New members, however, will also be appointed to the CITT "in order to constitute the new kind of direction and depth of this tribunal". All members not re-appointed will be offered compensation on a case-by-case basis in accordance with the government's "normal compensation practices in such cases".

The Minister agreed to provide these assurances in writing. His letter, addressed to the Chairman of the Committee and dated September 7, reiterates the Government's commitment to deal fairly with Governor in Council appointees whose appointments have been terminated by legislation. In particular, with respect to appointees to the CIT, the TB and the TCB, the letter sets out the following assurances by the Government:

- 1) Each of these appointees will be considered for appointment to the CITT.
- 2) Those not appointed to the CITT will be offered reasonable compensation following individual negotiations.
- 3) Any case where negotiations do not result in agreement will be referred for resolution to the Federal Court, Trial Division.

The full text of the letter is appended to this report.

The Textile and Clothing Industries

The Canadian Textiles Institute (CTI) expressed satisfaction with the performance of TCB, which is mandated to investigate injury complaints filed by textile and clothing firms and make recommendations to the Government for remedial action. They fear that the disappearance of TCB may result in a loss or dilution of the special knowledge and understanding of the textile and clothing sector that the Board has acquired over the years. They fear even more the prospect that the new tribunal will assess "serious injury" to the textile and clothing industries by the same criteria that it will apply to safeguard investigations generally. These are more stringent than the "serious injury" criteria applied by the TCB and more stringent than are required under GATT.

International trade in textiles and clothing is governed by a special set of rule within GATT established under the Arrangement Regarding International Trade in Textiles, more commonly known as the Multifibre Arrangement or MFA. The MFA derogates from regular GATT rules by permitting member countries to negotiate bilateral restraint agreements (import quotas) on textiles and clothing whenever the imports in question are causing "market disruption" in the importing country. The criteria for market disruption are much easier to meet than those under GATT article XIX for normal safeguard action. In particular, they do not require an injury binding at all.

With the abolition of TCB, CTI argued, textile producers will also lose the direct access they now enjoy to an inquiry process governed by the MFA criteria. When the Government initiates an inquiry into the importation of goods that may cause or threaten injury to the domestic textile or clothing industry, it will be able to specify an injury standard that is consistent with the MFA. The industry, however, will not have the same power. Clause 23 of the bill, which provides for industry-initiated safeguard inquiries, does not differentiate between inquiries into the effect of textile and clothing imports and inquiries involving other industries. In the TCI's view, the new tribunal, the CITT, will be bound to apply the same injury test in all inquiries under clause 23, which is to say it will apply the injury test associated with normal safeguard inquiries.

CTI suggested two possible solutions to their problem: a) an amendment to Bill C-110 providing that, when textile and clothing cases are being handled under the provisions of the MFA, they be judged by the criteria of that arrangement; and b) the establishment of a standing reference from the Governor in Council directing the Canadian International Trade Tribunal to deal with injury complaints from textile and clothing producers in accordance with the provisions of the MFA.

The Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute (CAMI), representing the Canadian clothing industry, also expressed support for the use of MFA criteria to deal with textile and clothing imports injurious to domestic production. However, unlike CTI, CAMI is satisfied to leave the bill unamended on the understanding that, as is normal practice today, MFA-related matters will continue to be administered by the Department of External Affairs reporting to a special committee of Cabinet responsible for textile and clothing policy. CITT will be involved in the application of the MFA only when expressly requested to do so under a specific reference from the Minister of Finance.

During his appearance before the Committee, The Hon. Thomas Hockin dealt at length with the implications of the bill for the textile and clothing sector. He rejected vigorously the need expressed by CTI for a formula to allow the textile industry direct access to the CITT for injury inquiries based on MFA criteria. The protection from injurious imports that textile and clothing producers now enjoy is provided mainly through a system of bilateral import restraint agreements between Canada and individual textile and clothing exporting countries. These agreements are negotiated under MFA auspices which require no finding of injury by an independent body.

CITT's role in this bilateral restraint system, the Minister said, will be limited: "The decision to negotiate and the parameters of the negotiations are the responsibility of the Minister of International Trade. The decision to take bilateral action is based primarily on information generated from import monitoring by External Affairs, information on domestic markets and production provided by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, the Textile and Clothing Board and the industry. /// The industry is fully familiar with this fast track for seeking relief and has used it effectively. The function of monitoring and reporting on the state of the Canadian market and Canadian production now carried out by the TCB will be transferred to DRIE along with appropriate resources to carry out the analysis by knowledgeable experts."

In light of the foregoing, the Minister expressed surprise at CTI's proposal to entangle MFA principles in CITT's inquiry procedures, which are designed to deal mainly with non-MFA cases. The Minister also argued that introducing a separate set of rules in CITT's procedures for one industry would be contrary to the basic thrust of the bill, which seeks to amalgamate separate tribunals into one entity so as to create a single process. In addition, an exception for one industry, he said, would set a precedent that other industries might seek to take advantage of. Nevertheless, in response to a request by the Committee, the Minister agreed to meet with the textile industry to determine whether their concern about having to rely on CITT inquiries conducted on non-MFA criteria is a "theoretical abstract concern or whether it is a real concern."

Injury Test in Safeguard Actions

Under provisions of clause 27 of the bill, in a safeguard inquiry the CITT will be required to determine whether the imports that are the subject of the inquiry are being imported in such increased quantities as to be a principal cause of serious injury. A principal cause is defined as "an important cause and not less important than any other cause".

In their submissions to the Committee, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association (CMA) and CAMI opposed enactment of the principal cause standard as being excessively stringent. In their view, "principal cause" is a much higher standard of injury than the test under Article XIX of the GATT, which is that goods are being imported "in such increased quantities and under such conditions as to cause or threaten serious injury to domestic producers". One concern with a stringent injury standard is that it makes it more difficult for Canadian industry to obtain relief from injurious imports. It also robs Canada of a possible bargaining tool in future trade negotiations. As argued by the CMA brief, "a higher injury standard than presently exists in the GATT and current Canadian legislation should be tied to reciprocal concessions by our trading partners".

Finance officials questioned the view that the injury standard in the bill is more stringent than required under Article XIX of GATT. The GATT test, they argued, is a tough one. Precisely how tough the "principal cause" test of the bill is will depend on how the CITT and the courts interpret that test. At any rate, according to the testimony of the officials, the reason for codifying the principal injury test is to give some guidance to the new tribunal in its conduct of safeguard inquiries. In light of the extension to all Canadian producers of the right of direct access to safeguard inquiries, such guidance is important both in order to reduce uncertainty and in order to avoid frivolous safeguard petitions launched chiefly for harassment purposes. The definition of "principal cause" in clause 27(2) of the bill parallels the wording of section 201 of the U.S. Trade Act of 1974, the section dealing with safeguard actions by U.S. trade authorities. The term in section 201 corresponding to "principal cause" is "substantial cause," which is defined as "a cause which is important and not less than any other cause."

GPT Injury Inquiries

In 1974, Canada adopted a General Preferential Tariff (GPT) system under which imports of most industrial products from developing countries are assessed a rate of duty at two-thirds of the Most-Favoured-Nation (MFN) rate, the normal rate of import duty. In 1980, the Minister of Finance established a standing reference (Reference 158) pursuant to section 4(2) of the Tariff Board Act directing the Tariff Board to conduct an inquiry in response to any petition it receives from a Canadian producer complaining that the producer has suffered or may suffer injury as a result of the GPT "where the Board is satisfied that there is a prima facie case of injury". Where an inquiry results in a finding of injury, the Board may recommend safeguard action.

As already noted, Bill C-110 will abolish the Tariff Board, transferring its functions to the new tribunal, the CITT. The bill, like the existing Tariff Board Act, contains no provision giving producers a right of direct access to GPT injury inquiries. The Minister assured the Committee, however, that the Government is committed to maintaining that right, and will issue a new standing reference to the CITT on goods benefiting from the GPT. The standing reference will be made under the authority of section 19 of the bill and its terms will be similar to those of Reference 158 to the Tariff Board.

The Baucus-Danforth Amendment

This amendment refers to section 409(b) of the U.S.-Canada FTA Implementation Act. As drafted, section 409(b) will allow any U.S. industry to petition the U.S. Trade Representative (USTR) to be "identified" if it believes that as a result of the implementation of the FTA or any other future trade agreement the industry is likely a) to face increased competition from subsidized imports and b) to experience a deterioration of its competitive position. At the request of an identified industry, the USTR will be required to initiate fact-finding investigations under existing provisions of U.S. law. Further, the USTR and the Secretary of Commerce will be required to review the information obtained from these investigations and consult with the identified industry to determine whether any countervailing duty or other trade remedy action is appropriate under the circumstances.

The effect of the Baucus-Danforth amendment is to enhance the ability of U.S. producers to launch government-sponsored inquiries into the trade practices of exporters to the U.S. And while the conditions for triggering a trade remedy action are not affected by the amendment, an increased ability to place one's competition under investigation also increases the scope for harassing one's competition. Understandably, therefore, the amendment has generated concerns among Canadian exporters to the U.S., and has given rise to proposals for similar provisions in Canada's trade legislation in order to "level the playing field". It was suggested to the Committee that one way of accomplishing this would be through an appropriate amendment to the provisions of C-110.

The Minister was asked to address this issue when he appeared before the Committee. He took the view that no amendment was necessary because existing statutory provisions already enabled Canada to take action similar to that in the U.S. To clarify the existing process and to underline the Government's had issued a statement of administrative action on this matter. For the benefit of the Committee the Minister read part of the statement into the record. It very closely parallels the process established by the Baucus-Danforth amendment in the U.S.:

"If a Canadian producer believes it is facing increased competition from subsidized imports and that this competition is likely to cause a deterioration in its competitive position, it can raise its concern with the Minister of Finance. He will, following consultations with the Minister for International Trade, forward all reasonable requests to the Canadian Import tribunal for an inquiry. Any decision by the Minister of Finance on forwarding the request does not prejudice or substitute for any action subsequently taken under the Special Import Measures Act, or other trade legislation. The tribunal's reports will be made available to the industry and industry will be able to request annual updates.

"The reports can be used by industry, the Deputy Minister of Revenue Canada and the government in determining the appropriate course of action. For example, industry could use the information in the report in seeking initiation of a countervail investigation. Similarly, the Deputy Minister of Revenue Canada could use the information to determine if it would be appropriate to self-initiate a countervail investigation. The Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs could also consider the report in the context of taking action under section 59(2) of the Customs Tariff. These latter two types of action would only be considered in exceptional circumstances."

CONCLUSION

The bill will amalgamate three separate agencies dealing with import-related matters into one new agency, the CITT. All the witnesses that we heard from expressed themselves in favour of this change which is intended to rationalize the administration of Canadian import policy.

Except for the Canadian Importers Association (CIA), support was also unanimous for the second major provision of the bill, the extension of the right of direct access for safeguard inquiries to all Canadian industries. The CIA expressed concerns that this provision will encourage protectionist tendencies among domestic producers and trade policy makers. Most of our other witnesses not only welcomed this new right of direct access, they also felt that the bill restricted that right too much. In particular, they argued that the injury threshold for safeguard inquiries established by the bill is a much higher standard than is required by Canada's obligations under GATT, making it unnecessarily difficult for Canadian producers to obtain relief from injurious imports.

The Committee supports the right of direct access to safeguard inquiries that the bill provides. While only time will tell how significant a right this will prove to be, for the first time Canadian producers outside the textile and clothing sectors will have an established, transparent and uniform procedure for seeking protection from fairly traded but injurious imports. We recognize at the same time that this right must be appropriately constrained to avoid frivolous petitions which may be damaging to Canadian consumers and risk retaliation from our trading partners. In this context, the constraints to the use of that right provided in the bill appear reasonable to us.

On the whole, it is the Committee's view that the Bill will establish a more efficient administrative structure and a more equitable process for dealing with import-related matters. The concerns identified during our examination of the Bill have been satisfactorily addressed by the undertakings that the Minister gave to the Committee. We therefore report the bill without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

IAN SINCLAIR
Chairman

APPENDIX

Senator Ian D. Sinclair
Chairman, Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce
The Senate of Canada
Ottawa K1A 0A6

Dear Senator Sinclair:

The Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, has been conducting hearings on Bill C-110, An Act to Establish The Canadian International Trade Tribunal.

On Tuesday, August 30, during testimony before the Committee, one of the matters raised was the position of Members of existing Boards whose appointment would be terminated by the enactment of Bill C-110. I was requested to provide undertakings regarding such Members of existing Boards.

Pursuant to such requests, and in accordance with Government policy of fair treatment in such circumstances, the following sets out the Government's assurances and commitments:

- (1) All current appointees to the Tariff Board, the Textile and Clothing Board and the Canadian Import Tribunal, will be considered for appointment to the CITT.

- (2) Any Members of the existing Boards referred to in (1), not appointed to the new CITT, will receive, on a case-by-case basis, an offer of reasonable compensation decided following negotiations with the individual concerned.

- (3) If the negotiations referred to in (2) develop issues not resolved between the former Member of a Board and the Government, the Government will agree in writing that the amount that should be paid to the Member as reasonable compensation be determined by the Federal Court, Trial Division.

Sincerely yours,

Tom Hockin

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Friday, September 9, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

TWENTY-FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-123, An Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, September 7, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comment:

Your Committee has noted that, in the French version of clause 3, the words "le ministre" were omitted from line 6, on page 4, which should read "52.2 ou 52.3, libérer, en tout ou en partie, le ministre,".

Having been so informed the Minister has undertaken "to introduce an appropriate amendment to the legislation to correct the French text at the earliest opportunity."

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY
Chairman

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about the comment the report contains. Clearly, the comment was included after a conversation that Senator Len Marchand had with the committee chairman, Senator Tremblay.

This is not the first time the French version of a bill is incorrect. Instead of correcting the text in committee, instead of reporting back to us from committee with an amendment to correct the French version, they always come back with a comment, with the minister's verbal agreement that the error or omission or whatever will be corrected whenever there is a general revision of legislation in the form of an omnibus bill. I don't think that is satisfactory.

I am told that the English and French versions are now drafted by separate teams at the Department of Justice, on behalf of client departments. I don't see why the French version is always treated like this in legal texts. If the French is deficient, it seems to me the committee has an obligation to correct it in committee instead of seeking guarantees from the minister.

It seems there is a desire to have this bill passed very quickly. I don't think anyone objects to the bill being passed today. But why does the French version get this kind of treatment? Why does French get second-class treatment in legal texts? I object most strenuously.

I say this because the next time it happens I will move a motion to have the bill returned to committee to be duly corrected.

Senator Tremblay: Of course, I don't intend to start a debate on the point raised by Senator Corbin. I simply want to add that it is really exasperating to get to the last stage of a bill and find there are a number of omissions. This tends to happen more often in the French version. This is a shortcoming in what I would call the federal government's housekeeping. I am glad Senator Corbin brought this up, and I feel it is my duty to point it out as well.

However, I think Senator Corbin will agree that we must consider what is at stake in this bill for the target groups, including native people, for whom the bill represents, as Senator Marchand pointed out the other day, another step in the right direction towards self-government. The mistake being obviously a technical error and not an error that would affect the substance of the bill, I think that, in the circumstances and considering what is at stake, we can proceed as though the bill did not contain this omission, on the basis of both the verbal and the written commitment, because in my files I have a letter from the minister containing the commitment mentioned here in the report. In the circumstances, I believe there is agreement to opt for this not altogether elegant solution.

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this might be as good a time as any to raise a point of order that I have wanted to draw to your attention. We have recently—within the last two or three years—developed the habit or tradition of speaking to committee reports on bills that are reported without amendment. I am not laying any complaint against anyone in particular, because I think what has developed here is a very natural procedure. However, rule 78(4) says:

When a committee reports a bill without amendment, such report shall stand adopted without any motion, and the senator in charge of the bill shall move that it be read a third time on a future day.

Our rules as they stand do not seem to contemplate discussing a report without amendment on a bill at the time it is presented. However, we have developed, I think, the salutary and useful practice of adding comments, as in this case, and the logical time to discuss these matters, it seems to me, is at the time the report is received, even though, strictly speaking, the procedure should simply be adoption of and reading, with debate taking place at third reading.

As I remember, this particular practice arose with Senator Hayden, when he was chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. In most cases, it was when the committee had studied some tax legislation—although it may have occurred with other legislation—and particularly when it had received some undertaking from the minister, as in this case. Senator Hayden would ask leave to speak to the report, and some debate, as distinct from third reading debate, would ensue on the report itself even though it had been reported without amendment.

As I say, I think what transpired today and what transpired last night with regard to Senator Sinclair's explanation of a committee report on a bill are very natural. I tend to support things that grow up as tradition, because as a group we have found it useful to do so. In that light, it might be worthwhile to have the Standing Rules and Orders Committee review rule 78(4) in order to give regulatory foundation to what has grown into, I think, a worthwhile practice.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that this matter be referred to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Cochrane, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SIXTY-THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Friday, September 9, 1988

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

SIXTY-THIRD REPORT

Your Committee recommends that for the period from the day Parliament is dissolved until the day of election,

[Senator Frith.]

Senators be entitled to one regular trip per week and 2/12 of their normal entitlements for national trips, (i.e. three trips). Senators' spouses and designated family members, but not staff, may make use of the trips indicated above. For the period after election day, the normal travel entitlements will be resumed.

Respectfully submitted,

ROMÉO LEBLANC
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: When shall this report be taken into consideration, honourable senators?

On motion of Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour), report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Monday next, 12th September, 1988, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doody and I discussed sitting at three o'clock, instead of two o'clock, on Monday because of airline schedules from the west. Although I have not looked at timetables, I have been told by some of my colleagues that, if the sitting commenced at three o'clock instead of two o'clock, it would mean they would not have to leave on Sunday evening. That is why Senator Doody and I asked Senator Phillips if he would move the sitting for three o'clock, instead of two o'clock, on Monday.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PURPOSE OF CREATION

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. On April 1, 1867, the Post Office was the first government department created in this great country of Canada. Can the leader tell me whether this department was created to make money, lose money, break even or provide a service for all Canadians?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I would refer my friend to the speeches made by the Honourable André Ouellet at the time he introduced the bill to create a crown corporation out of Canada Post.

Senator Turner: On September 2 we were notified that postal rates were to be increased by one cent on January 1, 1989. What is the reason for this rise in rates, when in London, Ontario, the pickup boxes have been removed from many places and put in front of corner variety stores? They have been taken away from groups of apartments and now, instead of there being one pickup box in front of a variety store, there are two. Is this the type of service this government considers great for all Canadians?

● (1010)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Trudeau government abolished the Post Office as a department of government and established it as a crown corporation. That being the case, it is for a minister simply to report to Parliament the replies that are given by the President of Canada Post.

Senator Steuart: If Trudeau ever dies, you guys are finished!

Senator Murray: I shall be happy to obtain answers to the honourable senator's questions from the President of Canada Post and convey them to the Senate in due course.

Senator Argue: Just twist his arm!

Senator Turner: Well, honourable minister, this question has been raised many times on open-line shows in London, Ontario. I will notify the people there of the position of this government on the postal service.

Senator Murray: And of its predecessor government, I trust.

TRANSPORT

MORATORIUM ON ABANDONMENT OF RAILWAY LINES— AUTHORITY FOR PROPOSAL—RELATIONSHIP TO NEXT ELECTION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. When I was a member of the Transport Committee studying Bill C-18, respecting national transportation, I raised a number of concerns. I see now that, after permitting, under the regulations and the law, the abandonment of rail lines at the rate of about 4 per cent per year based on the economy of the particular line and not on the economy of the railway company operating it, the railways have decided to abandon, and have abandoned, a number of lines in the Atlantic provinces, and probably in other areas of the country too. In the Atlantic provinces, the governments of P.E.I., Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have expressed their concern that the Government of Canada was able to buy the consent of the Tory government of Newfoundland.

I read yesterday that the Minister of Transport is proposing a moratorium on the abandonment of railway lines for the next six months. Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me under what authority that is proposed and if it has, perhaps, something to do with an election?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to read the remarks which Senator Thériault attributes to my colleague, Mr. Benoît Bouchard, but I shall do so. At the same time, I will ask Mr. Bouchard whether he wishes to expand on the remarks that have been attributed to him.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PROGRAM—PROPRIETY— CESSATION ON DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, it is unusual that we sit at 10 o'clock in the morning, but I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I did not have the pleasure of sitting and listening to all of his speech on Wednesday last on Bill C-130, but I have since read it. He had little to say about the agreement. He had a lot to say about the Liberal Party, about Mr. Turner and about Mr. Trudeau. That is fair game when you know that an election is going to be called in two or three or four or five days. I noticed that he was very strong and heavy on democracy and on fairness and the strength of the people being elected through the democratic system.

Over the past two or three weeks, like many other people, I could not help but read and hear about the tremendous amount of money being spent to urge Canadians to support the Free Trade Agreement—the Mulroney-Reagan agreement. Every time I opened a newspaper or a magazine, or listened to a radio or television report, I heard the same tune. I think that is terrible.

While the government knows that the legislation that puts the agreement into force is still before the Parliament of Canada, and, therefore, that there are no laws in place permitting the enforcement of that agreement, and while it is probable that there will not be such laws in place before an election is called, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate truthfully tell us and the people of Canada that what is being done now by the government, while it may be legal in a technical sense, is proper?

Further, will the leader assure the Senate and the people of Canada that if and when Parliament is dissolved for an election this wasteful spending of taxpayers' dollars will be abandoned until the people of Canada make a decision on this important matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there is ample precedence, as the honourable senator should know, for Canadian governments to carry on public information programs, including paid advertising on policies, programs and legislation, even in advance of their having been passed by the Parliament of Canada.

Secondly, I would remind the honourable senator that the bill in question has now passed, by an overwhelming margin, that House where the elected representatives of the people sit.

PARLIAMENT

LEGISLATIVE ROLE OF SENATE

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Have the Government of Canada and the Leader of the Government in the Senate now decided that the Parliament of Canada is composed constitutionally of only one house?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators. What I have been trying to explain to my friends opposite over the past few days and, indeed, throughout the life of the present Parliament is that the modern conventions governing the conduct of this appointed body—

Senator Frith: You never miss a good chance!

Senator Murray: —are that we debate and deliberate—

Senator Frith: It is appointed under the same Constitution as the members of the House of Commons are elected under.

Senator Murray: I am sorry my honourable friend is sensitive on this point.

The modern conventions—

Senator Frith: It's embarrassing!

Senator Murray: —governing the conduct of this appointed body are that we debate, we deliberate and we draw the attention of the other place—and I suppose indirectly of the Canadian public, while we are not representative of them—to any imperfections—

Senator Molgat: What?!

Senator Frith: You are wrong about the modern Senate.

Senator Murray: —we believe exist in the bill, and then we accede to the wishes of the elected representatives of the people.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on a question of privilege, it is becoming embarrassing to have the Leader of the Government in the Senate apparently so embarrassed by his position under the Constitution as a member of the Senate, an appointed member as provided for in the Constitution.

As he has just said, he has been trying for the past few days, indeed for the life of this Parliament, to remind us of how embarrassed he is by the fact that he is a mere senator.

● (1020)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, on the contrary, I am not at all embarrassed so long as this house—

Senator Frith: —does things the way you want them done!

Senator Murray: —so long as this house respects and honours the conventions that have grown up—

Senator Molgat: Hogwash!

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Murray: —in this Canadian parliamentary democracy—

Senator Frith: They are conventions according to you! Conventions according to Murray!

Senator Sinclair: You're a joker!

Senator Murray: —in this Canadian parliamentary tradition—

Senator Frith: You are wrong on those traditions.

Senator Murray: —in this Canadian parliamentary democracy in the twentieth century. Honourable senators—

Senator Stanbury: Why don't you buy us a big rubber stamp?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators are embarrassing themselves and are bringing this institution into disrepute—

Senator Steuart: We're showing a little life!

Senator Corbin: Do you want to work on Saturday and Sunday too?

Senator Murray: —by conducting themselves as a throwback to the nineteenth century House of Lords, or upper chamber, as representative of the property owners of Canada.

Senator Molgat: Why don't you resign?

Senator Corbin: Resign from cabinet, if you can't take it!

Senator Murray: There is a proper role for this body, even as it exists.

Senator Frith: Some thanks! I don't know, but is he for the Senate?

Senator Murray: That role has evolved in modern times. I ask honourable senators only to respect and to honour that role for an appointed body in Canadian parliamentary democracy in modern times.

Senator Frith: The modern tradition, if you want to take the time of this Parliament, has evolved in such a way that it is now perfectly acceptable for this body to propose amendments, to have those amendments not sent down the back corridors, as they used to be, on the basis of undertakings given by ministers in the other place who would then make the amendments in the House of Commons and never give the Senate any credit for having made any contribution.

Senator Barootes: That's not fair. You want a ribbon for your coat!

Senator Frith: Yes, it does bother me, and I am telling you it was done by our ministers just as much as—in fact, more than—it has been done by the present ministers, who have accepted amendments from the Senate; and the modern tendency and the modern evolution of the role of this chamber has to be looked at in terms of what has been accomplished since 1984 in this chamber.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: And far from bringing any disrepute to the Senate, I believe that the people of this country have never been more conscious of the existence of the Senate and more supportive—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith:—of many of the things that this Senate has done since 1984. That is the modern tradition. The old tradition is the Murray tradition. It is the old, moldy-fig, late-1800s tradition that Senator Murray keeps asking us to follow so that he will not continue to be embarrassed by a Senate that does something.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: The Deputy Leader of the Opposition told the house the other day that he wanted two or three weeks for second reading debate on the measure that we are talking about, Bill C-130; and that would be understandable. He indicates now that they have amendments. Now we are making progress, because I had understood—

Senator Frith: I did not tell you we have amendments.

Senator Murray:—because I had understood that the Liberal Caucus had unanimously decided—

Senator Stanbury: That is not what he said at all!

Senator Frith: I was not talking about amendments.

Senator Murray:—that they were going to block the legislation for the duration of this Parliament. Now there is an indication from Senator Frith that there are amendments.

Senator Argue: You told us we were not to do that!

Senator Barootes: But where was George?

Senator Murray: We are told they have amendments.

Senator Frith: Who said that?

Senator Murray: My honourable friend has just indicated that.

Senator Frith: I talked about the tradition of amendments since 1984.

Senator Murray: Tell me how you can defend the proposition that you should block for the duration of a Parliament a piece of legislation and what kind of precedent that establishes. What will elections mean, then, if the old regime can hang on in the Senate simply by refusing to pass legislation that comes from the elected representatives of the people?

By the way, honourable senators, matters seem to have changed as of this morning. I do not know whether senators have seen the comments of Mr. Raymond Garneau and Mr. Paul Martin, speaking on behalf of Mr. Turner, in this morning's Le Devoir—and we can discuss this later because I want to see who takes the adjournment for the Liberal side—but I take them to constitute a clear signal that Liberal senators can now pass Bill C-130.

THE SENATE

STATUS OF GOVERNMENT LEADER—SENATE REFORM

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, when I decided to ask a few questions this morning I did not expect to get a lesson on constitutional matters. Had I been looking for that, I would have gone to one of our universities and asked a constitutional expert to brief me. I want to pursue further questions based on the speech given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate on Bill C-130. In part of that speech he raised the matter of the political appointments of Mr. Trudeau and went on to say that perhaps Mr. Turner was responsible for six or seven more, that the Senate is made up of a body of political hacks, that it has no right to do this or that, and that senators more resemble people of the eighteenth than the nineteenth century.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No; I believe I said the nineteenth century rather than the twentieth.

Senator Thériault: The nineteenth rather than the twentieth, then. In any event, I wanted to ask him, as a great democrat and as one who lives by his own words—or words that have been written for him—what is he doing here? If he wants to run the government, if he wants to be responsible for the problems between the Government of Canada and the governments of the respective provinces—the Atlantic provinces, especially, because they concern me—why does he not resign from the Senate and get himself elected?

Furthermore, before he was appointed here or, perhaps, after that time, this body, in conjunction with the other place and under the leadership of another government,—

Senator Steuart: A good one!

Senator Thériault:—set up a committee to study Senate reform. That committee travelled across the country, received submissions, listened to representations, deliberated and wrote a report, which was completed shortly before the last election. Four years ago that report recommended an elected Senate. I have not heard one Liberal senator object to that proposal.

Senator Murray: Senator Steuart of Prince Albert objects to it.

Senator Steuart: He didn't hear me!

Senator Thériault: That may be so, but if he did, I did not hear him. It fell upon my wrong ear.

What happened after the election? What happened with all of these great democrats sitting alongside me?

Senator Barootes: We support an elected Senate.

Senator Thériault: Were they elected? Were any of my colleagues seated to my right, seated to my left and seated in front of me elected? Were they members of the NDP? Is that what got them here? Were they members of a labour party? Maybe they arrived here through their political affiliations in a more drastic fashion than had been the case during the previous 15 years under the Trudeau government. He, at least, appointed a number of supporters of their party to this house.

● (1030)

Senator Steuart: A grave mistake, but he did it!

Senator Thériault: Two or three years ago the Minister of Justice presented a bill or a motion in the other place that he was going to do away with us. The Prime Minister said, "Those political hacks! Those has-beens!" Do those "has-beens" include only Liberals? I wonder if some of my friends, who have come here since I have been here, were has-beens.

Senator Steuart: Some of them are never-weres!

Senator Thériault: What happened to Crosbie's and Mulroney's courage concerning the Senate? I can tell you what I think happened. At that time they still had a few friends in my province who wanted to come here.

Senator Steuart: Like 700,000!

Senator Thériault: They must have had a few friends from other places in Canada who wanted to come here, because they landed here.

What hypocrisy from a government that had received a report written by both houses recommending that something be done about this Senate. We are here because of the make-up of this country—the Constitution of this country. We should not use that constitutional right to do something that we feel, and that I feel personally, in the long run will destroy our country.

Senator Murray: That is not what Premier McKenna thinks.

Senator Thériault: I thought I had worked all my life to have a country for my children and my grandchildren to live in. If I had wanted them to live in the United States, I would have done what a lot of my family members had to do; I would have moved down there.

Now we have a government that is preparing a long-term program that will make us the fifty-first state of the United States.

Senator Frith: I think we should do away with 10 o'clock sittings!

Senator Thériault: The Leader of the Government in the Senate has the audacity to tell us that we are from the eighteenth century.

I understand John Crosbie because he has been honest. He fought—

Senator Murray: The Speaker is on his feet!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Our colleague should ask his question.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: On a point of order—

Senator Thériault: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate this question: How could he, in his right mind, make the kind of speech that he made last Wednesday and expect his colleagues in the Senate to have any respect for him?

[Senator Thériault.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is the kind of performance that we have just witnessed that helps make the Senate a caricature of itself for buffoonery.

There are a couple of points I should make about the Senate and about appointments to the Senate from the province of New Brunswick, as well as elsewhere. The Prime Minister of Canada, at Meech Lake, gave up the so-called patronage weapon involved in the Senate. There is a vacancy in New Brunswick now, if I am not mistaken. It will be up to Premier McKenna, the Liberal premier of that province, to submit a list from which the Prime Minister of Canada will choose a senator.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, because the Leader of the Government in the Senate is a member of this government, he does not understand and realize that the Premier of New Brunswick has not yet accepted Meech Lake, and, therefore, still has those kinds of principles that would prevent him from using that paper to appoint someone to the Senate.

Senator Murray: That, of course, will be Mr. McKenna's choice. It is true that, as of now, the Legislature of New Brunswick has not ratified Meech Lake. I am, however, delighted with the unequivocal support that Premier McKenna is giving free trade.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, again do you see how you have to listen carefully to what has been said? The Premier of New Brunswick has not given unequivocal support to free trade. He has given conditional support to free trade—if certain conditions are met, and the last time I heard him, those conditions had not been met.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I would never accuse the Premier of New Brunswick of equivocating, and I am sorry that my honourable friend does so.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PROGRAM—PROPRIETY AND COST

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate how honest and fair the government feels it is to spend over $20 million or $25 million in wasted publicity to point out to the people of Canada the advantages of the agreement. How can the government spend the money of the people of Canada to show them and teach them about the good parts of the agreement, but not spend a penny to tell them that there are some bad parts in that agreement? They have not spent a penny to tell them, "Beware, there are some dangers in it!"

Does the government find it honest and fair to the people of Canada to spend their money by the millions and millions of dollars—we do not know how much; I think it is $30 million. I would ask the government leader to tell us exactly how much it cost for the publicity to point out the advantages of this deal, while not a penny was spent to point out the disadvantages. That is why we want the people to know and decide before we sign this agreement. That is why we want the people to vote on it. I would ask the leader if he finds it fair and honest to spend the people's money that way.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as I indicated a few minutes ago in answer to a question from Senator Thériault, there is more than ample precedent for governments—

Senator Stanbury: What does that have to do with it?

Senator Murray:—spending money on public information programs, including paid advertising, in support of their policies. There is more than ample precedent for that. My honourable friend has been in Parliament, in either of the two houses, for more than 40 years, and I have never known him to complain in the past about this matter.

Senator Denis: You do not have to follow bad precedents. Is the leader afraid to tell us exactly how much it costs?

Senator Murray: No, I am not. I can obtain that information, and will do so and convey it to the Senate.

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator Denis: It is too late.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, there is one question the Leader of the Government has not answered. Will they continue to advertise after the writs are issued?

Senator Murray: On free trade?

Senator Thériault: Yes.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have no idea.

Senator Thériault: Well, I think it is a very important question. Will the minister please inquire and let us know? It is an important issue.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it may be an important issue for the honourable senator, but these matters are governed by the Canada Elections Act. My party and the government respect that act and will be in conformity with it.

Senator Hastings: Call an election!

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.—(Honourable Senator Balfour).

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement is an historic event which represents a fundamental policy decision by the Government of Canada. Debate on the issue has been under way for some time and there are strongly-held views both for and against it. While differences of view are expected and natural in a democratic society, it is most important that our final decision on the agreement as a nation be based on the facts.

The outcome of this national debate is too important for us, for our children and for our grandchildren, simply to decide it on the basis of rhetoric and misinformation. In my remarks today, I will focus on the impact of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement on my province of Saskatchewan, since I believe that this agreement is clearly in the best interests of Saskatchewan citizens and indeed all Canadians.

Canada is a trading nation. More than almost any other industrialized nation, Canada is dependent on trade as an engine of growth and job creation. Trade is a crucial contributor to the Canadian standard of living, and this is even more true for Saskatchewan. Access to foreign markets is critical for Saskatchewan producers. It is also critical for Saskatchewan workers, since one in four jobs in the province depends directly on the vitality of the export sector.

Recent trends in the global trading environment are making the export sector more difficult for Canada and for Saskatchewan. World trade is generally characterized by increasing competition. At the same time as markets have become more competitive, export prices for basic Saskatchewan commodities such as grain, potash, oil and uranium have tended to fall.

Producers have had to try to export more volume at these low prices in order to survive, but market competition has been fierce and global surpluses, often caused by subsidized production by competitors, have driven prices even lower. As countries like the United States and others attempt to shield their own economies from the dislocation caused by the changing trade environment, protectionism has made market access even more difficult.

Because we rely heavily on international trade for our economic prosperity, Canada has consistently pursued a policy of liberalizing trade rules since the end of World War II. A founding member of the GATT, Canada is now engaged in the latest round of GATT negotiations where 95 countries are trying to achieve improvements in progressive global trade liberalization. Despite the benefits of global negotiations under GATT, it is difficult and time-consuming to achieve agreement on rules amongst 95 countries, each with its own unique set of interests. Given the critical importance of the U.S. market to Canadian exporters—75 per cent of total exports in 1986—and an alarming growth in U.S. protectionism, the Government of Canada adopted a complementary second track towards bilateral trade liberalization with the United States. By dealing solely with the United States, it was felt that significant improvements in rules governing bilateral trade could be achieved more quickly.

The decision to pursue a bilateral negotiation with the United States was a significant, positive step for Saskatchewan. The United States is the destination of approximately 40 per cent of all Saskatchewan exports. For certain sectors of the Saskatchewan economy—oil, gas, potash, uranium, livestock/meats and forest products—the United States is the major export market. These are also the sectors in which U.S. protectionism was growing and against which indiscriminate U.S. trade actions were being taken.

During the course of the negotiations, actual or threatened trade actions under existing U.S. trade law, combined with proposed changes in the Omnibus Trade Bill, seriously undermined existing access to the United States market for virtually all major Saskatchewan exports.

The existing or threatened trade actions included: an export tax of 15 per cent on Canadian shipments of softwood lumber to the United States; a 4.4-cents-per-pound countervailing duty against exports of Canadian hogs; a countervailing duty and antidumping duty on steel pipe from IPSCO; a voluntary export restraint agreement limiting Canadian exports of steel to the United States; an antidumping suit against potash; an investigation into export practices of Canada's cattle and beef industries; a U.S. court ruling prohibiting the enrichment by U.S. facilities of imported uranium; a petition to restrict oil imports to the United States based on national security grounds; and the imposition of a $5-per-barrel import fee for crude petroleum.

In addition to trade actions under existing U.S. legislation, the U.S. Congress considered the following actions of consequence to Saskatchewan exports: a threatened extension of the hog countervail duty to processed pork; the imposition of severe financial penalties on U.S. utilities which use more than 37.5 per cent foreign uranium, as well as the introduction of a tax on imports of processed uranium; a proposed amendment to retaliate against Canada's policy of controlling wheat imports as well as a threatened antidumping action against wheat imports from Canada; and a proposed amendment to restrict access to U.S. markets where foreign government practices have increased capacity to produce a good, such as potash, resulting in an excess supply worldwide.

It was clearly in Saskatchewan's interest to have the Government of Canada enter into negotiations with the United States. Having done so, can it be said that the agreement that was negotiated is in Saskatchewan's interest? The answer, I submit, is a definite "yes". This is made abundantly clear from a review of the facts of the agreement.

The agreement calls for all remaining tariffs between the two countries to be removed over ten years. This should not be seen as a radical departure from Canadian trade policy, as Canada has been removing tariffs with the United States over the last 40 years. In the 1960s, 60 per cent of trade between Canada and the United States was tariff-free. In 1985, this increased to 80 per cent of all bilateral trade. The agreement simply says that we must remove the tariffs on the remaining 20 per cent of trade over ten years.

Saskatchewan, and indeed all Canadian consumers, will benefit through lower consumer prices due to the elimination of tariffs. Several studies have estimated this benefit and the consensus view is that each Canadian will save between $200 and $250 per year every year after all tariffs have been removed. This saving is even after the government has offset tariff revenue from other sources. Put another way, the Economic Council of Canada estimates that the consumer price index will be 5.5 per cent lower as a result of free trade. For Saskatchewan families, this will result in savings on food expenditures of between $85 and $130 annually. In addition, the same families can expect to pay, on average, $8,000 less to establish and furnish a new home.

Tariff removal will also affect Saskatchewan businesses. First as consumers of imports for their production process, firms will benefit from lower-priced imports and domestically produced goods. As producers, Saskatchewan businesses will become more competitive in the U.S. market. Faced with increased competition, Saskatchewan firms will improve prices, quality and variety of their products.

● (1050)

Perhaps the most significant positive result of tariff removal will be on the impact of the prospects for economic diversification. As tariffs are eliminated, firms which process or manufacture goods with a high value-added content will be better able to sell products in the United States. The reason for this is that goods with a higher value-added content are currently subject to higher tariff rates. This has made it extremely difficult for firms involved in producing these goods to penetrate and compete in the United States. In fact, the high tariff on processed goods, combined with low or even zero tariffs on unprocessed material, has acted as an incentive for Canada simply to export raw material with all the labour-intensive processing taking place elsewhere.

In Saskatchewan, many sectors producing high value-added goods will benefit from tariff removal. In the forestry industry there is no duty on pulp exported to the United States, but for paper products, which involve further processing, there are tariffs of up to 6 per cent. In the livestock industry, no tariffs exist on live animals shipped to the U.S., but on processed meats the duty is as high as 10 per cent. In the oilseed industry, raw canola shipped to the United States goes at a lower tariff than canola oil. The removal of all tariffs, including the high tariffs on high value-added goods exported to the United States, will reduce the incentive to export raw material. The playing field will now be levelled and decisions on the location of new processing or value-added facilities will now be made strictly according to labour productivity and location. Seen in this light, the agreement and its tariff-free environment is a major cornerstone to the diversification of the economies of Saskatchewan and western Canada.

While it is true that tariff removal will result in adjustments in sectors such as textiles and footwear, wine and light manufacturing, it is equally true that these adjustments will be phased in over the full 10-year period. A typical tariff of 15 per cent means that these industries will have to become more efficient by 1.5 per cent per year for the next 10 years. This is hardly unbearable when compared to the kinds of adjustments the Saskatchewan agricultural, energy and resource sectors had to make during the high-interest-rate period of the early 1980s and, indeed, have to make all the time.

In addition to the elimination of tariffs, the agreement commits both countries to not impose additional barriers to trade. Commitments in this area relate to both import controls and export subsidies and represent significant benefits to Saskatchewan. The agreement commits the two governments to a reduction, but not an elimination, of barriers to investment. Canada will retain its right to review U.S. investments. However, the threshold will be increased from $25 million in 1989 to $250 million in 1992 and thereafter.

Current special federal and provincial rules governing foreign investment in certain sectors will remain. All acquisitions of healthy Canadian-owned energy companies worth over $5 million will continue to be reviewed by Investment Canada. All current provisions regarding foreign investment in the cultural sector, telecommunications sector and publications sector remain. Furthermore, Saskatchewan's policy of placing restrictions on foreign ownership of land will remain in place.

Equally important to Canada is that Canadian investors will be exempt from any future U.S. restrictions on foreign investment.

One of the most publicized aspects of the negotiation of the agreement was the question of bilateral trade rules and dispute settlement. The reason for this, of course, is that the softwood lumber dispute was being played out at the time of the negotiation. While it has fallen from view, it is useful to remember that the dispute-settlement mechanism contained in the agreement represents a considerable improvement in the manner in which disputes between Canada and the United States will be addressed. First, an impartial bi-national panel will review all antidumping and countervail cases to ensure that U.S. and Canadian law was applied correctly. This panel will have the final say and its decisions will be required within a set period of time—less than one-half as long as the current U.S. process.

The agreement also provides for the joint design and implementation of an improved and harmonized set of rules for antidumping and countervail actions. Additionally, the two governments have agreed that changes in antidumping and countervailing duty legislation only apply to each other following consultation and if specifically provided for in the legislation. Either government may ask a bilateral panel to review such changes in light of the purpose of the agreement and GATT obligations.

In summary, the dispute-settlement mechanism in the agreement has distinct advantages over the current situation. It provides a short, predictable time frame that guarantees a faster result than under U.S. trade law. This will permit a more stable and predictable environment in which to make business decisions. A fair and jointly managed bi-national panel review of a dispute means that Canada's interests will now be heard in the determination process. Currently, the U.S. courts alone determine the validity of an action.

Finally, U.S. private sector harassment of Canadian industry through U.S. trade remedy law is less likely because of the presence of the impartial bi-national panel. In this regard many trade experts suggest that, had a bi-national panel review been in place, the recent softwood lumber case would not have been launched. They also suggest that it would have helped the Saskatchewan potash industry in its recent dispute with U.S. producers. It is important to remember that this process is an interim arrangement pending the development of improved and mutually acceptable trade laws. Fairer and more predictable trade rules will create an atmosphere of greater certainty in which to conduct business.

In addition to the benefits I have just outlined that apply generally to all sectors, the agreement also provides a number of benefits to specific sectors of the Saskatchewan economy. The grains and oilseeds sector is affected in a number of ways by the agreement. Canada and the United States have agreed to prohibit export subsidies in bilateral trade. The United States has agreed to eliminate any future import controls. Canada has agreed to eliminate our import controls only when government support levels in the two countries become equal. Canada can require end-user certificates to ensure that imported grain goes directly to processing and does not contaminate Canada's high quality export grains; and both parties agree not to sell agricultural products into the other party's market at less than acquisition cost. As with other goods, all tariffs will be eliminated.

With U.S. tariffs on grains and oilseeds being higher than Canadian tariffs, tariff elimination will generally improve the competitiveness of Canadian grains and oilseeds in the U.S.

market. The possible future elimination of Canadian import licences on wheat, oats and barley is not expected to increase seriously levels of imports of U.S. grains. It is true that the elimination of import controls will make it impossible to maintain the two-price wheat system; however the federal government has already announced a compensation mechanism for producers. The agreement eliminates the Western Grain Transportation Act rate on grain shipments to the United States through western ports. This will not directly affect sales, as most shipments of grains to the U.S. do not normally go through Vancouver. There will be some negative effects on all feeds and canola meal. This loss, however, has to be weighed against the benefits of unrestricted access to U.S. markets and the elimination of tariffs. Contrary to what critics have said, the agreement will not require changes in the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system; nor will it require disclosure of board prices or other commercial information that could benefit competitors.

The livestock sector in Saskatchewan is also a beneficiary under the agreement. Tariffs and U.S. Customs user fees are being eliminated. Each country will exempt the other from the application of meat import laws for beef, veal and sheep. Harmonized technical and health standards and border inspection procedures will be developed to reduce technical differences that interfere with trade. The livestock producers and meat processors of western Canada are among the most vocal supporters of the agreement. Tariff elimination and harmonization of technical standards are expected to provide increased and more secure access to the U.S. market. The Saskatchewan government has identified an increase in export potential for livestock and meat of $25 million by 1995. Mutual exemption for beef from meat import laws will also secure market access and prevent disruption of trade flows. For pork, tariff removal in January 1989 will also result in improved access to the U.S. market.

● (1100)

With respect to energy trade in general, both countries have agreed, with strictly limited exceptions, to prohibit restrictions on imports or exports. This includes quantitative restrictions, taxes and minimum import or export price requirements. Specifically for the uranium sector, the agreement requires that Canada remove the requirements of further processing of uranium before export. The United States has agreed to exempt Canada from any restrictions on foreign uranium under the Atomic Energy Act. National treatment for Saskatchewan uranium in the U.S. market is expected to increase Saskatchewan exports in the medium and long term.

In addition, the new dispute-settlement mechanism and the commitment to produce new trade laws in five to seven years will likely secure market access and minimize the unpredictable use of U.S. trade law. The Saskatchewan government has estimated that the exemption from current U.S. restrictions will increase Saskatchewan's productive capacity by almost 60 per cent by 1995.

As in other sectors, for the oil and gas sector the implementation of the agreement will result in the elimination of tariffs and U.S. Customs user fees. Import restrictions will also be prohibited. The agreement also calls for consultations on any energy regulatory actions that could directly result in discrimination that would be inconsistent with the agreement. Both countries will be allowed to maintain incentives for exploration and development.

To the oil and gas industry the agreement provides security of market access. This will improve exports, improve investor confidence and promote job creation. Without a stable market in the U.S. we will not be able to generate the cash flow the western energy industry needs to develop our abundant conventional and, perhaps more importantly, our non-conventional reserves. The impact of removing existing trade barriers has been estimated at $4 million in additional export to the United States per year by the Saskatchewan government, and the threat of the imposition of a U.S. oil import fee is removed.

Finally, contrary to what critics have said, the agreement does not undermine, in any way, provincial constitutional rights to develop, conserve and manage their resources and, specifically, to control the rate of primary production.

I have touched briefly on a number of sectors that are important to Saskatchewan. Let me summarize the facts.

The uranium industry and its workers will benefit significantly from the agreement. This is particularly important for northern Saskatchewan.

The livestock and meat processing industry in and around communities such as North Battleford, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, will benefit significantly from the agreement.

The oil and gas sector will benefit significantly from the agreement. This is important for Swift Current, Estevan, Kindersley and Lloydminster.

The agreement is good for the grains industry.

Other sectors such as the potash industry around Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Esterhazy, Rocanville and Lanigan; the forestry industry in the Prince Albert-Meadow Lake district; and the high technology and manufacturing industries throughout Saskatchewan will benefit from the agreement as well.

The Department of Finance estimates additional GDP growth of 2.5 per cent by 1993. The Economic Council of Canada estimates additional growth of 2.5 per cent by 1998. This increase in national income, due to consumer benefits and productivity gains, amounts to an additional $12 billion of economic activity. This is the equivalent of $1,800 for every Canadian household, year after year.

In terms of the overall impact of the agreement on Saskatchewan, the Economic Council of Canada estimates that in 1998 Saskatchewan GDP will be higher by 2.7 per cent as a direct result of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. This amounts to an additional $450 million in annual economic activity for the province.

In terms of employment, the gains are similarly impressive. Various studies conclude that Canada can expect net employment gains of between 120,000 and 250,000 under the agreement. For Saskatchewan, this translates into net increases in employment of approximately 8,500 people.

I think, by any measure, these are significant benefits. As the Prime Minister has said, "The Free Trade Agreement with the United States is neither a miracle nor a mirage. It will not make us all wealthy by Christmas nor solve regional disparities by the spring. But it can become the cornerstone for sustained economic growth and the creation of new and better jobs for Canada's youth"—and, I add, for the youth of Saskatchewan.

These, honourable senators, are some of the implications, as I see them, of this agreement as it will affect Saskatchewan.

In conclusion, I should like to quote from a recent speech given by Dr. Richard Lipsey, who is becoming somewhat notorious in this place, on the subject of the great free trade debate and the Canadian identity. Dr. Lipsey said:

So when you come to make up your minds on the great free trade debate, listen to all of the arguments and try to assess the evidence. Some of you will then decide you are for and some of you will decide you are against the proposal. That is your privilege as citizens of a democracy. But base your decision on how you appraise the real economic and political issues that are at stake, not on the mistaken belief that the Canadian identity, of which we are justifiably proud, is so skin-deep that it will not survive eating one more McDonald's hamburger, watching one more installment of "Dallas", or doing 5 per cent more trade with the Americans.

Do your country, and your national identity, the honour it deserves by understanding that it is more than skin-deep; that not only is it admirable, it is also deeply rooted, and that whatever sensible or misguided policies we follow in the future, our identity as Canadians will be around for quite some time.

Honourable senators, I urge speedy passage of this legislation so that Saskatchewan business, Saskatchewan workers and, above all, Saskatchewan families can enjoy the benefits of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Good speech: too bad it was given in a bad cause!

Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Hastings, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I rise simply for the sake of saying that it is much to be regretted that the Liberal majority in this chamber could not have put up a single speaker today in this debate, and to ask that, when their next speaker takes the floor, he shed some light on the present position of the Liberal Party on this matter.

Senator Corbin: Speech!

Senator Murray: A motion has been made to adjourn the debate and I am asking that the next speaker for the Liberal Party clarify the position of his party on this matter in view of the very important article on the front page of Le Devoir this morning in which, clearly, Mr. Turner is changing his position. I will leave it to honourable senators to read it, because it is a long article. In part, it says:

[Translation]

The Leader of the Liberal Party has discreetly adjusted his speech on free trade, to the point that he will no longer refer to "tearing up the Mulroney-Reagan agreement", and that he will promise to go to Washington "right after the election", to offer the new leader in the White House more comprehensive talks on international trade.

[English]

The article is based on interviews, obviously, with Mr. Paul Martin, Jr., an important Liberal candidate, we are told, in Quebec, and Mr. Raymond Garneau, who, as we all know, is the Quebec lieutenant of Mr. Turner in the House of Commons. It is indicated that a news conference will be held by Mr. Turner to confirm this change in his position, after which he will go to Montreal to make a formal speech outlining this change in position. In summary, they say:

[Translation]

John Turner, who surprised his own militants with his violent reaction—

[English]

By this they mean the threat to tear up the agreement. The article goes on to state:

[Translation]

—is now getting closer to the position taken by Paul Martin; he is going after the same thing as Brian Mulroney, but the fast track approach, which gave Canadian negotiators only a few months, obliged the Mulroney Government to dump all its cards. Turner, if he is elected, will make a proposal to the U.S. Administration to negotiate without haste, but perhaps faster, in the final instance, than the Conservatives since the present agreement provides for a seven-year period to define critical concepts such as subsidies, dumping and fair trade.

[English]

It is an extremely important article. As I read it, the position—

• (1110)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order.

Senator Frith: Point of order!

Senator Murray: As I read it,—

Senator Corbin: I rise on a point of order. The honourable Leader of the Government has already given his speech on free trade—

Senator Murray: It is now completely open to honourable senators opposite to pass this bill.

Senator Corbin: The honourable Leader of the Government will have an opportunity to close the debate. He is now making a second speech on free trade. He is not entitled to do that.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Order, please!

Senator Murray: I am simply asking that the next speaker on behalf of the Liberal Party clarify the position of the party now in view of the apparently new position of Mr. Turner, because it has very considerable relevance for us and particularly for my friends opposite. This article would seem to indicate to me that the way is now open for honourable senators to pass this bill.

Senator Denis: You don't talk about the change of Mulroney!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, at the moment we have eight speakers on our list.

Senator Murray: Eight?

Senator Frith: Eight.

Senator Murray: Excellent!

Senator Frith: The next speaker will be Senator Hastings.

Senator Barootes: Today?

Senator Frith: Even when we have a short day like this, can't we pay attention? I just moved the adjournment of the debate in Senator Hastings' name. That does not mean today. Moving the adjournment of the debate, Senator Barootes—if I can speak more clearly than ever—means adjournment until the next sitting. It does not mean until today.

Honourable senators, I make no undertaking on behalf of any of the speakers on this side as to what they will say or what they will explain. I can undertake that Mr. Michel Vastel is not on our list. The article—and I have also read it—does not lead me to the conclusions, or even to the questions or possibilities, to which it has led the Leader of the Government.

Senator Murray: So it is still Mr. Turner's policy to tear it up?

Senator Frith: Since the debate that we are dealing with, which was the basis for the Leader of the Government's question, is a debate in the Canadian Senate, with both sides taking part, the position of the Liberal majority in the Senate on this order, and on this bill, will appear in the course of the interventions made by these and any additional speakers. I am pleased to think that at least Mr. Vastel has so stimulated the interest of the Leader of the Government in this matter that perhaps he will be courteous enough to sit and wait and listen to the interventions of these speakers.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, one may therefore assume that the definitive position of the Liberal majority in the Senate on this bill has not yet been articulated in this place.

Senator Steuart: You can assume anything you want. When is the next election?

Senator Frith: One can assume whatever one wants. That is not what I assume and that is not what we assume, but it is certainly within your privilege to—

[Senator Corbin.]

Senator Murray: It's coming!

Senator Frith: What is?

Senator Murray: Your position. It is evolving. We are going to hear about it in the debate.

Senator Frith: Honourable senator, I say to you and to all the other honourable senators: Stay tuned!

Senator Murray: We will; we will.

Senator Frith: Please do yourself a favour and stay here for the debate.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat moved the second reading of Bill S-20, to amend the Constitution Act, 1867 (Speaker of the Senate).

He said: Honourable senators, I should like at the outset to make it very clear that my proposal has nothing to do with the present incumbent in the Chair or the regular Speaker or, for that matter, any previous Speakers. It is not a reflection on the quality of Speakers that we have had in the Senate. It is an attempt to proceed with Senate reform. It is an important element of Senate reform and one that can be done by Parliament itself, by both chambers, without reference to the provinces. It is an internal matter that does not require constitutional change. It is simply a change in our laws.

At present, the selection of Speaker is controlled by section 34 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which reads as follows:

The Governor General may from time to time, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, appoint a Senator to be Speaker of the Senate, and may remove him and appoint another in his Stead.

That is it. That is the procedure that has been followed since Confederation. I think we have now come to the point in the process of Senate reform where we should be looking at this kind of change.

This morning, a comment was made regarding the report of the special joint committee. In that report we, in fact, recommended those things. We realized that some changes were outside the power of Parliament and would require constitutional change. We felt that, while the government should proceed with them, we could not do this all by ourselves.

We did, on the other hand, recommend a number of changes that could be made now. In fact, that is exactly the way the chapter was headed: "Reforms That Should Be Made Now." One of them in the internal organization of the Senate was that we should have the right to elect our Speaker in this chamber. I believe that that would have some substantial advantage with respect to the work of the chamber itself. Having sat in the Chair occasionally myself, as the present Acting Speaker is doing, I know how difficult it is, because, by our own choice, the Speaker has no power in this chamber. So long as the Speaker is appointed by someone other than ourselves, I do not visualize that aspect changing. Senators and the Senate as a whole will not accept that an outside-appointed individual should have powers over this body; that is why we have, over the years, insisted on controlling ourselves, on controlling the Senate. However, it does mean that it is extremely difficult at times.

We saw this morning a few instances where we were clearly out of order. If we are happy to have it that way we can, of course, continue in that fashion, but I can visualize, under other circumstances, with different people here, that it could become an impossibility and that this house simply could not function. In my opinion it would be helpful if the Speaker were our choice, for we could then determine what powers we wanted to give that Speaker.

● (1120)

So far as the management of the Senate is concerned—and now I am speaking of the overall Senate, not the Senate chamber, but the business management of the Senate—I think it would also be of advantage to have an elected Speaker.

The Speaker of the House of Commons is actually the executive head of that body. The Speaker consults, quite obviously, but there is clearly a head. The Senate operates with a committee as the executive head. My experience is that running something by committee is an extremely difficult and frustrating endeavour. I think we would be better off with a Speaker whom we would empower to head the business end of the Senate so that there was a clear cut channel of authority in the system.

That is the basis of my proposal. It seems to me that, in view of the changes that have been made in the House of Commons, in that they now proceed to election of their Speaker by secret ballot—and I think that is working out very well for them—they would look upon this proposal as worthwhile. If it is passed by this chamber, it should be accepted readily by the House of Commons as a step forward in the reform of the Senate.

Therefore, I urge my honourable colleagues to support the bill.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Molgat a question, but before doing so I have a brief preamble.

I want to tell him at the outset that I favour the proposition of election of the Speaker. He indicated that there were some things we could do ourselves while waiting for the famous first Constitutional Conference to deal with Senate reform once the Meech Lake Accord is approved.

Do I understand that implicit in his bill is his undertaking, either as the chairman of the Standing Rules and Orders Committee or in his personal capacity as one who has great influence and respect around here, that he intends to put forward or support the recommendation of the very committee to which he refers, which indicates that, after the election of a Speaker here, "his role as presiding officer be clearly defined in such a way that his duties and responsibilities are analogous to those of the Speaker of the House of Commons"?

I think he has said that. Therefore, may I take it that he is recommending the repeal of the invidious rule 15, which, of course, indicates that a ruling by the Speaker is subject to appeal by the Senate?

Would that necessarily follow as the next step?

Senator Molgat: I certainly think that if we proceed with this we will have to change a number of our rules, because, at the moment, the Speaker has no power. So we would have to establish that.

As far as I am concerned, once we have an elected Speaker, once we have decided who will take the Chair, I certainly would favour giving the Speaker the power to make rulings and not have appeals.

I do not think appeals are necessary once we have an elected Speaker, because, if we do not like what the Speaker does, eventually we can replace the Speaker. I would be quite prepared to see that, once we had an elected Speaker, we would not have the right to appeal.

Having sat in a provincial legislature for a long time as a member of the opposition, I know that the rules are the protection of the minority in a legislature and that appeals against Speakers' rulings can be harmful to minorities in legislatures. So I would certainly favour that position once we have an elected Speaker.

Senator MacDonald: I am wondering whether at this time Senator Molgat's suggestion is a bit quixotic. We all know that the Prime Minister has committed himself, once the Meech Lake Accord is approved, to submitting a proposal calling for an elected Senate. That has been confirmed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate in a speech he gave in Edmonton recently. Negotiations are taking place now amongst provinces. Indeed, Alberta is doing it on its own.

Why now? And what other matters do you think we can implement now in anticipation of that particular conference? Are there any other suggestions besides that of an elected Speaker that Senator Molgat has? I ask that, because it seems this is putting a bandaid on a sick element.

Senator Molgat: I had this in mind much earlier than this, when I was hoping that we would move on the matter of an elected Senate. Honourable senators will recall that shortly after this report was published the Prime Minister of the day wrote to the two joint chairmen saying that the government had accepted the recommendation as the basis for negotiations with the provinces, and that negotiations were going to proceed. However, the election came up and nothing further happened.

I make this proposal now because of the recent difficulty we had with the House of Commons on the question of a money bill. Honourable senators will recall that we decided to split a bill and send it back to the House of Commons. Comments were made at that time in the House of Commons, comments which I thought were out of order. I do not think we should comment on their operations, and I do not expect that they should comment on ours.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Molgat: Because of that difficulty, however—and it is a continuing difficulty, this question of money bills, and what it is that is within our power and what it is that is not—I decided we should move now to see if we could clear up some of these problems. It is within our power to do that. I see no reason why the House of Commons should not accept this. After all, that is the procedure they have, and this would be a beginning to cleaning up some of our problems.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, what my friend is saying would require, of course, an amendment to the Constitution. I think we all recognize that “ce n'est pas pour demain”; as we say, it would take some considerable time. The federal government and the provincial governments are now embarked on a process of ratification of the Meech Lake amendments, after which annual First Ministers' Conferences will ensue, with Senate reform as one of the top items on the agenda.

What Senator Molgat is attempting to correct is a problem that exists in the appointed Senate as presently constituted. The problem is that it appears, if one can accept the word of Senator McElman, Senator Molgat and others, that the Speaker has no real power in the sense of exercising the powers that a presiding officer normally exercises. If that is the case, we should consider how to introduce more order into our proceedings than now exists.

Senator McElman, if he were here, would tell us that we do not vest that authority in any presiding officer, but that points of order, when they are raised, are simply raised as between gentlemen and ladies of the Senate to be talked out, and that it is only when the presiding officer is explicitly asked for a ruling that the presiding officer may give a ruling.

That is a formula for chaos, and chaos is what we have too frequently in this chamber.

● (1130)

The oral Question Period that precedes Orders of the Day in this place is, by any parliamentary standard, an abomination. We saw an example of it this morning in the lengthy speeches made by honourable senators. It does not serve the purpose that an oral Question Period serves in all other parliamentary assemblies that I am familiar with, the purpose of which is to ask short, succinct questions in order to obtain information from the ministry. Instead, we have speeches that should be given in the course of debate being given in an interminable Question Period.

I do not find this personally offensive. I have to be here anyway, and it does not matter what is said. It is within my right to answer or not answer as I see fit; but I do not think the exercise accomplishes much. To correct the situation, we should consider other formulae. The route of obtaining a constitutional amendment is a prolonged one, and not one that is apt to bear fruit in the very near future.

[Senator Molgat.]

I wonder whether the honourable senator, who has had considerable experience in these matters and is now chairman of our Rules Committee, has considered other possibilities. For example, when the Committee of the Whole in the Senate sits, it conducts its business in considerably better order than we do in the chamber during the oral Question Period. Perhaps that is because we choose a chairman for the Committee of the Whole on those occasions, and that chairman acts as a presiding officer is expected to act.

I wonder whether he has considered the possibility, for example, of having a presiding officer for the oral Question Period, or going into Committee of the Whole for that purpose or using some other formula. I am sure there are other methods that would enable us to have an oral Question Period that would be in better parliamentary tradition than the abomination we have now.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has outlined some procedural problems that we have here. I am not a junior senator, but I am not a senior senator. I have been here for approximately 10 or 11 years.

Senator Turner: Middle class!

Senator Frith: Middle class; thank you. I would certainly not characterize any part of the proceedings in the Senate as an abomination, although I agree with Senator Murray that there are problems.

We have to remember that the tradition up to now has been that, when we have problems, we settle them ourselves. We do not have someone settle them for us. I think many of the problems we have can be solved, as they have been in the past, by the Senate itself deciding that it has to do better, rather than handing the authority over to someone else to tell us what it can and cannot do. I think the absence of a strict procedural regime here, or a more loose one, when compared with that of the House of Commons is one of the advantages of the Senate.

There are principles involved here that have been raised by Senator Molgat and Senator Murray and, while I sympathize with many of the objectives of this bill, I think we have to reflect on the important traditions that we might be changing as a result of adopting it. Honourable senators, I move adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bazin, for the second reading of the Bill C-148, An Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Bosa).

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-148, to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development. A number of questions came to mind when I read this bill, and I am sure that Senator Ottenheimer, the sponsor of this bill, in closing the debate on second reading will provide us with the answers to them. Here are some of the questions I should like to put to him.

Given the mandate of the proposed Canadian Centre for Management Development, one might wonder, would the government, rather than set up another "institution", not better avail itself of those services already at hand?

Canadian universities have well-established programs in "public administration" and "public policy" that already perform most, if not all, of the functions proposed for the new centre. Is it possible that much of the research and teaching mandate of the centre will only end up providing unnecessary duplication of what already exists?

Because our universities are already under severe financial restraint and because the centre will be able to "acquire any money, securities or other personal property by gift or bequest", will this new situation divert funds that would otherwise have gone to the support of our universities?

Government departments can already call upon existing expertise in meeting their administrative and program needs. In having the centre "develop and provide training, orientation and development programs for managers in the public sector", are we not only duplicating something to which we already have access in our universities? It is also the purpose of academic institutions to "study and conduct research into the theory and practice of public sector management", and one must again ask why the need for a centre to carry out something that is already being done?

Finally, another objective of the centre is to "encourage a greater awareness in Canada of issues related to public sector management and the process of governance and to involve a broad range of individuals and institutions in the centre's pursuit of excellence in public administration." Does this not sound like the mandate one might expect of a reputable program in public administration?

Is there not a danger that the centre will detract from the already existing programs in public administration at our universities? Might it not have been better had one proceeded in cooperation with our universities and put to good use the interdisciplinary expertise which they can bring to bear on the study of public administration and public policy issues?

Also, rather than have a centre based in Ottawa, one might well ask whether it would not make more sense to avail oneself of the expertise of our various academic institutions, some of which may have particular strengths of their own. A decentralized approach, which would permit government administrators to study in different regions, would give them a perspective on the problems of public policy that they would not otherwise get.

There are valid reasons why the government has proposed the establishment of the Canadian Centre for Management

Studies. We, on this side, would like to have these questions answered. Therefore, we feel this bill needs further scrutiny.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

CONSIDERATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE, ENTITLED "CANADIAN REGULATORY PROCESS FOR PESTICIDES"—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the twelfth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, entitled: "The Canadian Regulatory Process for Pesticides", presented in the Senate on Wednesday, September 7, 1988.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I wish to make a few brief comments about a matter that has been of continuing interest to the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture; namely, pesticides and their use. The report of the Agriculture Committee entitled "Soil at Risk" raised the issue and did so in the context of the necessity to have available good pesticides and the need to use those pesticides properly to ensure that the agricultural sector has the tools necessary to protect against the undue loss of our most precious resource, the soil in which we grow the food that feeds us.

The committee undertook a study on the pricing of pesticides and, since the preparation of that report, the product's specific registration requirements have been changed and that process has been improved somewhat. However, in its recent study, the committee found that the agricultural sector is still operating with a pesticides control act that is really rooted far in the past. Its main concern was whether a particular pesticide would be effective for the use to which it was intended to be put. There was no concern originally about the environmental effects of a pesticide, nor was there concern about the effects on its users. As we all know, that world has changed and we are now extremely concerned about those things. We received a number of recommendations—I will not list them; they are in the report—which indicate that we need to modernize our legislation and make better provision for the review and licensing processes regarding pesticides so as to provide adequately for our protection and to provide to the users of these pesticides the tools they need to address such serious problems as soil erosion.

Honourable senators, this report contains a number of recommendations, but I will not dwell on them at this time. The report will speak for itself; therefore, I will leave my remarks as general as they have been.

What prompted us to embark upon this study was the suspension of the licence to produce the chemical alachlor, marketed under the brand name Lasso and manufactured by Monsanto. When the right to market that product was suspended, that company requested a review, as it was entitled to do under the current legislation. As a result of that review a risk/benefit analysis was conducted by a review board, which recommended to the Minister of Agriculture that the chemical licence be reinstated. On the basis of a study done by the Department of National Health and Welfare, which he was entitled to take into consideration and properly should have, the minister decided not to reinstate the licence.

It turns out that the study by the Department of National Health and Welfare was based upon data and scientific evidence that was different from what was made available to the review committee. It left an unsatisfactory situation, which is described and discussed in some detail in the report. In my opinion, it makes the whole system suspect, and that is what prompted us to write this report.

Two chemical companies were involved, because, while the legislation does not require a risk/benefit analysis, that is in fact what occurs. One of our recommendations was that we should formalize that process. In any event, the result was that another chemical called metolachlor, manufactured by Ciba-Geigy, was also brought into question. All in all, it seems to me that both manufacturers have cause for complaint and concern. I think it might have been in the mind of one of the manufacturers that the Senate committee would, perhaps, undertake its own risk/benefit analysis and pass judgment on the minister's decision. We decided not to do that, because we do not have the necessary scientific capability. In addition, it would simply have added another view to the list of those that had already taken place, and it would not fit into the framework that we hope will, as a result of amendments to the legislation, lead to a more certain process. That is basically the recommendation of the committee.

The House of Commons committee also conducted a study, for the same reasons which prompted ours, and made similar recommendations.

Honourable senators, those are all the remarks I wish to make at this time, except to say that I thank all committee members for their attendance, as well as those other senators who participated in our deliberations. I would be remiss if I did not thank our researchers, Jean-Denis Fréchette, June Dewetering, and, in particular, James Robertson, who assisted with the drafting of the report and the consideration of the legal implications involved. With their help we have produced an excellent report, which will go to the minister involved and which I hope, along with other reports he has received, will prompt early action so that we can put in place a better system to decide whether a pesticide should be licensed and, when one is licensed, whether that licence should be reconsidered or withdrawn. That, honourable senators, concludes my remarks on the report.

On motion of Senator Marshall, for Senator Barootes, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I believe that all remaining orders stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, September 12, 1988, at 3 p.m.

QUESTION PERIOD

ENTREPRISE CAPE BRETON

ARROW LM MANUFACTURING COMPANY—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE—CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES—CALLING OF TENDERS—ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question about Entreprise Cape Breton. I understand that Arrow LM Manufacturing Company received a substantial financial package from Entreprise Cape Breton, and the facility is now under construction in Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia.

Senator Walker: We cannot hear a word you are saying. Will you speak louder, please?

Senator MacEachen: I am speaking in my normal voice. If there is a deficiency, it is in the audio system.

Honourable senators, it so happens that the chairman of the board of directors of Entreprise Cape Breton is the recipient of the main contract for the construction of this facility. I would like to know a number of things. I understand that the Leader of the Government does not have these items at his fingertips, so I will give him notice and hope that he can answer the questions later.

First, are there any established conflict-of-interest guidelines that would govern the relationship between the board of directors, of which Mr. van Zutphen is the chairman, and the contractor, who is also Mr. van Zutphen?

Secondly, were any public tenders called for this particular contract, and is it the policy of the government to have public tenders called for facilities erected by private companies which have been the recipient of substantial financial assistance from the government?

Finally, when the financial package was approved by Entreprise Cape Breton, had the quotations from the contractors to establish the price been in place?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have seen news reports about the particular situation to which the Leader of the Opposition refers. I have asked for a report from my officials. When I receive that report, I will convey to the house the information that the honourable senator seeks.

Senator MacEachen: That is fine.

ILLITERACY

LONG-TERM GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT—ESTABLISHMENT OF MONITORING BODY

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I should like to address a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It concerns the question of illiteracy and the very welcome long-term commitment that was made by the government, through the Prime Minister, in Toronto last week. The very fact that this commitment was made for a period of five years is one of the most welcome signals that could be given to the literacy community across the country, because there will be continuity in the assistance it receives.

I have one question. I ask the minister whether consideration has been given by the government to the establishment of some type of joint parliamentary committee, working group, task force or some similar body that would track this initiative to keep it alive and ensure that the investment ends up at the level where it deserves and is intended to be—that is, in the hands of the people who deal with the issue on the ground level across the country in the literacy community.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not aware that consideration has been given to the establishment of a special parliamentary committee on this matter, but I welcome the suggestion of the honourable senator. I will bring it to the attention of our counterparts in the other place.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN CANADA—DROUGHT CONDITIONS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question. Can the Leader of the Government say how soon there might be an announcement concerning a drought package for western Canada? I read in the press that there is speculation that there may be an announcement of another $1 million or thereabouts. Can the leader tell us when such an announcement about a drought package might be made?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds), Mr. Mayer, to ascertain whether any further announcements on this matter are planned.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM—FINAL PAYMENT

Hon. Hazen Argue: In the same general area, could the Leader of the Government make inquiries and bring us up to date on when the final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Program may be made? A large payment was made earlier this year. I presume that another substantial payment is coming, and I wonder if the leader could find out about what time that might be expected.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I shall do so, honourable senators.

INDIAN ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), for Hon. Ethel Cochrane, moved the third reading of Bill C-123, to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share).

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.—(Honourable Senator Hastings).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at the last sitting I adjourned the debate on this order in Senator Hastings' name. He is unable to be here today, but for today he is pleased to yield to Senator Stanbury.

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, I pause at the beginning to pay tribute to those who have already spoken in this debate. A great deal of detail has been handled already, and, to a large extent, I intend to take that into consideration in my remarks.

Honourable senators, all my life I have known the advantages of free trade: as an economics student studying the history of the economic progress of the western world; as a lawyer observing the benefits of extending trade for the people of Canada; and as a consumer seeing the advantage of the broad range of products made available to raise my family's lifestyle through the expansion of trade.

As a Liberal politician I have applauded successive Liberal governments as they took initiatives and participated in the great post-war effort to liberalize trade in the world through multilateral trade negotiations, which resulted in the signing of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and in the establishment of the organization which we now refer to as GATT.

Trade and the expansion of trade excite me, and free trade certainly does not frighten me. However, when I look at the agreement which Bill C-130 proposes to implement, I can only think of the sponsors, who dubbed the agreement "the Free Trade Agreement" and gave this bill the title: "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America", as perpetrators of a gross misrepresentation to the people of Canada and of a gross distortion of the concept of free trade.

Honourable senators, I know that, like all freedoms, free trade is bound to be hedged about by certain limitations. It is almost inconceivable that one could have complete free trade, any more than one could have free speech without some protection against improper conduct. Countervail and antidumping laws are the limitations on free trade normally accepted, provided that they are based on common definition and reciprocity of rules. If all that we were doing was to reduce tariffs even further between Canada and the United States—as might well have been the case anyway under GATT over the next few years—and agreeing upon common principles to deal with abuses, then I would be pleased to agree that this was a free trade agreement and, while I might find it difficult to satisfy myself that we should enter into such an agreement exclusively with our great neighbour to the south, I would at least agree that the agreement should be called a free trade agreement and the bill should be called a bill to implement a free trade agreement. That is what the Macdonald commission recommended as an interim agreement.

However, the agreement and the bill that are the subject of this debate do not represent free trade in any sense except the reduction of tariffs. We do not even have a common basis for dealing with the contingency trade laws—that is, those dealing with countervail and antidumping. Even since the agreement was signed, the Americans have changed the rules by passing their omnibus trade law, which gives new and internationally unacceptable meaning to words such as "subsidy". Because that bill has just been passed, we do not yet know the full implications of its implementation. We do know that we are not exempt from it. Until some agreement has been reached between our countries to conform our definitions, which then incidentally may be in non-conformity with the definitions of the GATT, we will not even be playing by the same rules, and Congress shows no reluctance to pass additional trade laws from which we will not be exempt.

The more important limitations on free trade in the modern era are the non-tariff barriers, which are as numerous as the ingenuity of non-competitive businessmen can invent. In the United States those are administered by various quasi-judicial, but nevertheless frequently political, agencies whose judgments are based on American law only and, under the FTA, may be appealed to a bilateral panel which must base its decision on whether the American law has been properly applied. However, it can make no more effective judgment than can a panel of GATT, where at least a decision is made on the basis of international rules and by a panel of objective judges drawn from disinterested countries.

If a Canadian businessman persuades his government to appeal to the Canada-U.S. panel, he causes Canada to give up any right to appeal to the international panel under GATT and puts his faith in our ability to persuade a two-party panel, of which both are interested parties, but not necessarily with equal interest, and by which the law of one must be applied.

The whole idea of liberalizing trade is, through negotiation, to chop away at the existing unilateral limitations on free trade as we can find acceptance of general principles by which all parties are willing to live. That is the concept of GATT. We may all be impatient with the speed at which multilateral trade negotiations move, but it has been a recognized principle in GATT that there is no point in chopping away the limitations on free trade until you can get multilateral acceptance of general principles that will commit the trading community to live by a particular rule. The deliberate speed with which the process works gives businesses time to adjust to new situations.

GATT permits its members to enter into bilateral agreements by which the countries involved say that they are satisfied that they can trade with each other in a comprehensive way without many of the limitations that are still effective in the rest of the world. The so-called "Free Trade Agreement" negotiated by the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States is an attempt to move more quickly than the GATT in stripping away those limitations in a manner acceptable to both parties.

Tariff reductions may turn out to be faster than under the GATT, but Canadian tariffs are higher and Canada has more to give up. The elimination of duty drawbacks, for the same reason, is likely to hurt Canadian manufacturers more than American manufacturers. In any event, the exchange rate between our two dollars is much more significant than the tariffs.

There is some improvement over the provisions of GATT in government procurement practices, but, as Professor Wonnacott of the University of Western Ontario says, "compared to what it could have been, it's small change."

There will be some benefit from the harmonization of technical standards, although I must say that in any harmonization process with such a huge partner the probability is that our standards will be the ones that are harmonized out.

Some special consideration is given to agriculture, alcohol, energy and automobiles. There have been and will be a number of speeches dealing in detail with these matters, but my impression is that the impact on Canada of these articles runs from harmless to disastrous.

Why were we interested in negotiating a trade agreement with the United States? In the first place, a couple of years ago it looked as though the Uruguay Round of the GATT negotiations was not going to get off the ground and would be too slow in accomplishing a further liberalization of international trade. Secondly, the Americans appeared to be becoming more and more protectionist. They had huge trade deficits and were examining all sorts of measures for reducing their deficit by restricting the imports of other countries. Thirdly, there was a fear of side-swiping. If the Americans decided that they were mad at Japan, the fear was that they would take action against Japan and that Canada, even though it was really a fair trader with the United States, would be caught in the maelstrom of the conflict. Then I think it is fair to say that the United States, at least sector by sector, if not through the Congress and the administration, set out to intimidate us. Actions were taken which were expensive for our producers to defend. Even if they won, the trade action was repeated and became harassment.

There was fear in the business community in Canada—fear that the multiplying non-tariff barriers in the United States would drive Canadian businesses, individually and perhaps by sector, into bankruptcy. That fear was conveyed to the Canadian government. Although the leaders of the Conservative Party and the government gave assurances before the elections that free trade with the United States was unthinkable, by 1986 the government was so firmly in the hands of the major companies in Canada, both national and transnational, that they were talked into entering these negotiations. A little thought would have demonstrated that these fears were based on a false analysis. Our trading status with our largest trading partner was never that tenuous. However, it was the normal reaction to fear—fear in the business community, fear in the government—and the normal reaction to fear is panic. When, as a result of panic, you make all the wrong moves and lose your bargaining position, then the only course left open, if you are going to get an agreement, is subservience. The federal government, through panic, had disposed of all of its bargaining chips. Without compensation, it gave away FIRA; without compensation, it gave away the National Energy Program. In an embarrassing way it turned Canada into Ireland North and began its supplications, which, predictably, resulted in giving away the store.

If the Free Trade Agreement is that bad, why is big business in favour of it? I know a number of businessmen and I have the highest respect for their judgment in many ways. Quite frankly, many of them have asked me to support this bill. I have told them that, unfortunately from their point of view, I cannot look at the agreement or the bill just from the standpoint of business. I must look at it from the standpoint of the people of Canada and what it will do to our country in the long run.

I am satisfied that many of the businessmen are sincere, but I also know that they have been motivated by the fear that I mentioned earlier—the fear that the Americans will take some vicious step against their industry, as they have in softwood, shakes and shingles, fisheries, steel and so on. Understandably, they look at it from the standpoint of their own company rather than looking at the way it will change the face and nature of Canada. They naturally look at the short term rather than the long term. They have to answer to shareholders now and they may not be the chief executive officers of their companies in ten years.

That short term approach does not inspire patience with the multilateral trade negotiations, which take several years—even though the Uruguay Round is now speeding up and will have a mid-term conference in Montreal in December. Another factor is that a great many of our major companies are owned abroad and the decision to support or to oppose the trade agreement is made at head office, not in Canada.

I also think it is fair to say that, with eminent and important exceptions, Canadian business people have been slow in understanding that there is a much greater world of trade beyond the United States. It has taken a long time to persuade them that they can do business elsewhere, so they have become more and more dependent on their sales in the United States, and I believe that that is not good for Canada.

You may think that I cast these aspersions without thought and without experience. In fact, I do not regard them as aspersions. I regard them as simple statements of fact which most businessmen would recognize. There has been a tremendous change in the attitudes of Canadian business over the last 20 years, but there is still a long way to go.

Twenty years ago, when I took my initial interest in international trade, there was very little business in Canada that was interested in exporting to the world outside North America. Our foreign business activity beyond the United States was limited to some consulting engineers, to some banks and to some insurance companies. Our resource companies simply took orders; they did not go out and sell, and our manufacturing sector was hardly conscious of the developing markets.

In 1968 I was in Colombia, South America, lecturing to a seminar. I asked some of the businessmen in attendance what they bought from Canada. I was told invariably that they had never seen a Canadian businessman.

In 1970 I was in Iran and was shown their growing industrial complex. They spoke warmly of the help the Canadian government was giving them in finding copper in the Elborz Mountains, but their industry was buying nothing from Canada.

In 1971 I accompanied our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Jean-Luc Pépin, to Chicago for an important business speech that he was to make. We visited the Canadian consul general in Chicago. He told us that even in the United States it was impossible to get car parts makers in Canada to expand their plants to participate in the huge after-market sales that were developing in the automotive business. Catherine Swift of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls the trade agreement “a very useful kick in the pants”. The kick is needed even more to get business to go beyond the United States.

In 1971 I spoke to the Minister of Industry of Equador. He said, “We want to develop hydro power. When we think of hydro power we think of Canada and Japan. Every morning I come into my office and find the waiting room full of Japanese businessmen. I haven't seen a Canadian businessman in five years.”

Government attitudes were no better than those of business. In 1973, after the oil crisis began, I was approached by a representative of 12 companies who felt that a market was developing for their services in Iraq. They had approached the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for leadership. Their request was rejected, but they got agreement that, if they could find a leader, the mission would be given status. I agreed to lead the mission and we were given status. In February 1974 I led the first Canadian trade mission to Baghdad. By that summer the Canadian government and other companies had decided that it was a good initiative and I was sent back to Baghdad, heading an official delegation with provincial, business and federal representatives. That was the first Canadian business effort in Iraq.

• (1520)

In 1977 a group of businessmen approached me to see what could be done about trade with Taiwan. Because we did not recognize Taiwan, almost no Canadian exports were going to that country, whereas Taiwan was selling a great many consumer goods to Canada. After clearance from the Canadian government and after briefing by Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs, I visited Taiwan and organized the Canada-Taiwan Trade Council, as a private Canadian business organization. It was almost impossible to get industrial membership and support at that time. That situation has changed and now Canadian exports to Taiwan are approaching $1 billion.

In 1979 14 companies that had been working in the Middle Eastern Arab countries asked me for advice in light of the difficulties into which Mr. Clark had fallen in the Arab world. We formed the Canada-Arab Business Council, which is now a thriving and important council.

Late in 1979, while I was in India, John Hadwen, our High Commissioner, asked me if I could do for India what I had done for Taiwan. Early in 1980 I brought together about 25 Canadian companies interested in doing business in India and we formed the Canada-India Business Council.

At that point the biggest problem for these trade councils was administration. They all needed conferences organized, newsletters prepared, guides on how to do business in various countries and so on. Fortunately, Sam Hughes, the then president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, was persuaded of the need for the chamber to provide an administrative centre for the trade councils with which I had been associated. That service of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has now been developed to serve about 18 regional and bilateral business councils.

In 1983, in consultation with the Canadian East European Trade Council, I visited Bulgaria, Hungary and Yugoslavia and spoke to officials about improving our mutual trade.

Last year I produced a film for the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, financed half by the Canadian government and half by ten major companies in Canada, called "Canada in Business", because no one had ever produced a film that showed Canada as a sophisticated business community in which foreign businesses could buy, sell, invest, enter into joint ventures and, in general, do anything that they could do elsewhere in the world. That film is now being shown in our foreign posts to visiting trade commissions and by our own missions travelling abroad.

I have recited all those activities to you just to record with you my belief that the health of the business community is essential to democracy, and that the health of the business community in Canada is dependent not only on trade with the United States but on trade with many other markets, which we have been and are still, to a large extent, ignoring.

As a Liberal I believe in the importance of private enterprise. It is the engine that produces the wealth that allows us to operate a civilized society. It operates well and constructively so long as the people of Canada have the instrument of government to ensure that it operates within reasonable limits and accepts its share of social responsibility. Business is wonderful, but in my experience business interest in world exports has required a lot of stimulation, and still does, partly because of comfort with language and business culture in the United States, partly because of ownership and restrictions of transnational companies, and partly because of a certain apathy created by the ease of making acceptable profits merely by trading into the United States.

I do not want to encourage those tendencies. I am concerned that a narrow focus on the United States will discourage our other trading partners and inhibit our own businesses from venturing abroad.

So I say beware of the advice of big businessmen. Most are fine people, but they are naturally oriented to the next quarterly or at least annual statement. I do not question their loyalty to Canada, but, when your boss and your mandate come from abroad, it is relatively easy to rationalize the interests of Canada with the interests of the company. Remember the famous quotation: "What's good for General Motors is good for the United States."

Some of our major companies do not owe allegiance abroad, but have trade relations which are compelling. They are subjected to peer pressure, and if they have been convinced that there could be some economic advantage for their company in the agreement, then it is easy for them to accept the assurances of government, their business organizations and their peers without critical examination of whether there is any benefit for their country. It should be remembered that this is an agreement contracted by a fearful and unpopular government, which was desperate to reach an agreement, any agreement, to blot out the electors' memories of scandalous patronage, corrupt officials, incompetent management and constant flip flops of policy—of which the trade agreement with the United States is one.

I have listened to the discussions in the business organizations. I have suggested that their role should be that of examination of the agreement and objective reporting of the good and bad features. We obviously cannot depend upon this government to provide the slightest objectivity. But, as often occurs, people believe that they must take a position and defend it passionately and without compromise. They are like ostriches hiding their heads in the sands of conviction and abandoning their natural role of pecking the grain from the chaff. The business organizations should have been advising their broad and diverse membership of the advantages and the pitfalls which may await. Unfortunately, instead they have become uncritical partisans in an extremely important national debate.

So what should we do with this bill? Well, I suspect that before we can do anything very much the question will become irrelevant. An election will be called. The bill will die. Depending on the results of the election, either it will be reintroduced in the other place or it will not be. If it is, it will almost certainly be defeated and honourable senators will never see it again. So the question simply inspires an interesting intellectual exercise.

There is no merit in delay. An election is the key. If the people say they have lost faith in the Canada we know—strong, independent, rich and a respectable voice in the councils of the world; if they have decided that they want to abandon the significant role we have played under Liberal governments and the Conservative government of Joe Clark in liberalizing the trade of the world, and replace it with a narrow relationship with a declining economy, in which Canada, the mouse, has no more access or protection than it might well have had under the GATT in the markets of the U.S.A., the elephant, then so be it.

Oh, I know you will say that we will continue to play our role in multilateral trade negotiations, but who in the world do you think will continue to treat Canada any longer as an independent country, with trade interests separate from and sometimes opposed to those of the United States?

If we, the Canadian people, decide not to give up our lifelong determination to treat the United States as our dearest friend and most reliable ally, but nevertheless decide to insist upon maintaining our east-west solidarity, our commitment to equality of regional opportunity, our dedication to the well-being of our people and the self-respect we have gained as an independent voice in the economic councils of the world, then the present government will be replaced by a more worthy government, which will put special effort into GATT negotiations, which will encourage more Canadian businesses to follow the lead of so many excellent Canadian companies into foreign markets beyond the United States, and which will continue to work away at resolving the irritants that always have plagued and always will plague our trade with the United States. They have certainly not been resolved by this agreement.

● (1530)

I have listened with sadness to the threats by my friend John Lafalce, a congressman from Niagara Falls, that if we do not implement this agreement there will be a trade war between us. I realize that that is the very message that is being given to businessmen across the country. "If we don't accept this deal, the Americans will react violently against us"—the dastardly motivation of fear.

There is no evidence whatsoever to support that kind of proposition. The Americans, before now, have failed to implement treaties and agreements that they have made in solemn form with the Government of Canada. It is a degradation of our sovereignty to suggest that we, the people of Canada, cannot make a decision regarding our own interests in a trade agreement. There is nothing sacred about an agreement hammered out by bureaucrats that the Parliament of one of the parties refuses to implement. Would there have been a trade war if Congress had refused to approve it? The trade interests of Canada and the United States are inextricably locked together. It would be nice if we could operate according to the same rules, but, unfortunately, the Americans have said in this agreement that they will not live by common rules; so why should we commit ourselves to that result?

Just a word about the role of the Senate. If the Leader of the Government in the Senate believes that the Senate has no role to play in an issue of this importance to the country and should not interfere with the will of the elected House, then I seriously believe he should resign.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stanbury: If his opinion of the legitimacy of the Senate in our constitutional structure, even after its reaffirmation in the Constitution of 1982 and the Meech Lake Accord of 1987, is so low, I am surprised that he accepted nomination by his friend the Prime Minister to this chamber.

All senators understand the limitations of our power. As a result, we exercise our power in the most responsible way. But to sit here and accept a salary while believing that we are absolutely impotent to serve the people of Canada would be a fraud and a scandal.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stanbury: This is not a partisan comment. I am sure that every one of my colleagues opposite believes that he or she was appointed to this body by the Prime Minister of the day because the Prime Minister knew that there was evident, in him or her, a desire to serve constructively the people of Canada. It is true that we are not disciplined by the reality of elections, but each one of us is disciplined by his own self-respect, his love for his family, his love for his community, his love for his province, his love for Canada and for the venerated constitutional system that has provided us with peace and good government for 121 years. We are disciplined by a desire not to dishonour the duly elected Prime Minister who appointed us in accordance with constitutional law and precedent. I have no intention of dishonouring the memory of Lester B. Pearson.

If, as the Leader of the Government in the Senate suggests and as the Prime Minister has suggested from time to time, our role is to waste our time and that of the country by mulling through badly drafted legislation that comes to us after cursory and sometimes careless processing in the other place and do nothing about it, or if, when we receive a bill of such transcendental importance as Bill C-130, our role is to debate it with no expectation that anything will ever come of our judgment, then he insults each senator on whichever side of the house he or she might sit.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, there are some aspects of the rhetoric of the free trade debate that I should like to draw to your attention, but, if I may, I shall begin these remarks with a few lines from a book of English tales edited by Joseph Jacobs. His story begins this way:

One day, Henny-Penny was picking up corn in the cornyard when—whack!—something hit her upon the head. "Goodness gracious me!" said Henny-Penny. "The sky's a-going to fall. I must go and tell the king."

In the Jacobs book there is no indication of what it was that really struck citizen Penny from above, although there are references in other versions to a raindrop, a hailstone or even an acorn. But in those accounts we are led to believe that the victim was not Henny-Penny at all. It was an individual named Chicken-Licken or even Chicken-Little.

In any event, the unassailable fact is that the bewildered bird set off to tell the king, and, as the Library of Parliament will verify, was subsequently joined in her mission by Ducky-Daddles, Turkey-Lurkey and other citizens of note who had read the news in The Toronto Star. I need not remind my learned colleagues, who are surely familiar with this story, how, along the way, Henny-Penny, Turkey-Lurkey and the others took up with a leader named Foxy-Woxy who led them right into his cave, where—Snap! Chop! and Harrumph!—dinner was served.

I am sure honourable senators would not in these enlightened times abuse their grandchildren with a story of such violence—

Senator Guay: A good Conservative story!

Senator Doyle:—but we in this chamber are surely mature enough to consider this parable of the consequences of shouting, "The sky's a-going to fall!" That is precisely what we have been told about the free trade bill. We have been told that the Canada we know will vanish; that the way this country is governed will never be the same again.

The other night some of us watched two members of the New Democratic Party explaining to a national television audience how Canadian laws to protect the environment would be crushed by the Free Trade Agreement as Canadian manufacturers struggled to remain competitive with their evil American cousins. If the sky is not going to fall, it is to be filled with the noxious fumes of the Free Trade Agreement. We must rush to tell the king!

Should we be surprised at this argument? In a speech given in the other place, the Leader of the New Democratic Party set the tone with his "facts" about the bill. That was a speech in which we might have expected Mr. Broadbent to detail, one by one, the inconsistencies and the imperfections undermining the Free Trade Agreement. After all, no such treaty is perfect. But this is what we heard:

The present Prime Minister has handed over control of our future to the United States of America . . . He is willing to accept that Canada should become the Northern United States . . . This agreement threatens to ruin everything that is different, that is progressive in our country . . .

Is it possible that the Leader of the New Democratic Party truly believes his Henny-Penny words or expects the people of Canada to accept his insinuation that the leader and more than 200 elected Conservative members of the government have deliberately and wickedly conspired to bring their country down? Or does he invest in hyperbole—the big accusation—to cloak the absence of reasoned argument?

● (1540)

It is obvious that Mr. Broadbent had the ear of his would-be partner in government, the Leader of the Opposition. Listen to Mr. Turner in full cry:

Do Canadians want to harmonize our minimum wage with Wyoming's which is $1.60 an hour? Do we want to harmonize our unemployment insurance programs (with a country) where only a quarter of the unemployed are covered? What the government is telling us to do in this trade deal is to close our eyes, sign away our future as Canadians and the right to shape the destiny and direction of our country. It is telling us to give up that which is most vital to us, our sovereignty, our way of life, the way we do things.

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator Doyle: As Mr. Broadbent and Mr. Turner attempt to lead us to the cave of the fox, the cries of what must be told to the king grow louder, grow more hysterical and, may I say, grow more transparent. The purpose is to confuse the people of this country about the intent and the effects of the act. We are cautioned to think of the implications of the Wyoming minimum wage. We are warned that government is risking the ruination of all that is "progressive". Go back, go back, there are dragons where we venture!

Surely in this chamber we do not think so little of the intelligence of the citizens of this country that we would debate this treaty or, worse still, delay this treaty by invoking the perils of the unknown and regurgitating assaults on motive, for starters.

Are we to attempt justification for not dealing with this legislation, as Senator Frith suggested in this chamber ten days ago, because "this government never gave the people an undertaking that it intended to bring forward such important legislation"? Has Senator Frith so soon forgotten the interim report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Canada's International Relations, a committee on which senators of his party outnumbered those from mine and which recommended to the government "that there be immediate bilateral trade discussions with the United States"? That was three years ago, and I have no recollection of Senator Frith or any of his colleagues opposite arguing that in the "exceptional circumstances" the whole proposition should be set aside. Nor did I hear such a protest when the text of the agreement was sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee for its examination.

Where, all those months ago, was the injured, angered, abused Senator Perrault? It was not until June 9 that he asked, "Are we to be supine and silent while this process is continuing?" Then he gave us the answer, "We are not prepared to do that." I shall not quickly forget Senator Perrault's contribution, for he went so far that day as to compare a stand taken by the Honourable John Crosbie against amending a signed treaty to "the kind of talk in the Reichstag of 1930 under 'Uncle Adolf.'"

Then, last Thursday, Senator Gigantès told us:

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, if it passes, is our new country.

Today we heard Senator Stanbury say that the very name of the agreement was gross misrepresentation and gross distortion. He said that we gave away the store in panic. Is that the level of sensible conclusion we are to hear in this debate of delay? Perhaps not.

I would direct your attention to the message we all received from Senator MacEachen, when Senator Murray, on June 7, proposed pre-study of Bill C-130. Senator MacEachen said:

If the bill arrives at the end of August or mid-August, then of course we will be in a position to take the bill, give it second reading and have it examined in committee.

Senator Frith, replying to Senator Kelly, improved the atmosphere with a reference to Sir John A. Macdonald, whose wisdom at the time of Confederation has so often been recalled on both sides of this chamber. Sir John once allowed that the Senate might be called upon to postpone legislation. Convention has not supported or sustained that practice. But the recollection opens the door to me to remind the Senate once again what Sir John's great Liberal adversary, Senator George Brown, had to say about free trade when he was this country's chief negotiator in 1875.

Senator Frith: And your patron saint.

Senator Doyle: Senator Brown, I remind Senator Frith, said:

I feel that in dealing with this matter before the Senate, I shall be sustained by the honourable gentlemen who compose this body in taking an enlarged view of the whole question, in leaving aside many frivolous criticisms that have been made by political partisans, and in contending that because a commercial treaty is very advantageous for one party it does not follow that it may not be equally good for the other. It is very easy to fancy things that might advantageously have been included or omitted in any such arrangement, but it must always be borne in mind that when two parties sit down to make a bargain the result arrived at cannot be what each desires to obtain, but what both will consent to. The merit or demerit of every such compact must therefore be tested by looking at its bearings as a whole and not by minute dissection of minor points . . . We are all alike concerned in the prosperity of our foreign commerce and in securing good relations with our powerful neighbours and to those ends we should all heartily contribute, whatever party may be in power.

George Brown, whose role as a Father of Confederation is marked by a statue on this Hill, devoted more than a year of his life to the Reciprocity Negotiations, which included canals and inland waterways, discovery of resources, protection and stocking of fisheries—far more than the exchange of goods. But nearly 60 years were to elapse before the true realization of Brown's dream began to unfold.

In the time between 1935 and the present, bilateral agreements with the United States and tariff reductions through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade have removed about 75 per cent of existing trade barriers between our two countries. Yet Canada this day has a secure market of only 25 million people. The U.S. market, as government leader Lowell Murray pointed out, is in excess of 240 million people. The combined market of the European Community and the European Free Trade Association is 360 million people. The Japanese domestic market is 120 million people. What future awaits if we cannot secure access to at least 100 million people?

● (1550)

Senator Frith: Who knows? We have not secured it yet!

Senator Guay: You're still dreaming!

Senator Doyle: Perhaps a better question, Senator Guay, is—

Senator Gigantès: Will the senator allow a question?

Senator Doyle: —is why, after years of experience and mutual prosperity, are the countries of the European Common Market widening their horizons for greater solidarity and enhanced opportunity? Surely not because—

Senator Gigantès: Will you allow a question, Senator?

Senator Doyle: In due time. I waited for two hours to question you last Thursday, Senator; could you give me just a moment or two?

Senator Gigantès: Certainly, sir. You were much more patient than many of your colleagues.

Senator Flynn: It seemed longer to some of us!

An Hon. Senator: You distracted him!

Senator Doyle: I was asking why, after years of experience and mutual prosperity, the countries of the European Common Market are widening their horizons for greater solidarity and enhanced opportunity. I was about to add that surely it is not because of diminution of sovereignty, loss of identity or dilution of cultural diversity.

In the debate in the other place, the Prime Minister said this:

[Senator Doyle.]

By endorsing the Free Trade Agreement, we say yes to free trade; yes to jobs for our youth and yes to a more prosperous future for Canada. We say yes to the great hopes and dreams of what this splendid nation can genuinely provide to our children, to the cause of freedom and to prosperity around the world.

Senator Frith: One of the United States' greatest states is what we will be.

Senator Doyle: That is a ringing declaration by the Prime Minister and one to which I subscribe. But the Prime Minister does not call the agreement the beginning of a new Canada or the panacea for all our troubles. He leaves the hyperbole to his detractors.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doyle: He leaves it to Henny-Penny—

An Hon. Senator: We can take a joke!

Senator Doyle: —and her flock.

Senator Frith: Understatement is one of the Prime Minister's greatest attributes. He never indulges in hyperbole.

Senator Doyle: I have always had difficulty when, right over the last word, I get another word from Senator Frith, but it is a remarkable and admirable debating technique.

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator Doyle: The Prime Minister leaves the hyperbole to his detractors. He leaves it to Henny-Penny and her flock. It is enough to say that the difference in our existing trade relationship and the one in which our larger access is to be assured is of vital importance to those who think in terms of trade increasingly done on a world basis.

Our partners in GATT know this and hail our entry into this new association with our neighbour. Even the opposition, which champions GATT while denying its rulings, knows this. Mr. Turner and Mr. Broadbent know that we have not gone an irretrievable distance. Either country can cancel on six months' notice if the agreement fails to provide what Senator Brown called "ample equivalents for all we sought to obtain".

There are voices of reason to be heard in the debate over free trade. Voices that perhaps have not been heard by my good friend Senator Gigantès, who has been unable to hear very well since that acorn landed on his head.

Would it interrupt his outrage were I to quote just a few of those in the Liberal Party who have felt compelled to state their case?

First, I shall quote Robert Bourassa, Premier of Quebec, who said:

We are not talking about the sovereignty of Canada. We are not even talking about a customs union. We are talking about enlarging trade between Canada and the U.S. How could you seriously say that Canadian sovereignty is at stake when we want to protect Canadian markets in the U.S.

May I quote Allison DeLong, member of the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly—need I say, Liberal member? She said:

This government must make every effort to ensure that New Brunswickers are prepared to accept the challenges free trade will bring; we cannot allow them to cringe or shrink from the opportunities it offers.

May I quote Milton Harris, president of Harris Steel and former chairman of the Liberal National Executive Finance Committee? He said:

After four intensive years of fighting off protectionist forces in the American steel industry, I was appalled to watch a TV replay of John Turner figuratively tearing up the agreement. Anyone who understands the real world today knows that the status quo in the U.S. is buffeted on all sides by waves of protectionist sentiment.

May I quote Don Johnston, Independent Liberal and former Trudeau cabinet minister?

Senator McElman: He doesn't know much about finance either!

Senator Doyle: He said:

If you want to protect cultural institutions, you do so through bilateral agreement with the United States... (Free Trade) is absolutely vital to Canada's economic health.

May I quote Donald Macdonald, High Commissioner to the United Kingdom, chairman of the royal commission on the economy and Trudeau cabinet minister? He said:

Can you imagine Broadbent going down to Washington and saying: "Mr. President, I just tore up our trade agreement." He'd just say, "That's a coincidence, Mr. Broadbent, we just tore up the Auto Pact." What would the Member for Oshawa say then?

May I quote Gerald Regan, former premier of Nova Scotia and former Trudeau cabinet minister? He said:

A good free trade agreement can be the most effective regional development plan this country could have. I believe the greatest assurance of protection of our sovereignty, of our culture, is the maintenance of a strong economy, and free trade with the greatest nation on earth gives us an opportunity to strengthen our economy that any other country on earth would give their eye teeth to have.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Doyle: Honourable senators, I ask your attention for just one more of a long list of men and women who have given careful thought to the Free Trade Agreement and found sensible things to say about it. I will, only briefly, quote the man who you will agree knows more about the treaty that we would implement than any other person on Parliament Hill. I quote the former chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Senate, George van Roggen.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Steuart: Where is George?

Senator Frith: He knows more about what? What did you say?

Senator Steuart: He's been in hiding ever since!

Senator Frith: Did you say that he knows more about the agreement or more about the subject than anyone else? I want to hear what you said.

Senator Doyle: Who knows more about the agreement? I challenge anyone who has spent the time that he has spent—

Senator Frith: On Parliament Hill?

Senator Doyle:—in the last six months studying the text of that agreement.

Senator Frith: He certainly knows more than Mr. Crosbie!

Senator Doyle: Senator Frith, if you wish to challenge him, it is up to you. This is what Senator van Roggen had to say:

● (1600)

While I was chairman of the committee, I heard the views of hundreds of Canadians across the country on the Free Trade Agreement. I found most Canadians believe the agreement will bring economic benefits to Canada, that it will give our exporters better access to the large U.S. market, open new opportunities for employment and bring down prices for consumer and other goods.

Senator van Roggen, in his article in the Financial Post, went on to say:

It is a pity that what is essentially an economic agreement has been so distorted by its critics.

Honourable senators, it has been my purpose this afternoon to separate the voices of reason from the distortion of critics. It is a sad fact to me that the worst of the rhetoric in this national debate has had its widest and most concentrated distribution in my home province, Ontario.

Let me speak very briefly about Ontario. In 1966 that province's exports totalled $3.7 billion. Of that, $2.6 billion, or 72 per cent, was in trade with the United States. In 1986 Ontario exports stood at $60.5 billion. Of that amount, $54.6 billion, or 90 per cent, went to the United States. Surely the sin of prosperity has not ruined my native province, destroyed its independence, sapped its cultural or political identity.

Is it wrong to wish some of these good times for the rest of the country? Is it right that this chamber should risk its own credibility and shuck its conventional constitutional purpose just to cry, "Henny-Penny, the sky is falling"?

This time, honourable senators—

Senator LeBlanc: Sounds like the Globe and Mail.

Senator Doyle: This time, honourable senators, you have an option. Let the elected representatives of the people decide.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Flynn: Will you speak tomorrow?

Senator MacEachen: Yes, I shall speak tomorrow, Senator Flynn.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Tickets for the gallery are very scarce!

Senator MacEachen: Senator Flynn, will you be here?

Senator Flynn: I certainly will be here. In fact, I came back today to listen to you.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Ottenheimer, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bazin, for the second reading of the Bill C-148, An Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand in the name of Senator Pitfield.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Pitfield.

PRIVATE BILL

GRENVILLE AGGREGATE SPECIALTIES LIMITED—SECOND READING

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc moved the second reading of Bill S-21, to revive Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the revival of a company known as Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited and for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act. While this may not be a frequent occurrence, I am told that such problems occasionally arise. A revival with retroactive effect is required because the corporation has been carrying on business notwithstanding the fact that, unknown to its directors and officers, it was dissolved by the operation of the law for non-filing of annual returns.

The sole shareholder of the company, without appreciating the legal status of the company, recently entered into certain agreements for the sale of the shares of the company. The purchaser's interest in the shares is premised on the assets registered in the name of the company and believed by all parties to be owned by the company. Obviously, by reason of the foregoing, these transactions cannot be proceeded with.

The company was incorporated on December 14, 1964, under what was then known as the Companies Act, a federal statute. It continued under the Canada Corporations Act; then, in 1967, because it had failed to file its annual returns, the company was listed in the Canada Gazette of June 17, 1967, indicating that, if it did not attend to the three years' filings, it would be struck off the rolls. The company did not comply, and subsequently, on June 22, 1968, a notice appeared in the Canada Gazette stating that, pursuant to subsection 125(12) of the Canada Corporations Act, Grenville Aggregate Specialties Limited was no longer in existence.

This company has carried on business with the directors not knowing that it was no longer a legal entity, and I understand, from the information with which I have been furnished by the solicitors for the company, the company proceeded and carried on business on a day-to-day basis in a very ordinary way, as if it were a validly incorporated company.

From the date of its incorporation in 1964 to the present time the company has paid property tax and income tax, oblivious to the fact that it had been dissolved. As a result of the transaction entered into for the sale of shares of the company, the solicitor and others retained to act on behalf of the vendor, in the course of reviewing corporate records, became aware that the company was no longer legally in existence.

I have been assured by the company's solicitor that no person or corporation would be adversely affected by the passage of this bill. In fact, there are other parties who, along with the shareholder of Grenville, have a material interest in the completion of the sale transaction and who will be adversely affected in the event that this bill does not pass. I assume that the principal shareholder is quite prepared to appear before a committee of the Senate. At any rate, the solicitor is quite prepared to do so.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I see no reason to delay this bill. It sounds completely reasonable. I suggest that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs for examination.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc: Honourable senators, I am told that under rule 95 of the Rules of the Senate it would normally take one week for the appropriate committee to meet and study a private bill. Given the fact that we may be heading for dissolution, would honourable senators allow the waiving of rule 95 so that this bill could go forward for immediate examination?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): By referral to which committee?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I am sorry; is it the intention of this chamber to refer this bill to a committee other than the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs?

Senator LeBlanc: No.

Senator Doody: Or is it your intention not to refer the bill to committee at all?

Senator Frith: Yes, he does intend to, but under rule 95 of the Rules of the Senate the committee cannot consider the bill, which is a private bill, for a week.

• (1610)

Senator Doody: I am sorry; I misunderstood the honourable senator. I apologize.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure, notwithstanding rule 95, that we refer this bill to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

ROYAL ASSENT BILL

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips, for the second reading of the Bill S-19, An Act respecting the declaration of royal assent by the Governor General in the Queen's name to bills passed by the Houses of Parliament.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Stand!

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator MacEachen can tell us whether it is his intention to speak to this bill during the current session. I remember his saying upon adjourning the debate that he intended to consult with his caucus colleagues to get some indication of their feeling on the bill. There is some feeling in other circles that we should try to move it forward. Of course, we are at Senator MacEachen's disposal on this matter.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I recall the comments that I made when the second reading motion was put before the Senate. Let me explain the source of my reservations about this bill. First, they are not entirely personal reservations, although I do have personal reservations against removing, not entirely but to a great extent, the ceremony of Royal Assent that I think are solidly based.

Some months ago my counterpart in the House of Commons communicated with me and sought my opinion on a proposal that had been circulated in the House of Commons, to the effect that we revise the Royal Assent procedure. After consultation with the Senate Liberal caucus, I communicated to him that any such move from the House of Commons would not receive the support of the Senate Liberal caucus. That is where the matter stood at the time, and that is the basis upon which I made my comments when Senator Doody moved second reading.

The difference now, of course, is that the move to revise the Royal Assent ceremony has originated in the Senate. Personally, I would oppose the passage of Bill S-19 at this stage. However, I have said that, if there were a groundswell in the Senate to make this revision, I would not stand in the way. Certainly, so far as I am concerned and based upon my consultations with my colleagues, which may be getting a bit stale, I admit, the bill would not be enthusiastically received.

May I just make one or two comments on the basis of my reservations? Having served in the House of Commons, I have made the journey from that House to the Senate to participate in the Royal Assent ceremony. Sometimes it was very inconvenient to members of the House of Commons to be taken from their normal routine and, indeed, be required to go to a body, which they normally do not praise to the Heavens, in order to have bills receive final approval in the presence of Her Excellency or the Deputy of Her Excellency. The House of Commons was summoned to the Senate frequently, and occasionally in the midst of important business.

However, the ceremony serves a purpose. The House of Commons is made to realize that there are two Houses of Parliament, not one, and that the second House of Parliament is as key in the passing of a bill as the House of Commons. As well, the three elements making up the Parliament of Canada are brought together in the ceremony of Royal Assent.

Senator Frith: And it is the only time they are.

Senator MacEachen: Of course, the monarchy or its representative, the House of Commons and the Senate are the three elements of the Parliament of Canada. Therefore, it seems to me wrong at this stage to obscure by a revision—not a total removal but obscure by a revision—the importance of these three elements.

Now that I am a member of the Senate I am quite prepared to say that it is inconvenient at times for the members of the House of Commons to make the journey, but I did it for 30 years, and anyone who is elected to the House of Commons, before being formally summoned—

Senator Flynn: They never come!

Senator MacEachen: —should be informed that they will bear some burdens, including appearing in the Senate.

Senator Flynn: You didn't come when you were in the House!

Senator MacEachen: I certainly did. I often sat by the Throne in the Senate as the minister representing the government.

Senator Flynn: Oh, yes, sitting by the Throne. I remember now.

Senator MacEachen: Those are my reasons for my reservations: one is constitutional and one is practical. I find it inconsistent with any effort to elevate the importance of the Senate to take action to obscure the role of the Senate in Parliament itself.

What are the arguments for doing away with Royal Assent? It is inconvenient. It is inconvenient to the members of the House of Commons, and I acknowledge that inconvenience, which I and my colleagues shared. It is true that I did not always come. Presumably it is sometimes inconvenient for the Deputy of Her Excellency to come to the chamber. Perhaps those who are summoned to become members of the Supreme Court should be forewarned that one of their burdens will be to come to the Senate occasionally to participate in Royal Assent and that, if that burden is unacceptable, they have the option of not accepting the appointment.

Senator Guay: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: That is not your best argument!

Senator MacEachen: I am saying that it is inconvenient, and it is inconvenient for members of the House of Commons and the Deputy of Her Excellency. Indeed, it is inconvenient for members of the Senate at times to return to the chamber for a Royal Assent that is delayed.

Essentially, then, I have two reasons for opposing this bill. The first is that the three elements of Parliament are brought together in that single ceremony, and for that reason I feel that the ceremony ought to be maintained.

Senator Guay: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: The second is that it is inconsistent with any effort at this stage to improve the standing of the Senate to introduce changes that seem to obscure its role, including its symbolic role, in the political process.

● (1620)

Honourable senators, I did not intend to make these comments. They are totally extemporaneous, but they express my feelings. Perhaps, as I said, that is my conservatism.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Doody: True blue.

Senator Frith: Where is the soap to wash out the mouth?

Senator MacEachen: If senators, in general, want to take this step, I will certainly not stand in the way, but I will argue against it. I will not pressure anyone, even in this party.

I would adjourn the debate for further reflection.

Senator Doody: In anticipation of the groundswell of which the honourable senator spoke, may I ask if he would be willing to yield to other senators who may wish to speak?

Senator MacEachen: Of course.

Senator Frith: To give the groundswell a chance.

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

CONSIDERATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE, ENTITLED "CANADIAN REGULATORY PROCESS FOR PESTICIDES"—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Twelfth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, entitled: "The Canadian Regulatory Process for Pesticides", presented in the Senate on 7th September, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Barootes).

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, I rise to make a few comments on the twelfth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, entitled: "Canadian Regulatory Process for Pesticides". I think we are having some examples of it today.

The decision by the Minister of Agriculture, in February of 1985, to suspend and later to cancel the alachlor licence to sell Lasso caused this inquiry. This chemical was produced by one chemical company in Canada for about 18 years. The consequence of this cancellation was to allow the continuing licensure of another chemical product of similar function and nature known as "metolachlor" or "Dual". This chemical was produced by a separate or second chemical company in Canada and, in effect, gave it a virtual monopoly in this special field of pesticides.

This brought focus to our committee and brought to our attention certain problems with the Pest Control Products Act of Canada, its regulations, its review boards, its appeal mechanisms and the Pest Management Advisory Board.

Subsequently, the inquiries of the Senate committee and the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture both found that the Pest Control Products Act, which had been suitable for so many years, was now, should I say, in the modern sense, anachronistic and in need of revision to improve the process of these investigations, registrations and licensing of pesticides as well as the ongoing monitoring of these products.

Several areas of concern arose during these investigations, and these are important to consider for future amendments or revisions of the act. The first one is—and it was touched upon in our report: all information on a product and alternative products should be made available to any review board. It was found that in the alachlor situation different sets of data were available to the review board as compared with the department and the minister involved. This led to some variation in the information on which a decision was ultimately based.

The second area we touched upon was that the public should be informed of the reasons for a decision to license, register, de-license or de-register a chemical product, so far as feasible without removing the industrial confidentiality, so that such data could not be used by an unauthorized body which could then benefit from the work done by the licence holder.

The third area of concern that became obvious to members of the committee was that at the present time three separate departments of government and three separate ministers are involved in an interlinked way in the registration, licensing and monitoring of pesticides. First, the Department of Agriculture and its minister have the function and desire to increase the productivity and the quality of the products that come from the soil or that are produced in agricultural industries. Second, the Department of the Environment and its minister have the function—a great function as we have discovered in these last few years—to protect the soil and the flora and fauna of our country from any immediate or future deleterious effects of the use of these pesticides. Third, the Department of National Health and Welfare and its minister have the function to ensure that no damage or harmful effects are caused to the health and safety of human beings because of the use of these pesticides.

This results in the involvement of three departments and three ministers. Sometimes such cooperation and integration can lead to confusion, and sometimes decisions fall between these three stools.

Some would believe that the productivity of our agricultural industry and our farmers is paramount. Others believe that precedence should be given to the environment and the protection of the flora, fauna and soil of Canada. Still others believe that it is of paramount importance that decisions be based primarily on the health and safety of human beings.

The committee was unable to agree on which of these three ministers should have the final say and be the final arbiter of the decision, but we all agreed that, no matter how many advisory boards, regulatory boards, review boards or whatever were combined to give input and expertise, the decision of registration or de-registration of pesticides should ultimately have a strong element of political accountability.

Failing to find a unanimous solution to that part of the problem, we therefore satisfied ourselves with the usual Canadian method of compromise by offering two options: one, that the authority for the final decision should be a cabinet minister; the other, that it be cabinet itself. As I say, compromise is perhaps the usual solution which we, as Canadians, find to controversial problems that may have a duality of authorization and precedence.

I congratulate the chairman of our committee, who is not here today, for giving such an excellent address on the overview of the problem as we saw it and handled it. I am particularly pleased with the way he brought out the problems that are arising as a result of the Alachlor Review Board and Canada's Pest Control Products Act.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this matter is considered debated.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SIXTY-THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the sixty-third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (travelling privileges during dissolution), presented in the Senate on Friday, September 9, 1988.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I should just like to make one short clarification. We have received a couple of phone calls, asking if this is an increase in the travel points assigned to senators. I wish to make it clear that it is not. In fact, in the case of "national trips", that is, those from outside one's province to Ottawa, it is a restriction to two-twelfths. In the other case it is, in fact, a once-per-week allocation, which is what exists now. So it does not constitute an aggrandizement or an enlargement. It contains some restrictions.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I believe that all remaining orders stand. I would, of course, be corrected by any honourable senator who wishes to speak to any of these orders. Otherwise, I move that all remaining orders stand.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

"WE GAVE TOO MUCH AND WERE NOT GIVEN ENOUGH"

DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, August 17, 1988:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the subject "we gave too much and were not given enough".

He said: Honourable senators, one or two of you may remember that on July 20, when I first spoke on free trade in the current batch of speeches, I said that I was going to give you a set of propositions and the arguments that supported them. The last proposition was, "We were misled every step of the way." I did not deal with that when I spoke to you last week. That still remains and I shall deal with it in this inquiry.

I move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 13, 1988

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

"THE GLOBAL CHALLENGE AND CANADIAN FEDERALISM"

On Tabling of Documents:

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the other day during debate I had occasion to quote from a speech given by Mr. Gordon Robertson, former Secretary to the Cabinet and Clerk of the Privy Council. Senator Molgat invited me to table the entire speech, which I shall now do. This speech, entitled "The Global Challenge and Canadian Federalism", was delivered by Mr. Robertson, Fellow-in-Residence at the Institute for Research on Public Policy, at the annual conference of the Institute of Public Administration in Canada on September 1, 1988.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Charles Turner, Acting Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Tuesday, September 13, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications has the honour to present its

TWELFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-205, An Act to protect heritage railway stations, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, September 1st, 1988, examined the said Bill and has agreed to report the same without amendment, but with the following comments:

Your Committee has noted that, in the French version of clause 4, on page 2, line 11, it states "sur recommandation du gouverneur en conseil" while the English version reads "on the recommendation of the board".

Your Committee has also noted that, in subsection 7(6) of the French version on page 3, line 42 and on page 4, line 1, it states "la Commission doit soumettre au ministre et au ministre des Transports" while the English version on page 4, lines 1 and 2 reads "the Board shall submit to the Minister".

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES TURNER
Acting Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Turner, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Translation]

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Tuesday, September 13, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-143, An Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, September 8, 1988, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following comment:

Your Committee has expressed its concern with the provision in clause 14 of the Bill whereby the Board of Directors of the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse is only required to meet "at least twice in each year".

In view of the seriousness of the problems the Centre will be called upon to examine, your Committee, wishing that the Board have proper input from its members, strongly encourages the Board to meet more frequently than the minimum number of times per year provided for in this Bill.

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

[English]

Hon. William M. Kelly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

QUESTION PERIOD

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PRESIDENCY—APPOINTMENT TO FILL VACANCY

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate that relates to the presidency of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which office has been vacant for a year.

On several occasions during the past year the Leader of the Government said that the appointment was imminent. Is the appointment any more imminent today than it was six months ago or yesterday?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the answer to that question is in the affirmative. It is now a matter of days rather than weeks.

Senator Graham: Could the Leader of the Government confirm that one, Ernest Boutilier, who is the president of the Sydney Steel Corporation, will be appointed to the presidency of the Cape Breton Development Corporation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot confirm that. I will tell my friend that I do believe my colleague Mr. de Cotret is, or will be shortly, on route to Nova Scotia where, if all goes well, he will make an announcement on that matter.

Senator Frith: Is word that senators are awaiting without also imminent?

Senator Graham: Will the appointment of the chairman of Devo, who is now the acting president, be continued further, or will a new appointment be made to the board of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and will someone be named to succeed Dr. Theresa MacNeil?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must confess that I have absolutely no information on that subject.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ISSUANCE OF LICENCE FOR RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAMS
PROJECT—PROTECTION OF MANITOBA'S INTERESTS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations. My question relates to a decision by the federal government to issue a licence for the Rafferty-Alameda Dams project in Saskatchewan. I will not read the whole story that is in the Winnipeg Free Press of Sunday, September 11, 1988, but here are the pertinent points:

A former senior adviser to federal Environment Minister Tom McMillan has accused Ottawa and Saskatchewan of going along with a political deal that blatantly ignores Manitoba's environmental interests.

Elizabeth May is quoted as saying:

Manitoba's interests have really been shafted. At the point that the licence was granted, they hadn't even begun negotiations with the U.S. in terms of protecting Manitoba.

Mr. Minister, this is a very serious matter for our province. In your capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, have you had a request from the Government of Manitoba to deal with this matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, I have not.

Senator Molgat: Will the minister undertake to protect the interests of a province in this regard which have been completely ignored by both the federal government and its neighbouring province?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the minister will undertake to look into the press clipping that my honourable friend has read into the record and into the authenticity of the conclusions that he has drawn so freely from it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

AVAILABILITY OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS IN OTHER LANGUAGES

Hon. Azellus Denis: I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We have received a memorandum from the Honourable John C. Crosbie dated September 9, 1988, which reads as follows:

The following government publications on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement are now also available in Italian, Chinese, Portuguese and Greek.

I wish to know if, after those nationalities have received those publications, the government intends to have publications made available in Ukrainian, Japanese, German and for all nationalities that exist in Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries on that point. Surely my honourable friend would not take exception to a policy of providing information on an extremely important initiative of the government not only in our two official languages but also in a number of other languages that are spoken as first languages by tens of thousands of Canadians.

Senator Frith: Information would be nice; that is right.

GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PROGRAM—COST

Hon. Azellus Denis: By the way, last week you promised to give us the exact amount of the cost of the publicity regarding free trade. You promised that we would get that. Are you ready to give it to us now, or at least give us the approximate amount? Is it close to $20 million, $25 million or $30 million? I want to know exactly what it is and, especially, if we will get the answer before the election.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall certainly undertake, as I did the other day, to try to obtain that information from my colleague Mr. Crosbie. Whether I can do so prior to the issuance of writs for a general election, I do not know.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Corbin: Give him a call! Use the telephone!

Senator Denis: For your information, we received a letter from Mr. Crosbie asking for the name, number of publications required, and so on. It involves 36 documents all told. I suppose that if each and every one of them was multiplied by $0.5 million or $1 million we would reach that figure, a world record for publicity for one government program.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cheerfully concede that among Canadians there is widespread interest in the Free Trade Agreement. My friend, who once represented, and I suppose still represents, in a way—

An Hon. Senator: Shame!

Senator Murray: —a constituency with a large multicultural population, the city of Montreal, should appreciate the value of the offer that is being made there by the Minister for International Trade.

Senator Denis: I suppose that you do not know anything about those who are against free trade so that you could tell people the pros and cons, which would be the honest and fair thing to do.

Senator Murray: Well, honourable senators, I certainly agree that it would be much better to have an informed and intelligent debate than to have the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition in the other place committed simply to ripping the agreement up.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Frith: Groan, groan!

Senator Steuart: You can't be very partisan!

Senator Frith: Let the record show that some honourable senators groaned.

[Senator Murray.]

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—RETENTION OF DREDGES

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I read in the local newspaper in Prince Edward Island that there is a projected 40 per cent reduction in the Prince Edward Island-based dredges to dredge the lakes, rivers and streams in Prince Edward Island; two of our five dredges are to be mothballed; and the third one is to be shared by New Brunswick. The fishermen at North Lake, Sea Cow Pond, Miminegash, Skinner's Pond and Cove Head are all asking for dredging.

• (1410)

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate appeal to the powers that be to have these dredges maintained on Prince Edward Island for the purpose of dredging these harbours?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall convey my honourable friend's representation to Mr. Benoît Bouchard, the Minister of Transport.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have another question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. From time to time I hear about the intention of this government to have nuclear-powered icebreakers. Also from time to time I hear that we are to have mine sweepers and that this government intends to continue on with the frigate program started by the Liberal government four or five years ago in Saint John, New Brunswick. Has any decision been made by this government to build a merchant marine fleet and to start a merchant marine service manned by Canadians? This would provide work for our young Canadian men and women and would also keep the shipyards busy.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have nothing to announce on that matter today.

TRANSPORT ROUTE CANADA INC.—PAYMENT OF EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In the last two or three days I have received a great many calls from employees of Transport Route Canada Inc. of Toronto. As you know, that company is going out of business and the Teamsters Union and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway and Transport Workers Union are concerned. They tell me that there is a pension fund, although approximately $900,000 has not been paid in, and that no payments have been made to the health and welfare plan by the company since last April and that no payments have been made of union dues since last February. The law of the land apparently instructs these corporations to collect dues for these various purposes and they are supposed to pay the money thus collected into the various funds. Apparently this has not happened, and the employees have requested me to ask you what will happen with respect to the various amounts that are owing to these various organizations and departments.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall review the recital of facts that the honourable senator has just placed on the record and ask my colleague Mr. Bouchard for a report.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—PUBLIC HEARINGS ON IMPACT ON FISHERIES OF PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING—ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, on September 7 of this year I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate about the fixed crossing between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. It was my understanding that the government had received proposals for the construction of such a fixed crossing and that an announcement as to the successful tender was to be made early in September.

My question related to whether or not there would be a public inquiry into the environmental impact of such a fixed crossing. At that time I told honourable senators that fishermen whose livelihood depends upon the condition of the waters in Northumberland Strait have an understandable concern.

Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate have an answer today concerning the plans of the government to hold public hearings? If not, will he give us some assurance that an answer will be given later this week or, in any event, before the dissolution of Parliament?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Again, honourable senators, I do not know, any more than the honourable senator does, when the dissolution of Parliament will come. However, I will certainly undertake to attempt to obtain an answer to his question this week.

Senator Frith: You could perhaps take time to consult Senator Atkins, if you would.

An Hon. Senator: He doesn't know either!

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary to Senator Stewart's question. The federal environmental assessment and review process (EARP) stipulates that the minister of any department undertaking a construction project, or controlling lands on which construction is to take place, must conduct an environmental review. EARP includes a two-stage process. The first stage of the process is a self-evaluation by the department. The second stage of the process is that the project must be referred to the Minister of the Environment for public review by an independent panel appointed by that minister.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Has this matter been referred to the Minister of the Environment for an environmental study, as per the second stage process?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot say off the cuff whether that phase has been commenced, much less completed. I can say for the record—and the honourable senator knows this—that there have been numerous studies and reports within the past couple of years and, indeed, public hearings having to do with the environmental and other impacts of a proposed fixed link between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. However, I am still waiting to find out how my honourable friend voted in the plebiscite.

Senator Guay: That is a secret!

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator wants to find that out, as the Premier of Prince Edward Island said, "You will have to look at my will to find out how I voted", and I am not even putting it in my will.

I should like to know from the Leader of the Government whether the initiating department has decided whether or not further studies are necessary.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of Mr. McInnes, the Minister of Public Works.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

ENTERPRISE CAPE BRETON

ARROW LM MANUFACTURING COMPANY—FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE—CONFLICT-OF-INTEREST GUIDELINES—CALLING OF TENDERS—ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, yesterday the Leader of the Opposition put several questions to me in my capacity as the minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. As these questions concern possible conflict-of-interest matters, I shall read the questions and the brief replies into the record now.

Senator MacEachen's first question was: Are there any established conflict-of-interest guidelines that would govern the relationship between the board of directors of Enterprise Cape Breton, of which Mr. van Zutphen is the chairman, and the contractor, who is also Mr. van Zutphen?

The answer is: Yes. All members of the Enterprise Cape Breton board received on May 12, 1986, a copy of the Conflict-of-interest and Post-Employment Code for Public Office Holders. In addition—

Senator Gigantès: Are they Tories, and can they read?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to the first part of the question is that they are not all Tories.

Senator Gigantès: So some can read.

Senator Murray: If my honourable friend knew anything about the Liberal Party or, indeed, about Cape Breton, he would know that there are several supporters of his party on the board of that organization and they have been very effective and supportive members, as have all their colleagues.

Senator Gigantès: Good!

Senator Murray: So I would—

Senator Gigantès: So there is literacy on the board?

Senator Doody: Oh, be quiet!

Senator Murray: Let me complete the answer. This is a serious matter between two serious senators. When we need a lighter touch, we will call on Honourable Senator Gigantès.

Senator Gigantès: And you will get it!

Senator Murray: In addition, the ECB board has adopted the following practice in case of potential conflict of interest:

Any member of the Board who has an actual or potential conflict of interest in respect to any matter, issue, application or project which comes before the Board shall immediately declare such conflict of interest and remove him/herself from discussion, consideration, deliberation or review of subject matter, issue, application or project.

Conflict of interest is an obvious public concern any time a private sector board is asked to advise government on operational matters. However, the agency values the advice it receives from board members and intends to continue to take advantage of this input. The agency will be vigilant to guard against any conflict-of-interest situations, or even the appearance of such situations, and is satisfied that guidelines already in place provide an adequate safeguard.

The second question from Senator MacEachen was: Were any public tenders called for this particular contract—the Arrow LM plant construction—and is it the policy of the government to have public tenders called for facilities erected by private companies which have been the recipient of substantial financial assistance from the government?

The answer to the question is: It is not the policy of Enterprise Cape Breton to have public tenders called for facilities erected for the use of private companies. It is the standard practice of Enterprise Cape Breton not to interfere in the way a business conducts its affairs so long as what it does is in line with private sector practices in the region. However, we have been informed by officials of Arrow LM Company that a tendering process was followed and that the contract was awarded on a competitive basis to the lowest and most attractive of bids received from two Ontario firms and Zutphen Brothers. To the best of our knowledge, the company and the consultant that developed the project for them did so in accordance with standard business practices.

The third question asked by the honourable senator was: When the financial package was approved by Enterprise Cape Breton, had the quotations from the contractors to establish the price been in place?

The reply to that question is: No. We have been informed by officials of Arrow LM that the actual bids for the construction of the manufacturing facility were obtained after the submission of the application to ECB and subsequent to the decision by the ECB board. The construction estimates submitted on the application were based on an estimation of cost produced by two Ontario firms.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his answer, which I will study carefully with respect to the conflict-of-interest portion.

[Senator Doody.]

I ask the minister to consider the situation in this particular case, when bids were invited from two firms in Ontario and one local firm in Nova Scotia, the head of which was the chairman of the Enterprise Cape Breton operation, and no other local firms were offered the opportunity to bid. No Atlantic province firms were given that opportunity; no other Nova Scotia firms were given that opportunity and no other Cape Breton firms were given that opportunity, except the firm headed by Mr. van Zutphen, who, at the same time, is head of the Enterprise Cape Breton operation.

It may be as clean as a hound's tooth, but certainly it is not perceived to be that way, and it would be useful to have some further information on the basis upon which these firms were selected and the amounts of the bids.

I understood the minister to have said that, even though public assistance is involved in a very substantial way, there is no obligation on the part of the private sector firm to have a competitive process. In this case it was not fully competitive when it was on a selective basis.

I put these matters before the minister for his consideration.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I appreciate the points raised by the Leader of the Opposition. The policy is as I have stated it to be.

I can tell him that some time ago, not in connection with this case at all, I asked that a review be made of this policy to see whether it would be an undue interference with companies that receive assistance from government agencies under my responsibility to require that they call public tenders for the construction of facilities. There is some difference of opinion on the matter, as the honourable senator will appreciate, but I am having the policy reviewed in a general way, although my concern was not prompted by this particular case; it was some time ago that I asked for a review.

ORDER PAPER QUESTION

LaPRADE FUND—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I want to commend the Leader of the Government for responding so quickly to the important question asked by Senator MacEachen only yesterday. I wish my commendations to the Leader of the Government in the Senate could also cover earlier questions.

I have a question—which must surely establish a record in the Senate—that has been outstanding since February 3, 1987. I have asked the Leader of the Government to provide an answer. Indeed, on occasion the Leader of the Government has expressed dismay that he did not have an answer to this particular question.

For his edification, these very simple questions concern the LaPrade Fund and they are as follows: “When was the fund established and for what reasons?” I presume that is not too difficult to answer. “How much money is currently in the fund?” That should not be too difficult to answer. “What was the original amount allocated to the fund and what criteria determined that amount?" That should be a matter of record. "Have any sums been spent from the fund, and, if so, for which projects and where?" "Is spending for the fund restricted to a particular area of Canada, and, if so, what are the boundaries of the area and how are such boundaries determined?" "What are the criteria, if any, for the projects which can become eligible for funding?" And lastly, "What changes, if any, have been made in the concept and administration of the fund since September 1984?"

I am wondering if the Honourable Senator Murray could enlighten us as to the reasons for the undue delay in responding to this question.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I regret that I cannot do so, honourable senators, but I shall do my best to expedite a reply.

Senator Graham: If he cannot provide us with a reply in the next day or two, will the Leader of the Government undertake to explain to us the difficulties in finding the answers to these questions?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if I can find out myself, I shall certainly convey the information to my friend.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPLICATIONS FOR CANADIAN PASSPORTS—REVISION OF REGULATION RE GUARANTORS—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, can the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell me when I should expect to receive an answer to my question to him some time ago regarding passport applications?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I must say that that question has completely escaped my mind, but I will look into it at once.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have an agreement with Senator Everett that he go first, if that is acceptable.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

• (1430)

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, I have to admit at the outset that I have not read the Free Trade Agreement. Indeed, I have no intention of ever doing so. Rather, I would prefer to rely on the opinion of experts who can tell me what is in the Free Trade Agreement, because the agreement, as I understand it, is as arcane as some of the sections of the Income Tax Act. I would no more try to explain to honourable senators the meaning of "safe income" under the Income Tax Act than fly to the moon. If I wanted to know about safe income, I would go to David Ward of Davies, Ward and Beck and ask him for a definition. It seems to me that that is rather important. Just because one has read the agreement does not necessarily mean that one understands the agreement.

Senator Flynn: Are you speaking for Senator Gigantès?

Senator Everett: I should like to say further, honourable senators, that there is a question now as to whether or not there should be a referendum on this issue or an election on this issue. I have some difference with that opinion. I believe that a government in our system is elected to govern. If, after investigating matters thoroughly, it decides to bring forth legislation, then that legislation, if it can command a majority in Parliament, should pass. The government should answer to the electorate at the appropriate time. I think it would be a terrible mistake, even on an issue as seminal as free trade, to go to government by referendum.

In fact, I must say that I welcome an election on the issue, but I am somewhat concerned that it will be a very emotional issue, and I have some concern and wonder as to whether or not it will be fully understood by the electorate and whether the decision will be made on sound grounds. But if there is to be an election, and that is to be the central issue, or one of the major issues, then, as far as I am concerned, I welcome it.

I think it is only fair to make my position clear on the legislation and on the Free Trade Agreement. In May of 1987 I made a speech in this house endorsing the concept of free trade. I did that because I have been a long-time free trader. Perhaps that is because I come from Winnipeg, and we in the west, to a large extent, have had a long and favourable association with the concept of free trade.

As to my credentials, I did chair the trade section of the Ottawa rally that followed the Kingston Conference of 1960. I believe that rally was held in 1961. At that rally we managed to get in a plank endorsing free trade into Liberal policy.

I think this is a good agreement.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Everett: Honourable senators are aware that 30 per cent of our income and of our employment are derived from exports. Honourable senators are also aware that we are the only developed country, outside of Australia and New Zealand, without access to a market in excess of 100 million people.

It seems to me that market access is the key issue; and with this agreement we get it. This agreement dismantles most of the trade restrictions between Canada and the United States, and, generally, it has been judged as being better than any similar agreement negotiated anywhere in the world.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Everett: It increases access, it makes that access more secure, and it promises to add to that security. It will most certainly make us more competitive; and in being competitive we will be able to compete to a greater extent with imports from the less developed countries and with countries such as Japan, Taiwan and Singapore.

Also, it is interesting to note that at this stage foreign exporters are looking very favourably on Canada, as a result of this agreement, as a base from which to conduct export operations into the United States. So I say to honourable senators that, on my reading of the material that has been written on this agreement, I believe that a good agreement has been negotiated.

Now what happens if we do not sign that agreement? The House of Representatives in the United States has passed it. There is now a clear indication that the Senate will pass it. If the agreement were not signed by Canada, then I do not think we could once again enjoy the fast-track procedure we have been the beneficiaries of in the United States. One must remember that that fast-track procedure is a yes-or-no option.

Under the procedure, amendments cannot be offered to the bill; so the bill must be accepted as it stands. I do not think we would achieve that again. I think we would see special interest groups forming in the United States, and, thus, we would have a very serious and difficult negotiation. If we do not want an agreement, that is one thing; but, if we do eventually want an agreement, we would be risking a great deal by not signing this agreement now.

There are those who say we could have done better. One of the arguments is that we could have done better by going through GATT. But one must remember that, when you negotiate in GATT, the concessions that you give must be extended to all countries; and both Canada and the United States would be somewhat loath to extend concessions so widely. Beyond that, we have lost nothing by entering into the agreement as far as our position with GATT is concerned. We can still operate in GATT with or without the agreement.

There are those who say that the better way to do it is to have sectorial agreements like the Auto Pact. We tried that, and the fact of the matter is that it did not work. In any event, there is a great danger, in trying to enter into sectorial agreements, of offending the GATT rules. Finally, there are those who say that we should not put all of our eggs in the United States basket, despite the fact that 80 per cent of our trade is with them now. What we ought to do is increase our trade with the rest of the world. That is an admirable suggestion. We have tried it on a number of occasions. Mr. Diefenbaker tried it and Mr. Trudeau tried it; it never really worked.

It is interesting to note that the United Kingdom, in 1970, received 9 per cent of our manufactured exports or merchandise exports. Since the U.K. joined the Common Market, that has dropped down to 2 per cent; so there is no indication that such a policy will be successful. In any event, since we are entering into a free trade agreement, and not a common market, and since, under a free trade agreement, we have the right to establish our own tariffs with the rest of the world and those tariffs do not have to conform to American tariffs, we are still free to attempt, as we should, to increase trade with countries other than the United States.

● (1440)

So, honourable senators, we come down to the final argument against the agreement. The question is: Have we given up too much to get the access we have to the American market? The central issue is that we did not get relief from their unfair trade laws; that is, from countervail, antidumping proceedings and other contingency protections, such as temporary import restraints. These can be applied where there is intense competition that seriously affects one particular industrial sector. I believe those restraints were applied in the softwood lumber case. If these restraints are applied, the country can impose quotas and tariff surcharges or enter into voluntary export restraints.

It is interesting to note that under the agreement the temporary import restraints can no longer be used; so we are down to the question of countervail and antidumping. It does not surprise me that we did not negotiate a firm agreement on those trade contingencies. In my speech of May of 1987 I said I thought it was unlikely that we would do so, because the history of free trade arrangements has been that every country has maintained the right to countervail and has maintained antidumping legislation. Many ask why the United States did not give up those rights, but had we, as a country, been asked to give up countervail and antidumping legislation we would have refused.

Well, what did we get? We got a trade dispute panel. The laws of Canada and the United States will apply to countervail and dumping, but, in the American case, instead of going through the American courts with a long, involved, politically saturated process, they will go to a supranational panel that will apply the law, but will do so in a far less politically involved manner, in a process that I understand is mandated to take place in less than one year and is considerably less complicated than the GATT process that presently exists. In addition, a panel will be created by the two countries to settle the definition of subsidies on which countervailing can take place. It will report in five to seven years. It would have taken a great deal of effort and it would have been a terrible mistake on the part of either country to have tried to agree on what defines a subsidy and what is countervailable in the short period of 18 months during which the agreement was negotiated.

Honourable senators, there you have the terrible dichotomy of the opponents of the Free Trade Agreement: On the one hand they want an exemption from American fair trade laws and on the other hand they object to any definition of "subsidies" as being an interference with our sovereignty. They maintain that if we go into this negotiation we will lose control of our social programs—medicare, unemployment insurance, maternity benefits and so on.

Generally, it is my understanding that in trade matters the laws of general application have presented no problem in the matter of countervail. One interesting point is that, if there were no agreement on what could be subsidized, we would not have weakened our position from what it is today. Our subsidies can be attacked even today. The fact that we have the Free Trade Agreement does not change that, unless we agree on what is countervailable. If, in the course of making that agreement, our major social programs were attacked, we would have the right to abrogate the agreement within six months. I contend that, if that were suggested by the Americans—which I find it difficult to believe could possibly happen—we would, of course, from a political point of view, abrogate the agreement or threaten to do so.

One area that seems to bother the opponents of the Free Trade Agreement is the concept of harmonization, which is defined somewhere in the agreement as "rendering identical". In determining what defines subsidies for the purpose of countervail, it has been suggested that we will have to harmonize our policies with those of the United States. Because they are ten times as large as we are, harmonization will be to their programs and not to ours, and that will result in the destruction of Canadian social programs and, by extension, Canadian sovereignty. I should like to refer honourable senators to the C.D. Howe Institute's book entitled "Evaluating the Fair Trade Deal". At page 42 thereof the authors state:

Question:

Does the Agreement compel a general harmonization of social and/or economic policies?

The answer is:

In some cases, such as the setting of standards, the Agreement urges voluntary harmonization (but does not mandate it). For virtually all broad social and economic policies, however, the Agreement calls only for national treatment, which leaves intact the sovereign right of each country to go its own way on all of its policies, as long as it does not use these policies as disguised barriers to international trade or investment.

National treatment, of course, means only that people in your market are treated the same way as your own nationals are treated. It means no more than that. And the question of harmonization, as the authors state here, is not really an issue.

The other area that seems to bother a lot of people is that of energy. Let me refer to the same C. D. Howe publication. The authors state as follows:

Question:

By removing all bilateral trade impediments and by agreeing to rules on sharing whenever the government declares an emergency and then restricts exports, has not Canada effectively ceded the right to pursue independent policies with respect to such national goals as resource conservation?

● (1450)

Answer:

The answer is no. Under normal market conditions, Canadian resources can be used as required to satisfy Canadian needs. There is nothing in the Agreement that forces Canada to continue exporting a given volume of some commodity just because it was exported in the past. The sharing arrangements have nothing to do with normal shifts in sales as market conditions change. If, for example, Canadian demand slowly expanded to require more of the output of an exported Canadian commodity, newly made contracts would reflect the changing pattern of demand by reducing the amount exported over time.

Furthermore, nothing in the Agreement precludes Canadian governments from requiring that production of any resource-based industry be reduced for conservation purposes. The only thing required is that if a government-imposed reduction in output is accompanied by a government-imposed export restriction, the United States must be guaranteed access to the same proportion of the total Canadian supply as it used in the most recent 36-month period.

It goes on to say:

Question:

Does the Agreement require that the price of Canadian exports to the United States be the same as prices charged in Canada?

Answer:

Canadian producers, including Crown corporations, have not relinquished their ability to charge prices that vary with market conditions and the conditions of supply on both sides of the border. Many commodities, such as oil and electricity, are sold under many different conditions at many different prices, and the Agreement does nothing to regulate the terms of commercial price setting. U.S. prices can be higher, or lower, than prices charged at home—subject, of course, to existing antidumping and other relevant laws. What the Agreement prevents is direct government intervention to impose transborder price discrepancies.

The real question that worries people so much is the concept of proportional access. In order for the proportional access rule to work, Canada must first declare an emergency. The current contracts must be violated by that declaration; then the sharing principle takes place. There is nothing unusual in this. It is part of many commercial contracts in the energy and resource field. It is also a principle that Canada is committed to under the rules of GATT, and it is a principle of the International Energy Agency and Canada is one of 20 countries that are parties to that agreement.

Over and above that, as was stated, we are not required to sell our resources to the United States. We may choose to do so as a matter of marketing, but we are not required to do so. If we do, and if we declare an emergency, we can only reduce them in proportion to what they buy in the last 36 months relative to the size of our production.

That includes water. There is nothing in the agreement that says we have to export water. I don't know why that should become an issue, because it is just not there.

I should like to say one thing about water policy. We have said that, as a matter of national policy, we will not, under any circumstances, sell our water. It is interesting to note that we said the same thing about electrical power. Up to, I believe, the mid-fifties there was a general Canadian preclusion to exporting our electrical power. Now we are building plants all over the country and entering into agreements with the Americans to sell our power, because it is very good business for us. We have an excess of water power, and we are going to benefit from it. Yet, because of one of these policies, billions and billions of dollars of foreign exchange that could have benefited Canada went over the rapids. The dam and hydro installations could have been built for far less money than they are being built for today and would probably have been just about as good then as they are today. But that can be the result of these blind policies.

At the present time we do not want to contemplate selling our water to the United States. However, there may come a time when it is not only fair to do so but is the correct thing to do, both from a moral point of view and from an income point of view, with that income benefiting the people instead of being lost, as the hydroelectric earnings, over many years, were lost and could have benefited the people.

Another area of objection is agriculture. As I understand the agreement—

Senator Buckwold: There is no comparison.

Senator Everett: No comparison?

Senator Buckwold: There is no comparison between water and electric power.

Senator Everett: I do not think the honourable senator can say that. There may or may not be a comparison. We may or may not decide at a particular time to sell our resources, but it may be that at some point it is sound to sell our resources. If we adhere to a policy, as we did to the electrical export policy, we may be making a terrible mistake. I do not think we should say at this stage, or at any other stage, that, for all time, we are not going to do this or do that. It may be proper and right and in the best interests of the country to do it, and we should keep an open mind on that issue.

To return to the aspect of agriculture, as I understand the agreement, it allows import quotas to support domestic supply management arrangements. Under the terms of the agreement, I believe, the marketing boards are secure. There is nothing unusual about that. The GATT permits the same kind of import quotas for that reason. Beyond that, as I understand the agreement, an attempt will be made to reach an agreement on agricultural subsidies between Canada and the United States. I also understand that, in the Uruguay Round, the United States and Canada—in our case supported by all parties in the House—are trying to arrange an agreement on agricultural subsidies.

Then there is the Auto Pact. People say that the Auto Pact will be in trouble. Again, the Auto Pact is part of the agreement. It seems to me that it is much less vulnerable to abrogation if it is part of a comprehensive agreement than it would be if it stood alone. In the present circumstances the Auto Pact is not likely sustainable. The Americans have been concerned about our duty remission schemes for some considerable length of time. If there were no free trade arrangement, I believe they would demand renegotiation on the Auto Pact. If that renegotiation took place, because the automobile companies have so far exceeded the safeguards in that pact, I suspect that the pact would be negotiated without the safeguards and without the duty remission possibilities that are being taken out in the Free Trade Agreement. One must always remember that the Auto Pact does not go on forever. It has a one-year cancellation clause. Without the Free Trade Agreement, it is my judgment that we would have to deal with it.

On the question of services, one must remember that the non-covered services—that is, the services that are not dealt with by this agreement—include transportation, telecommunication, medical, legal, child care, health, education and social services. The covered services are subject only to new laws, and those laws must give national treatment.

In culture, similarly, the agreement preserves the present position. National treatment is required on new issues and new measures only.

So the argument comes down to this: In entering into the agreement are we compromising our sovereignty? Seventy one countries have regional liberalizing trade agreements. Not one has complained that they interfere with their policy independence.

Over the period of the last few years we have reduced our tariffs with the United States, and with the rest of the world. That has not reduced our social benefits. On the contrary, our social benefits have increased during that period. Even today harmonization forces exist, but they relate more to the relocation of people and firms than they do to trade. We still are subject to all the countervail and antidumping legislation. By entering into such an agreement we can at least get free access to the market; enter into negotiations with the Americans on what constitutes a subsidy; and have a supranational panel to determine differences between us.

Once again, I read from the C.D. Howe report, which states as follows:

Readers who have followed the debate may be surprised to find how few monsters, ready to devour an independent and sovereign Canada, jump from the pages of this study (or from those of the Agreement). Canada is free to develop and to continue its own distinctive policies in all of the important areas that go to the heart of nationhood.

That is the fact. That is the irrefutable fact. This is a good deal. It does not interfere with our sovereignty. It is one that we can live with. There are dangers if we do not go ahead with it. In my judgment this is good legislation on a good agreement, and it should be passed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I congratulate those who have preceded me in the debate for their contribution. I congratulate Senator Gigantès for his monumental analysis—

Senator Flynn: That is the right word!

Senator MacEachen: —of the trade agreement and the legislation.

An Hon. Senator: And he read it!

Senator MacEachen: It certainly shows that he is working hard as a member of the Senate. I also congratulate Senator Murray for a well-articulated and well-constructed speech.

In listening to his speech, and later in reading it, I was struck by the heavy reliance placed upon outside sources in defending the Free Trade Agreement, the reliance placed upon the C.D. Howe Institute, upon Donald Macdonald and upon George van Roggen. The line seems to be that if York and Lipsey say that the trade agreement is good, then it must be good. If Donald Macdonald says it is good, then it must be good. If Don Johnston says it is good, it must be good.

We were warned in our first year at university to be wary of argumentation based upon the so-called “authorities”. But that is the trap into which Senator Murray and, I am afraid, a number of other speakers have fallen. Rather than struggling analytically and personally with the issues that are involved in the trade agreement, they have resorted to relying upon the judgment of others. I think we must do better than that.

I wonder why, in making his case to the Senate, the Leader of the Government relies upon Liberals, whom he normally regards as quite inadequate,—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: —to buttress his case and ignores those who are sponsoring the legislation, namely, the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of International Trade.

In commending him upon his speech, I must say that I would have been more enlightened if he had himself struggled with the issues involved rather than parade before us the views of others—

An Hon. Senator: Right on!

Senator MacEachen: —not all of whom come to the debate as objective witnesses—

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: —not all of whom come without a past baggage of commitment to one side or the other.

While I understand that Professor Lipsey is a competent economist, for some time, long before this Free Trade Agreement, he has pursued a mission to bring it about. So he has a personal stake in giving the kind of inadequate, in my opinion, analysis that is contained in the book which has been quoted so frequently.

Senator Murray has referred, and quite rightly, to the importance of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee report on free trade. It is true that that body recommended a bilateral trade agreement with the United States. He also relied on Donald Macdonald and the royal commission. But he slid over the fact that the most contentious issues in the Free Trade Agreement were not included or warned against or made exceptions of both in the Senate reports and in the royal commission by Donald Macdonald.

Senator Murray: They both support the agreement, though.

Senator MacEachen: It would be possible for any person, certainly anyone who was a member of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, to endorse totally that report and still object vigorously to this Free Trade Agreement—

• (1510)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: —because there are included in the Free Trade Agreement major items that were not treated upon by the former Senate committee reports. Energy is a major one; services is a major one, as are financial services, agriculture and dispute settlements. In fact, Senator van Roggen himself acknowledged that the Free Trade Agreement had carried the matter much beyond where he had left it in the report of the committee which he chaired, because, he said:

... the current Free Trade Agreement had many major add-ons, if I may call them that, not common to the types of free trade agreement we were considering six years earlier. Just to mention some of them, they include things such as energy, trade in services and financial services. This is the first time these have ever been attempted—

Therefore, in my opinion any senator approaching this agreement would find in it new elements, such as energy, services, financial services, agriculture and dispute settlement, hitherto not examined by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I also find it interesting that so few of those who have participated in this debate have relied upon the evidence collected by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on this current agreement. That Foreign Affairs Committee, under the chairmanship of Senator van Roggen—and later, Senator Bosa—held prodigious hearings during which we heard from many excellent witnesses. However, as I say, hardly any reference has been made to the evidence collected by that Senate committee, although reliance has been placed upon other documents that have emanated elsewhere. I think that if Senator Murray, for example, had paid some attention to the evidence heard by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs he would not have resorted to the now obsolete and rather discredited argument that protectionism in the United States is a justification for the Free Trade Agreement.

During our hearings in Washington, that proposition was exploded by all witnesses, except—and this must be acknowledged—our ambassador in Washington, Mr. Gotlieb, who still hewed loyally to the government line, despite all evidence to the contrary. Honourable senators, perhaps I should refer to one or two of the citations, because it was of great interest to me—and I think to other members of the committee—when we heard the evidence of the witnesses in Washington. They were quite of the view that, whatever other reason there might exist for entering into a free trade agreement with the United States, it was not because of the threat of protectionism in that country. That was rather a surprise to me.

For example, Julius Katz expressed the view that protectionism was not a national issue. He stated that Canadian fears about U.S. protectionism were misplaced, and it was therefore a mistake to portray the FTA as a defence against protectionism.

Another important witness was Mr. Gary Horlick, who is on retainer to the Government of Canada in Washington in pursuit of its objectives on the Free Trade Agreement. He said that Congress understood that the United States, with its huge external debt, could not afford to be protectionist. He said that Congress talked tough, but its actions were cautious. He claimed that Congress, in two decades, had made only one small, but far-reaching, addition to the U.S. antidumping code: to wit, the formative amendment to the definition of dumping to define it as selling below the cost of production, as well as selling at a lower price abroad. Unfortunately, this broader definition had been widely used, and even Canada has copied it. He insisted that Congress would not pass large protectionist measures. He goes on to back up his assertion by further evidence from which I want to read, and I will be reading from a staff memorandum prepared for the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs following its visit to Washington. The staff memorandum is, of course, a staff document which does not necessarily reflect the view of members of the committee. I will refer to that document later, because I think the staff memorandum has accurately reported the comments of the witnesses, but it has not included in sufficient degree, in my opinion, the questions and comments put by senators in the course of the hearings in Washington. So I make those preliminary comments about the speeches, and particularly the one made by Senator Murray.

Honourable senators, it is impossible to cover this Free Trade Agreement in one, or even in several speeches. It is so comprehensive and so complicated that it is impossible to deal with even one sector adequately in a speech. Anyone who has sat in and listened to the evidence understands fully what a detailed, comprehensive and far-reaching document the trade agreement is, and that is true also of Bill C-130. Therefore, in my speech I am covering the surface of the areas I will select for consideration, and the first of those is the question of non-tariff barriers and the dispute-settlement mechanism. The dispute-settlement mechanism is a new area for Canada. Certainly it was not covered by Senator van Roggen or his committee. I was interested that Senator Murray had redefined the government objectives in his speech. Certainly his definition of objectives made absolutely no reference to the necessity, which the government originally declared, that a free trade agreement must exempt Canada from the trade remedy laws.

The Prime Minister, in what was meant to be a statement of objectives for the negotiations with the United States, said that he wanted a comprehensive agreement addressing non-tariff barriers. He did not get it. He went on to say:

Let me leave no doubt that first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the Agreement.

The Prime Minister did not get that either. That objective had been made earlier by the Prime Minister in New York, as quoted by the New York Times, when he said:

... the US Trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period.

And the Honourable Pat Carney confirmed:

Non-tariff barriers are on the table.

● (1520)

John Crosbie reaffirmed the point when speaking to the St. John's Board of Trade on July 2, 1987. He said:

—unless we get out from under the threat of ... U.S. trade remedy laws and unless there is an effective dispute-resolution mechanism to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the United States would not be a good deal for Canada.

Well, we did not get out from under the threat of U.S. trade remedy laws. They are still there, still haunting us, still in place.

Honourable senators, no one can quarrel with these objectives of the Prime Minister and his ministers. We know that the United States is well equipped with non-tariff barriers and that they have been extensively used against Canadian trade. What is disappointing is that the objective established by the Prime Minister and his ministers has not been achieved. We know what happened on countervail and subsidies. Article 1906 of the agreement stipulates that the two countries shall negotiate a new regime concerning subsidies and countervail over a period of up to seven years. The negotiators, by hoisting this centre-piece issue, have candidly admitted that it could not be settled as part of the agreement. However, the Prime Minister has deployed an interesting piece of sophistry to smoke-screen this failure. He said in Hansard at the end of last month:

From time to time the Opposition contends that Canadians have not been exempted from U.S. trade laws ... This Government has no intention of allowing Americans ... to dump their products in our market, or to take advantage of subsidies to undercut Canadian companies in their own markets.

The Prime Minister would have us believe that the United States was the demander on trade remedy laws, and that the reason why no progress was made was Canadian reluctance to negotiate on dumping and subsidies. Of course, that illusion flies in the face of all the evidence on the Canadian initiative to draw the United States into a negotiation on subsidies and countervail.

What is also disconcerting and perhaps disappointing is that the government has failed to provide any indication of how it intends to negotiate a new regime on subsidies and countervail in the next round of negotiations foreseen in Article 1906. The truth of the matter is that the negotiations have failed. The two parties were unable to agree on common rules on dumping and subsidies. They merely agreed to disagree and to revisit the issue in future negotiations.

In case there is any doubt about the kind of security of access and relief from the U.S. trade remedy laws achieved by this government, let me quote the President of the United States himself from the statement he submitted to Congress in July:

The United States retains the right to apply its national antidumping and countervailing duty laws to goods of the other party—

Which means Canada.

—and also reserves its rights to review these laws.

These are the results, and this is what the Prime Minister has to say about them:

What are the results? In a phrase ... security of access ... Most fundamentally and more importantly the agreement will replace the politics of trade with the rule of law.

The Prime Minister's reference to the rule of law, presumably, also has to do with the dispute-settlement mechanisms between Canada and the United States. The government has placed so much emphasis on the provisions of the agreement concerning dispute settlements and rated them as an achievement of such historic significance that these provisions deserve a bit of scrutiny.

Of course, dispute settlement was clearly a prime target for the negotiation. Pat Carney said, "Of the most important things on our agenda for negotiations are dispute-settlement mechanisms." The government spokesmen, including the Minister for International Trade, emphasized that there must be a better way to settle disputes than that which they experienced on shakes and shingles and on softwood lumber. The free trade negotiation, they argued, should eliminate the uncertainty surrounding the application of U.S.A. non-tariff barriers and, particularly, countervail. Well, yes, there has to be a better way of handling trade disputes than the disastrous government bungling of these important forest product exports. There was indeed room for improvement, but the main reason that the government has placed so much emphasis on the creation of dispute-settlement mechanisms is that it looks to them like a substitute for the security of access and the relief from the U.S. trade remedy laws that it has failed to achieve. The government had to get something on mechanisms, having failed to get something on substance. It would otherwise have brought back an empty bag.

Let us look at what is in this bag. Are the new bilateral dispute-settlement mechanisms really effective? Here again, I think we have to deflate the government's overblown accounts of what it got from Washington. May I remind honourable senators—and this may be a bit tedious—that United States non-tariff barriers fall roughly into three categories? You may remember that at the beginning I said that the Prime Minister wanted a comprehensive agreement addressing non-tariff barriers. Well, non-tariff barriers to be addressed by the Prime Minister fall into three categories. The first is the exclusion of foreign suppliers by pieces of legislation such as the Buy American Act, the Berry Amendment of the U.S. Department of Defense legislation and the Jones Act. These exclusions can only be dealt with by certain derogations in favour of foreign suppliers, or, more simply, by the granting of U.S. national treatment to Canadian firms. That is the way to secure access for the U.S. products, but it was not achieved. The Prime Minister has conveniently forgotten that national treatment for Canadian firms was one of his prime objectives.

The second category is composed of regulations, such as health standards, sanitary regulations, grades, building codes and safety standards, to which foreign suppliers have to conform if they are to sell in the U.S.A. market. The problem lies in differences between our regulatory framework and that of the United States. The solution will be found in equivalence or harmonization of regulations and standards. This is why, presumably, Article 608 of the agreement provides for further negotiations. However, that was not achieved, although harmonization and equivalence must be achieved if this non-tariff barrier is to be removed in our relationship. Certainly a solution here would be much more relevant than dispute-settlement mechanisms.

The third non-tariff set of tariff barriers is contained in the American trade remedy legislation that deals with antidumping, countervail and other safeguard actions. The agreement provides for prior notification, consultation and, if need be, appeal in relation to U.S. decisions under the U.S. trade remedy laws.

● (1530)

Prior notification is a good thing, if the Canadian embassy in Washington happens to be asleep and the Canadian government enraptured by the American government, as seems to have been the case in the shakes and shingles affair. However, any Washington administration is transparent enough, not to say leaky enough, to reduce the need for prior notification to a matter of courtesy. One could hardly regard it, with an effective Canadian government and our embassy on its toes, as a vital element in the protection of Canadian interests, but there it is.

As to consultations, I would be hard put to find in the past many instances of a U.S. administration's refusal to consult at the request of the Canadian government on matters of mutual interest. It is of course being argued that the agreement brings consultations within the framework of new institutional machinery—that is, a joint Canada-United States Commission headed by the U.S. and Canadian ministers responsible for international trade. The role of this body, as I understand it, would be to provide some kind of conciliation between the parties.

I must say that I do not see it, honourable senators, and I believe those who attended the committee hearings are aware of my skepticism as to the potential effectiveness of this new institutional machinery headed by Canadian ministers on the one hand and United States secretaries on the other. I just do not buy it. I was impressed by the naiveté of some of the evidence given in Washington on this point by a representative from the U.S. Trade Representative's Office. I do not see it, because ministers have certain jobs to do. Canadian ministers, when confronted with a trade issue with the United States, are expected by Parliament to defend Canadian interests, but under this agreement they are asked to take that hat off and to play the role of conciliator in a U.S.-Canada joint commission. I do not see it. I do not think it will greatly improve the present system, but I, honourable senators, would certainly not go to the ramparts opposing this particular arrangement; nor would I go to the ramparts opposing the compulsory and binding arbitration procedures contained in Articles 1103, 1806, 1807 and 1904 of this agreement.

Senator Murray: Would you go to the ramparts opposing the bill?

Senator MacEachen: Articles 1103, 1806 and 1807 are typical arbitration arrangements found in many trade agreements. They authorize the aggrieved party to restore the balance of the agreement by withdrawing some concessions.

It is Article 1904 which constitutes a genuine innovation. This last article provides for the creation of binational panels acting as courts of appeal, issuing binding decisions on antidumping and countervail issues. There has been some concern in the United States about the constitutionality of these panels under the American constitution if their decisions are meant to be enforceable in the United States like any other court decision. This is an American problem, and I do not, therefore, intend to delve into it. It has been pointed out, quite correctly, that courts make judgments on the basis of law. This, surely, is what the Prime Minister was referring to when he said:

What we have accomplished in the area of dispute settlement is a triumph for the rule of law in international trade.

—listen to this!—

Whose law? The binational panels will be interpreting and enforcing American law, nothing but American law, American procedure and American precedents when U.S. non-tariff barriers are slapped on Canadian exports. This is the triumph of the rule of American law in our bilateral trade, at least until the happy time when new rules of law, which the bilateral negotiation has failed to produce, are concocted by the two governments.

One can argue, and it has been argued, that the binational panels will be better than the existing system. Senators interested in reading the evidence given in Washington will find even there a difference of opinion as to whether the existing courts had performed less well than the new binational panels. However, it is to be hoped that there is an improvement, but it is what I would consider, in the overall issues of this Free Trade Agreement, not a major issue in comparison with the stakes involved for Canada in such areas as energy.

The energy section, so we are told or we have inferred, was a last-minute addition to the agreement by Canada in order to secure progress on dispute settlement, which was so necessary for Canada to have. As I said earlier, the complexity of these sectors is very great indeed, and I want to give you my impressions of the implications of the energy section.

One of the main results of the energy section is that it limits the freedom of action of Canadian national actions in the energy field. That is one of the principal results of the agreement in energy.

The GATT laid down rules in energy goods in the past. There were exceptions, because it was acknowledged in the GATT that crises could occur that would permit the waxing or the violation of the GATT rules. Interestingly, even though various national governments have, from time to time, exercised the right to national action against the GATT standards, they have never been brought to heel, because it is generally understood that energy is a strategic good and that in certain cases a nation must reserve to itself extraordinary action in terms of national or international crises. So far as the energy section of the agreement is concerned, the ability of Canada is severely restrained. That is point number one.

The second point I should like to emphasize is the impact on the National Energy Board. The Free Trade Agreement removes from the National Energy Board its independent status as a regulatory agency. I was in Parliament when, following the Borden commission, the Diefenbaker government introduced—I believe by the late Gordon Churchill—the National Energy Board Act, which was to provide a tough, independent regulatory body, the National Energy Board. Well, that concept is gone. The FTA and the subsequent legislation removes from the National Energy Board the independent right and obligation to license exports of oil and gas when surplus to Canadian requirements.

The surplus testing requirement remains in the NEB as section 83, but its continuation is mere pretense. One of the offensive attributes of the debate is that both the energy chapter and the continuance of section 83 are intended to convey the impression that the Energy Board retains its independent status. That is not true, because the surplus testing requirement in the NEB has been superseded by the new section 84 proposed in Bill C-130.

• (1540)

The National Energy Board is no longer free to deny an export licence and apply a surplus test. No, not at all. If a case is brought before the board alleging that a particular export ought not to be made, the board is no longer able to apply its own surplus test and deny the export application. It must go to the government, to the minister. The minister, if he wishes, then goes to the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council or the minister are free to let the request from the National Energy Board sit there, in which case it will lapse. However, if a decision of the National Energy Board to deny an export licence is upheld, it immediately triggers a period of restriction in Canada. Under this bill, you can no longer have a denial of an export licence in Canada, unless there is declared a period of restriction, which automatically triggers the application of the rule of proportionality. That is the situation.

The precondition for denial of any export licence is the declaration of a period of restriction. The declaration of a period of restriction triggers the application of proportionality, which means that Canadian consumption and/or production must be reduced in equivalent measure if a proportional amount of exports to the United States is to be maintained, as it must be under the FTA.

I invite honourable senators to examine this proposition. It is neither accurate nor relevant to compare this obligation that we are undertaking with the United States to the obligations we have undertaken under the International Energy Agency. Officials before the committee have valiantly attempted to say, "Well, this is not different. Indeed, it is less onerous than what we have undertaken under the International Energy Agency." I say: Not so. The comparison with the International Energy Agency is a red herring. The obligations that we undertook in the International Energy Agency are intended to cover a sharp, quick, abrupt disruption in oil supply, likely originating in the Middle East, and to be of short duration.

One cannot compare that with the necessity of any far-sighted energy board or government to have the power to examine, ten or twenty years into the future, its ability to serve the Canadian market, and to say, "Well, we foresee, ten years down the road, a possible shortage in Canada. Therefore, we ought to deny this export permit, which is over twenty years, because in ten years there will be difficulties." That cannot happen anymore unless a period of restriction is declared, which in turn triggers the law of proportionality.

Suppose that Canadian exports of gas to the U.S. had reached 50 per cent of total production, in other words, 50 per cent usage in Canada and 50 per cent usage in the United States. Presumably, if you ordered a period of restriction, which would be necessary to deny an export licence, you would have to maintain that 50-50 proportion under the FTA. As demand increased in Canada, say, in the ten subsequent years, that demand could not be satisfied, because we would be obligated to send the historic proportion to the United States under this period of restriction.

So we have, honourable senators, the chilling realization that Canadians could experience real shortages of their own resource in order to maintain the flow of that resource to the United States. That is the chilling possibility under the obligations of the Free Trade Agreement. I could not reiterate more strongly my belief that Canada cannot control the amount of exports to the United States and the proportion of Canadian production to the United States unless a period of restriction is in place. So I put that down as something to contemplate. I find that hard to swallow.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: When the day comes—as it might—that Canadians have shortages of their own resources and the flow must be protected in an historic proportion for the United States, I believe that the government of the day will face an upheaval in public opinion that will put it off that course, because Canadians will not stand for it.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: That is my opinion. That is one point: the relationship between the United States and Canada. I would be pleased if honourable senators could show me that I have made an error in analysis, deliberately or otherwise. It may not be as finely shaped as it ought to be, but I think it is substantially correct. That is one point.

The other point is that the energy provisions in the FTA constrain and hobble the Canadian government to the point where it will be unable to protect the national interest in future periods of sharp dislocation. We know the manifestations of the oil shocks in Canada and internationally. The manifestation in Canada is a microcosm of the global manifestation, namely, imbalances of supply among the regions of the world. First is the imbalance where the source is in the Middle East and the usage is in western Europe and Japan. Second is the revenue imbalance, with the pouring of money into the OPEC countries and the burdens placed upon the lesser developed countries and, to a lesser extent, upon the industrialized countries. We have gone through that internationally. Do you think it is over? Do you think we have seen the last oil shock? I do not think so.

● (1550)

It will come just as soon as the OPEC cartel deems it opportune. And don't talk to me about markets or "free markets", because the oil market is dominated by an international cartel. I do not think we have seen the last energy crisis. I am of the view that the energy provisions of the FTA could not be complied with by a Canadian government—regardless of its political stripe, be it a Conservative government, a Liberal government or an NDP government—during a re-enactment of the national distress that was caused by the international oil shocks. There will be irresistible pressure on the Government of Canada to do something to mitigate the impact on various regions of the country in the face of an international oil crisis. I was about to say that we have given away all of the tools under the FTA, but we have given away most of the tools.

Senator Murray has said that there was no loss of sovereignty, and he defined that by saying sovereignty was "the ability to manage our own affairs"; but we have lost, in a massive way, the ability to manage our own energy future under the energy provisions of the Free Trade Agreement.

I find parts of the Free Trade Agreement acceptable. In fact, I personally favoured the negotiations. I have no difficulty with attempting to enter into an agreement with the United States, provided it is a good agreement, but this result in the energy section is bad for Canada. I could not personally endorse it unless I were proved to be in error and the evidence given before the committee were proved to be in error. We will have an opportunity to examine the provisions of Bill C-130 on energy and question witnesses in committee. We will have that opportunity.

But what about agriculture? That was not included in the van Roggen report. I appreciated the comments on agriculture made by Senator Balfour. I think he attempted to present a fair impression and a fair account of the impact on Saskatchewan, but I believe that of all the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement, the agricultural provisions will cost the government and the Prime Minister dearly in the forthcoming election, and let me try to explain why.

[Senator MacEachen.]

First of all, as I intimated earlier, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, the proceedings of which have been quoted so frequently by the Leader of the Government in the Senate, sounded the warning bells at the prospect of including agriculture in any agreement. I do not know whether it is necessary to quote, but, if I may, the 1982 report concluded:

The most notable exception in the bilateral agreement would be agriculture.

Mr. Macdonald, now the High Commissioner, emphasized the difficulty of including agriculture and said that the difficulties would justify deferring free trade for agricultural products until detailed agreements could be worked out concerning supply-management and other subsidy policies. Why did the Government of Canada not accept that advice? Why did it not accept the advice of the Advisory Group on Agriculture? We were told in the committee that the Advisory Group on Agriculture unanimously recommended to the the government that it not include agriculture. Well, it has certainly thrown the Canadian Federation of Agriculture into a tailspin.

In his appearance before the committee, the head of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture could not take a stand. He could not say whether the federation was for or against the agricultural section of the Free Trade Agreement. One can understand the unenviable position of the CFA in light of the confusion and uncertainty which emerged from witnesses before the Senate committee.

I believe it is fair to say that those who export to the United States generally support the agreement in the belief or the hope that it will afford them guaranteed access, but even those supporters, such as the Canadian Cattlemen's Association, are "very disappointed that the FTA does not include an understanding regarding subsidies."

Those whose businesses focus primarily on the Canadian market are generally very concerned about the FTA, believing that they will be unable to compete against imports that are much cheaper.

The dilemma—I will not use the word I intended to use—in which the food processing industry finds itself was described in detail by several witnesses, and Senator Roblin was present and heard the evidence, and that dilemma arises from the necessity that food processors in Canada must face purchasing inputs in a Canadian market regulated by systems of demand and supply-management, involving a higher price regime, as well as the requirement to face American competitors purchasing their inputs in an unregulated and cheaper market. Perhaps I should quote one or two excerpts. John Pigott, a representative of the processed poultry industry warned:

The government cannot leave us caught in the middle between a regulated and an unregulated market. If we are caught there, we are sure to perish.

I think that evidence was echoed by one witness after another, and that is why, of course, Donald Macdonald said, "Be careful; don't go ahead with agriculture until you know what you are doing, until you have some knowledge as to the impact upon supply-management."

The Minister of Agriculture says, and believes, that marketing systems are protected under the FTA. I think that formally they are. Senator Murray says that supply-management programs are recognized under the FTA. However, the conditions under which the supply-management systems will be forced to operate under the FTA will destabilize their operations by forcing upon farmers lower returns and wages as the price of survival.

Read the testimony. Look at the eloquent phrasing of Mr. Fleischmann, a former member of the Treasury Board and great authority, no doubt, in the eyes of Senator Murray. Any former bureaucrat has a lot of heft. Look at his testimony in which he describes the process under which supply management must be undermined in Canada if the food processors are to survive. Take a look at Mr. Archie McLean's description before the committee of the double-speak that surrounds this issue. Perhaps I will read it for you to save you the effort of going over the testimony yourself.

● (1600)

Senator Roblin: What page is that on?

Senator MacEachen: It is on page 31:63.

Senator Roblin: Mr. McLean?

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Fleischmann, I believe. The dilemma is how do Canadian processors, operating under systems of supply management, purchasing their inputs from farmers under a higher price regime, compete with processors in the United States, whose goods will no longer be subject to tariffs in Canada; goods from the United States purchased from farmers in an unregulated, non-supply management system? Mr. Fleischmann said:

... there is no doubt in my mind that, over the ten-year adjustment period if the borders open up, there could be a very ameliorative effect on the way that supply management currently operates. I think the producers will become a lot more sensitive to the power of the open market and become more reasonable ...

Sensitivity and reasonableness in this context mean lower prices and the undermining of the very objective of the supply management system. Mr. Fleischmann, being a former Treasury Board official, was elegant in his phrasing; but Archie McLean of McCain Foods echoed the same thing in a somewhat more blunt manner. He said:

The only way we can survive is by hammering our Canadian wage earners to take lower wages ... McCain Foods will survive and thrive with or without the deal. We can go south, but our factory workers and our farmers cannot. The only way that those farmers will survive under the deal as it is written is if they take lower wages.

An Hon. Senator: They closed the plant in Winnipeg!

Senator Roblin: What is the page number, please?

Senator MacEachen: Page 32:57. This dilemma was put forward and no solution was offered by the government officials. There is no solution!

Senator Frith: Except lower prices.

Senator MacEachen: There is no solution! There it is. It is the hard fact that is going to dog the footsteps of the Prime Minister in every agricultural area as he tries to sell the unsellable to the farmers who are affected by this system.

I ask myself what the effect will be on my province—and there were witnesses from Nova Scotia. Has Senator Murray inquired of Cobi Foods of Hantsport how it will fare under the Free Trade Agreement and how much capital investment will be stimulated in Canada now that this new regime may be in place? Cobi Foods is one of Canada's largest food processors. I wonder if Senator Murray has asked the egg, broiler and chicken producers of the Annapolis Valley how they will fare? They are afraid. Has he inquired of the dairy farmers or the board of directors of Scotsburn Cooperative Services Dairy in eastern Nova Scotia? These are concrete problems that will have to be resolved and answered. Of course, we heard from the President of the United States himself, in his statement of administrative action to Congress when his bill was brought forward, that the pressure will be maintained on Canada to go further in the agricultural field and to reduce further import barriers on poultry, eggs and egg products.

There are concerns in the field of agriculture and they have not been fully addressed in the evidence before the committee by government officials. For example, Mr. McLean of McCain Limited—and those of us who heard him found him to be a highly intelligent and articulate witness—was prepared, when we examined the bill, to debate before the government negotiators to elicit from them the answers to the dilemma which has not yet been dealt with by the government. What is to happen to the food processing industry in Canada and to the farmers who provide the inputs to this industry?

Honourable senators, I have talked about non-tariff barriers, the dispute-settlement mechanism, energy and agriculture; and one could go on to deal with other sectors, including financial services. In fact, I had prepared a section on financial services, but I decided not to proceed further because I have done enough to indicate that there are real concerns; and that the reading of documents, no matter how exalted the source, cannot remove the difficulties that have been brought forward before the Foreign Affairs Committee. They are there. There are energy difficulties that have not been answered and there are agricultural difficulties that have not been answered. The representatives of the farmers of Quebec came before the committee and, if "indignant" is too strong a word, they are certainly "unhappy" at the treatment they expect to receive under the Free Trade Agreement.

That completes my remarks on the substance. However, I think I should say a word about the final portion of Senator Murray's speech on the role of the Senate.

Senator Murray: At last, at last!

Senator MacEachen: On the role of the Senate—

Senator Flynn: On the instructions of Mr. Turner also!

Senator MacEachen: On the role of the Senate I hope to be a bit briefer than Senator Murray was, but, if provoked, I may not succeed.

Senator Flynn: You will if you want to.

Senator MacEachen: Senator Murray made an elaborate argumentation on the Senate and Bill C-130. I stated outside the Senate, following his speech, that his argumentation was based on a fiction. The fiction is that there is about to be a collision between the government, determined to have Bill C-130 passed into law, and the Senate, bent on blocking the bill, to use the favourite government word—blocking.

Senator Flynn: That is what Mr. Turner told you to do.

Senator Perrault: You were not there; how do you know?

Senator Flynn: Were you there?

An Hon. Senator: There he goes. Full flight. Flap your wings! Take off!

Senator Perrault: Big expert, big expert!

• (1610)

Senator MacEachen: Senator Murray's argument was that there would be a collision between a government eager to implement Bill C-130 and a Senate refusing to pass the bill—there would be a “High Noon” scenario. Well, the possibility for such a scenario was put in doubt by the Prime Minister himself when he said that he was greatly attracted to calling an election at the end of four years and that the likely date would be the end of this week, when he would concentrate directly upon that question.

Senator Flynn: That will save your face!

Senator MacEachen: The possibility of that “High Noon” scenario has clearly been put in doubt, and it is my expectation that it will be removed entirely within a relatively short time. So I believe that a discussion of the Senate's role in such a scenario is, at the moment, academic. If I am proven wrong and we are sitting a month from now, grappling still with Bill C-130, having fulminations from John Crosbie, frowns from the Prime Minister and homilies from the Leader of the Government in the Senate, then I will be prepared to defend any action taken by the Liberal majority in the Senate.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: But I am afraid that that exciting possibility will be removed from us by the Prime Minister, who said yesterday that he must have an election because it is appropriate in these circumstances.

Senator Flynn: What about Mr. Turner's instructions?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I want to make a few general comments about Senator Murray—

Senator Perrault: You can make more than a few about him!

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator MacEachen: —and the role of the Senate. We have had some experience over the last four years with the new Senate of Canada—the reformed Senate of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: We heard arguments last Wednesday from Senator Roblin and Senator Murray about our having had, in their view, the audacity to move amendments to government bills.

Senator Perrault: The place is getting riddled with democracy.

Senator Roblin: You never heard me object to that!

Senator MacEachen: We were told by Senator Roblin—

Senator Roblin: Leave my name out of this!

Senator MacEachen: —that the Senate was purely an advisory body. I have always taken the view that the Senate is a legislative body.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I have always taken the view that it derived its legislative authority from the Constitution of Canada, which authority was confirmed as recently as 1982, when the Parliament of Canada and the provinces of this country focused upon the powers of the Senate and left those constitutional powers intact. It is upon those constitutional powers that we rest, and did rest when we exercised responsibly the power to amend bills and send them back to the House of Commons, where a number of our amendments—some would say many—were accepted. The opposition across the way was intense; the government howled with rage, but we persisted, and today that activity by the Senate has been increasingly supported by the Canadian public, who view the Senate as a useful brake upon the excesses of a government with a massive majority in the House of Commons, which it has used without compunction to steamroller a numerically weak opposition.

Honourable senators, we have crossed the Rubicon—or, rather, that bridge on the Rubicon—namely, that the Senate can assert the right responsibly and when necessary to amend government bills.

Senator Flynn: Not always responsibly!

Senator MacEachen: That was resisted by members opposite, who cling to a different view of the Senate. I say that if the Senate, in the future, were to fail to pass a bill, or if it were to block a bill, it would do so under the same authority it exercises to amend bills. It has a legislative role under the Constitution of Canada, and that role is legitimate. For myself, I do not have to ask the permission of the Leader of the Government or that of his chief witness, Mr. Gordon Robertson, to exercise my function, because there is a higher authority; namely—

Senator Flynn: John Turner!

Senator MacEachen: —the fundamental law of Canada. The Leader of the Government went on to say:

In no case in the modern history of our Parliament has the Senate defeated a bill at second reading, nor has it thwarted the will of the elected House by blocking a bill...

Senator Murray: Is clearly in error in making that statement. Has he heard of Bill C-83?

Senator Murray: It is still on the order paper.

Senator MacEachen: Have any senators opposite heard of Bill C-83? That bill has been blocked and will continue to be blocked.

Senator Murray: This is the first time we have heard that.

Senator Frith: Oh, no, it isn't!

Senator MacEachen: Everybody in the Senate knows it is blocked, except Senator Murray. It is buried deep in committee. Its undertaker was Senator Flynn, who led the obsequies and put the bill in committee. And no force—not even Senator Murray—will succeed in achieving the exhumation of that bill.

Honourable senators, that is one modern precedent. It was a government bill and, what is more important, it was adorned by that most sacred of shrouds—a royal recommendation.

Senator Murray: And it was passed unanimously in the House of Commons.

Senator MacEachen: What is more, the bill was not only the will of the House of Commons but it was the unanimous will of the House of Commons. Honourable senators, it has been blocked in the Senate, it will continue to be blocked, and it will not be passed in this Parliament!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: Are you instructing the Internal Economy Committee?

Senator Frith: You are the undertaker who buried the bill!

Senator MacEachen: Why do some senators opposite persist in attempting to sell us on the habits of an old Senate? This is a new Senate, one that is exercising a new legislative role.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: Tell us more about that bill!

● (1620)

Senator MacEachen: Senator Murray called in Gordon Robertson, as his chief witness, in an effort to downgrade the Senate for his short-term political purpose. The use of Mr. Robertson in this case is symptomatic of the love-hate relationship the Tory government has for the bureaucracy. They have made life miserable for the bureaucracy since they took office.

Senator Walker: Nonsense!

Senator MacEachen: The Prime Minister made it absolutely clear what he thought of the bureaucracy before he took office. May I read a number of appreciations of the Prime Minister's of the bureaucracy?

Senator Hastings: By all means.

Senator MacEachen:

We are not going to be bamboozled by a bunch of self-centred, boggy-brained public servants—

Senator Perrault: Don't talk about Robertson that way!

Senator MacEachen:

—who are skilled at manipulating cabinet ministers like marionettes. When we come in, walking softly and carrying a big stick, it's going to cause mass cardiac arrest in the Towers-Of-Power of Never-Never-Land.

Senator Perrault: Wow!

Senator MacEachen:

We're going to give them each a budget and orders to live within it—something they've never dreamed about much less done, and when they can't deliver, they'll be given their pink slip and a pair of running shoes.

Senator Perrault: It is not a bird, not a plane, but it is Superman.

Senator MacEachen: The only public servant I know of who got a pair of running shoes was Derek Burney for that remarkable sprint between the Pearson Building and the Langevin Block for the purpose of saving the Prime Minister's political bacon.

When the bureaucrats can be used to bolster the political fortunes or credibility of the government, they become dear and valuable allies. I find it somewhat cynical that the Leader of the Government, the other day, should rely upon a former bureaucrat, presumably in the category of those boggy-brained public servants, who, out of office, as Gordon is, can still manipulate cabinet ministers like marionettes and succeed in getting them to approve of what he said about the Senate.

I can understand all of you applauding when he condemned us cynical abusers of power on the Liberal side; I can understand that. However, I was appalled when all of you joined in applauding his definition of our Canadian senators, "You and us. You represent no one. You cannot speak for any region. You cannot discharge any function in the Canadian federation."

That is Mr. Robertson's description of you, Senator Murray; of you, Senator Roblin; of you, Senator Flynn; and all of you. It is the description of all of us. We are nobodies. We are non-persons. We are functionless. We ought to drop dead. That is his view.

When I came to the Senate I decided I was not going to drop dead, and I have not.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I do not intend to drop dead and accept the advice of Mr. Gordon Robertson, a former eminent authority, and of a present eminent authority, Senator Murray.

I would pick up on a point made by Senator Stanbury. If I believed, as a Canadian senator, that I represented nobody, that I could not speak for my region, and that I had no function in the Canadian federation, then I would quit.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I would quit. And I believe that if Senator Murray believed that, and had any self-respect, he ought to quit also.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Why do you join with comments of that kind and associate yourself with them in order to downgrade the Senate? Because you are downgrading yourself and all your colleagues. Instead of standing up and declaring what the function of the Senate is, you are agreeing with the meanest of its critics, and I find that quite unacceptable.

I come to another point. On Friday last I was not here, but I found a statement by Senator Murray unacceptable when I read it. Senator Murray, the Leader of the Government, is expected to give us all a tone in this place, and give us leadership, and give us self-respect, and stand up for the Senate. What is his view? "The modern conventions governing the conduct of this appointed body are that we debate, that we deliberate, and that we draw the attention of the other place to any imperfections we believe exist in the bill, and then we accede to the wishes of the elected representatives of the people."

Senator Perrault: Come on!

Senator MacEachen: What is our function according to Senator Murray? We draw attention; we say to the House of Commons, "We draw your attention to this imperfection", and we wait for the first frown, and then we accede.

Senator Murray: The frowns used to come from you when you were Leader of the Government in the other place, and they acceded over there.

Senator MacEachen: I cannot believe that Senator Murray believes that his role is to draw attention to imperfections and then to accede.

Senator Murray came to the Senate approximately nine years ago, when he was 43 years of age. He had 32 years ahead of him. Did he really accept the assignment that for 32 years his job would be to draw attention to, to point the finger, and then, if there is a frown from the other place, to accede, to bow? Senator Murray knows that that is not what we ought to be doing. He knows we ought to take bills and look at them. If we find something wrong in them, we ought to send them back, as we have been doing.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: And send them back again if we want to and if we think it is a good thing. At a certain point we are entitled to do what we are doing with Bill C-83, and that is to block it. That is the most modern convention.

Speaking of modern conventions, you will find them in the last four years, where the legislative authority of the Senate has been exemplified in the conduct that we have supported on this side of the house.

I am not going to say it any more, because we disagree. I believe deep down that Senator Murray cannot think so little of himself that he would spend all his life doing the things that he has assigned to himself.

Senator Murray: I know the difference between the elected and the appointed chambers.

Senator MacEachen: I know the difference between an elected member and a senator. I was an elected member for a long time. I am now a senator, and I know the difference.

Senator Murray: I think you have forgotten. You used to know it, but you do not know it any more.

Senator MacEachen: By golly, if I did not, you would have a hell of a lot more trouble than you are having now!

What are we going to do about Bill C-130? We are ready to let Bill C-130 have second reading now, at this moment.

● (1630)

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: On the second reading motion we will let it go on division, and, if you insist on a roll call, we will abstain and send the bill to committee today. That is what we intend to do.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I think it fair to describe this debate as one of the most interesting, informative and impressive that I have had the opportunity of listening to during my time here.

The speeches that have been made this afternoon, first, by Senator Everett, with whom I heartily agree; and, secondly, from Senator MacEachen, with whom I do not agree quite so heartily, to say nothing of those other senators who have spoken in this debate already, have set a standard that will require our best efforts to approach, let alone to match.

This afternoon we have seen one of the most elegant climb-downs in the history of this institution.

Senator Walker: What is the word?

Senator Roblin: "Climb-down". That happened when we listened to Senator MacEachen tell us what the Liberal Party in this Senate intended to do with this bill, because what he said this afternoon bears only a passing relationship with what he has said previously in other places—

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: —about what the Liberal Party would do with this bill, and what the public and this country obviously expect the Liberal Party of the Senate to do with this bill.

Senator Frith: Debate it and send it to committee!

Senator Perrault: That is exactly what we are doing!

Senator Roblin: It expects the Senate, under the aegis of Senator MacEachen—

Senator Frith: Exactly what we were doing a week ago!

Senator Roblin: I refrained from heckling my honourable friend. May I request the same courtesy from him?

Senator Frith: You may make that request. You certainly may.

Senator Roblin: I make that request; I hope that it will be honoured.

What Senator MacEachen had to say was a slight variation, if I may put it that way, of what he has been saying elsewhere about this bill. He led the country to believe that the Liberal Party in this Senate would ensure that the bill did not leave this house before there was a general election.

Senator Perrault: That is right.

Senator Roblin: Now he has said, "That is still true, but what I really meant to say was that the Prime Minister will call an election before we get through with it; therefore, I will not be called on to make good on my policy and my word."

Senator Guay: There is no election!

Senator Roblin: That is what he is saying to us now.

Senator Frith: No; he is not.

Senator Perrault: He is not saying that at all!

Senator Flynn: Yes, he is.

Senator Roblin: I do not think that that has any connection at all to what he said previously.

It is interesting to trace the pronouncements of my honourable friend and others on the question of the role of the Senate in this matter. I too propose to spend some time this afternoon to do so.

Tracing these pronouncements is an interesting task, because it deals with what the reaction of the Liberal Party, led by Senator MacEachen in this house, is on Bill C-130.

On July 7, speaking to Hugh Winsor, he said:

The Liberal majority in the Senate will not block the federal Government's legislation to implement the free trade agreement with the United States—

He said further that:

I would think not twice, but 20 times before I would recommend the Senate kill the trade bill in one plunge of the dagger. If we kill the bill in September,— and it is September now

—there would not only be a trade issue but I think a constitutional issue.

No blocking, no killing, no thwarting of the clearly expressed wish of the elected chamber in the Canadian Parliament.

Not long afterwards, but quite soon afterwards, came the instructions. My friends opposite do not like the word "instruction". They want me to use a word like "request". Well, I do not mind using the word "request"; it still means "instruction". It came in the form of a request from Mr. Turner to Senator MacEachen to refuse passage of Bill C-130 until after a general election.

How did Senator MacEachen react to that suggestion, that request, that instruction from his leader? He "agreed to withhold passage until there is an election."

Well, he still, by that casuistical mastery that he has of the English language, thinks that he skated himself onside, because he was quite clear not to say when that election would come. Indeed, how could he possibly know? He had to make the assumption that that election would not come before the Senate was forced to deal with the bill that is before us now.

Of course, he adds—and I am surprised that he did not say it today, because I was expecting him to—that, even if he did all those terrible things that he is talking about, and withheld Senate action on this bill until after the general election, he would not be killing the bill. We have heard that from Senator Frith ad nauseam. Of course it is killing the bill. It is not just a delay. The heights of casuistry have been reached, to say that. "Delay" means a general election. All right, a "general election" means the bill dies. Everyone must admit the truth, namely, that when that happens the bill is dead.

Senator Flynn: Sure!

Senator Roblin: It is dead in the Senate and in the House of Commons.

Senator Flynn: It is dead in Parliament.

Senator Roblin: It is dead in Parliament. It no longer has a parliamentary existence. We have plenty of evidence that that is exactly what the Liberal Party intends to do.

Senator Stewart, who is a bit of a guru on these matters, had it right. He said, "Mulroney foregoes the bill." How more explicit can you get? Senator MacEachen, supported on some occasions by Senator Frith, opposed both reason and truth by maintaining that delay does not kill the bill.

When Parliament dissolves, the bill dies. If there is an election before the Senate deals with Bill C-130, its passage in the House of Commons counts for nought. The bill is dead and it has to start all over again.

I suggest to you that, when Senator MacEachen accepted this instruction from his leader to make sure that the bill did not pass before there was a general election, he knew precisely what he was doing. He neither intends nor expects, for example, that the bill will be revived in the next Parliament. So, if the bill is not passed in this Parliament, as his own leader has said, it is dead.

There is no way that he can square his statement of July 8 with his subsequent actions in capitulating to the request that he received.

Senator Guay: Call an election!

Senator Roblin: "He proposed a policy, and we agreed." Mr. Turner did the proposing, Mr. MacEachen did the agreeing. That is what he said, as reported in the Citizen on July 21.

It is clear for all to see where the strings were pulled. Senator MacEachen had no intention whatsoever of adopting this attitude toward this bill when he began to consider it. He did so only after he had received his instructions from the other place.

Now he talks about the duty of the Senate to consider, to amend and to change. Now he says that we exercise this great supervisory function in this house because he received instructions from his leader in the other place as to what to do about it. That is what has happened, and that is why he has taken this deliberate act, which, if the normal course of events comes to pass, will mean that this bill will not receive the consent of this Parliament.

What has happened here is obviously a partisan move. I do not, as a general rule, object to partisan moves, because parties are a fact of life in this house and in other places. But the Liberal leader in this house has swallowed himself and his party within two weeks because his political master in another place asked him to do so.

I think that is demeaning to the Senate. If he objects to what civil servants have to say about the Senate, that the Senate is not an institution of any consequence and we should be ashamed to be here, well, I rather think that that action on the part of my honourable friend is demeaning to the Senate.

Instead of exercising that right of sober second thought that we hear about, that impartial, detached and relatively unpolitical approach to questions, we find that, no, the Liberal Party in this house is responding to the request of its leader in the other place to do here what the leader in the other place could not do or did not have the power to do—and may never have the power to do, so far as we can see.

My honourable friend is displaying a shocking lack of candour when he does not tell the members of this house why he has taken the attitude he has taken and why he has made the statements he has made. For my friend to exercise his arabesque, as he has on the floor of the Senate today, and climb down from the pole on which he had immolated himself is indeed a remarkable performance, and I congratulate him on it. It is almost as good as some of the other things he said in his speech today, with which I must say I intend to take some exception.

● (1640)

Honourable senators, I may say a word about the role of the Senate. I do not think that what I have to say about the Senate comes as news to anyone, because, ever since I came here, I have been concerned about the legitimacy of an appointed body dealing with matters that come before it which have received the approval of the elected body.

Senator Frith: Others do it. There are things that come before us that have not had approval—

Senator Roblin: I must say that my honourable friend cannot resist sticking his oar in from time to time. But it has caught a crab this time, and my honourable friend ought just to keep his mouth shut until I am through with these things.

Senator Frith: You did it while my honourable friend here was speaking.

Senator Roblin: He mentioned my name, that is why. He linked me with those who object to the Senate's amending bills. I do not object to the Senate's amending bills; I never have.

Senator MacEachen: That is a conversion.

Senator Roblin: No, it is not a conversion. It is a plain fact on the record, and my honourable friend knows it very well. He also knows that, if he had any of that milk of human kindness I occasionally discern in him, he ought to exempt me from that sweeping statement, saying that I oppose the amending of bills in the Senate.

Senator Flynn: He certainly will not be able to do that.

Senator Roblin: I am not sure whether he will or not. However, we should reflect—and this is probably as good a time as any—on exactly what the Senate is and what it is not. From that we might draw some conclusions as to what we might fittingly and suitably do. The one thing I know about the Senate is that it is not a democratic institution. That has to be made as a clear and absolutely incontrovertible statement: This is not a democratic institution. There is no parliamentary democracy that I know of that is encumbered with an institution such as this, which, in my opinion, has certainly become anachronistic as regards its present role in the Parliament of Canada.

Senator Guay: Why did you accept the nomination, then?

Senator Roblin: I joined the Senate because I hoped to do good work here—and my honourable friend does good work here.

Senator Guay: Prime Minister Trudeau put you here.

Senator Roblin: Prime Minister Trudeau put me here by inviting me to join the Senate, and my honourable friend got here in the same way. I have never disguised the fact, and I am not ashamed of the fact.

Senator Guay: I thought you were.

Senator Roblin: I am not a bit, and I say that this body has a role to play; but the question is: What is that role? That is where the difference of opinion will surely arise, because my honourable friend has to admit that there is no parliamentary body—at least that I know of—that is constituted on what some would assume to be—and I am among them—the dubious principle of patronage appointment. It is unthinkable that a body of this kind, unique in the world so far as I know, would presume to introduce a wrecking amendment, as they call it in the House of Lords, or introduce amendments that would nullify a bill or, even worse, take such action as would prevent the bill from passing after it had received the appropriate consideration of this body. It seems to me that, with all the fine words that we have heard this afternoon about the role of the Senate, we are still not an elected body and we are still not the people's representatives, and we must clearly keep that in mind when we decide what we are going to do.

Shades of the House of Lords! In 1911 the House of Lords did not enjoy the power that the Senate of Canada does today. In 1911, when the House of Lords defied the Commons, the Prime Minister threatened to appoint enough new lords in order to override the recalcitrant majority in that house. However, that cannot be done here. There are a few senators that can be appointed, but not enough today. This body has more power than the House of Lords had in 1911, and in my opinion no one thinks that that is really appropriate for Canada today.

While we have a certain capacity, while we have a right to be here, while the Constitution has clothed us with certain authority, and while those who invented the Senate had certain ideas for us, the fact is that the Senate represents no one in any democratic fashion. It does not. The Senate is responsible to no one in any parliamentary sense. That is perfectly true, and it is invulnerable in its present numbers to any reform with respect to the creation of new senators.

Senator MacEachen: Tell us about the Supreme Court.

Senator Roblin: There is no existing combination of forces that can hold this body accountable for what it does. Keep that in mind.

Senator MacEachen: Tell us about the Supreme Court!

Senator Roblin: If we keep within our role in the Constitution, my friend knows perfectly well that there is no one who can call this body to account.

Honourable senators, in that set of circumstances, how do we exercise those powers? There are things that we should do. The first thing that we should do is press to reform this body. I have heard that the Liberal Party wants an elected Senate. If that does not mean that they have doubts about the political legitimacy of the present one, what on earth does it mean? I know that this party has plans to reform the Senate, and we know that that is on the top of the list as far as constitutional changes are concerned. I wonder why we, as senators, have not taken some more active role in providing thought and input into the construction of a new Senate in this country.

However, honourable senators, while we are here, and while we have the powers that we have, which, as I say, are absolute in certain respects, how do we exercise those powers? First of all, I think we should exercise them. We have a duty to conduct debates like this one. We had a duty to instruct the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs to look into free trade, and I have the transcripts of every meeting of that committee right in front of me now. We have a duty to hold public hearings and to have people come before us and tell us what they think about things. We also have a duty to make up our own minds as to what we think is right. If we think that the bill before us is not a good bill, we have the right—and I think the duty—to amend it.

I have to remember that, when circumstances were changed, and when my honourable friend opposite was still in the House of Commons, Senator Frith sat on this side of the house, and there was no great enthusiasm on the part of the Liberal majority in the Senate in those days to do anything to interfere with the bills that came before us. Mind you, there were exceptions. There were some exceptions.

Senator Frith: That was the old Senate of Senator Murray; this is now the modern Senate.

Senator Flynn: You woke up!

Senator Roblin: I remember well, through all of these interesting conversions that we see on the other side, that, when they were on this side of the house, they were remarkably reluctant to interfere with any government bill. They did occasionally, but they also did their fair amount of bowing, and they bowed just as low as anyone else did.

I remember well a comment of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition when he was a member in the other place. My, how the Senate improves upon acquaintance. When my honourable friend was over there, what did he think of this institution here? Why, that fellow Robertson had better look out, because my honourable friend really did better than Robertson in denegrating the role of the Senate. In short, my honourable friend was not what you would call one of our enthusiastic friends in the other place. So, as I say, the Senate improves with acquaintance. My friend thinks a lot more of it now, and he thinks a lot more of it because he is now in a position to do here what his friends cannot do in the other place.

That, honourable senators, is what is wrong; that is what is undemocratic. My honourable friend is trying to do here the things that he could not do, and his friends cannot do in the other place, and he is using the Constitution, which gives him a right to do it. He has a clear, undoubted constitutional right to do it, but not the moral authority to do it.

Senator Frith: Another preacher!

Senator Roblin: I know now why Senator Frith supports an elected Senate; because he knows perfectly well that he does not have the moral authority to do what he is doing now.

Senator Frith: Bishop Roblin!

Senator Roblin: He knows perfectly well that his parliamentary role, as he seeks to exercise it, has no moral authority.

Senator Frith: And Archbishop Murray! Thank you, Your Grace.

Senator Roblin: Well, there we are.

Senator Frith: We await the ring-kissing ceremony.

Senator Roblin: So much for the role of the Senate. My honourable friend can fulfil that role honourably, but he cannot, at the end of the day, say that on a major piece of legislation he is not going to allow the House of Commons to have its way. Bill C-83 was brought in with great effect today. What is that bill? It is a tuppenny-ha'penny bill about how much they intend to pay committee chairmen in the House of Commons. That's what it's about!

● (1650)

Senator Frith: A big truckload of ha'pennies.

Senator Roblin: Why does my honourable friend—

Senator Frith: A freight train of ha'pennies.

An Hon. Senator: Order!

An Hon. Senator: It's like Fanny the preacher!

Senator Flynn: Be careful, Royce, you're going too far!

Senator Roblin: I will be in great trouble with Senator Flynn over this, but I shall tell you why these brave men on the other side intend to deny the government Bill C-83; it is because it does not provide any money for Senate chairmen. That is why they do not want to pass it.

Senator Stewart: That is not correct. You're wrong!

Senator Roblin: That's why they won't pass it.

Senator Stewart: You're absolutely wrong!

Senator Roblin: In the minds of some, it is true. I excuse my honourable friend, as he is the type that it is easy to excuse.

Senator Flynn: I agree with that.

Senator Roblin: However, I want to say to others here that there is that thought in the backs of the minds of some, and I would not be at all surprised if it was the majority. That is why they do not want the bill to go through.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: Never mind!

Senator Roblin: There, you have it.

Senator Frith: Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men?

Senator Flynn: Senator McElman and I have put our position clearly.

Senator Hastings: Who is speaking?

Senator Stewart: You're absolutely wrong!

Senator Flynn: Well, you're absolutely wrong!

Senator Guay: You've been wrong for a long time!

Senator Flynn: Ask Senator McElman.

Senator Roblin: I have obviously touched a sore point with Senator Stewart. I hereby say that—Senator Stewart: Because you are wrong!

Senator Roblin: —I absolve Senator Stewart and those who think like him freely without any ulterior motive of any kind—Senator Frith: And do you absolve Senator Flynn?

Senator Roblin: —as dictated by pure reason and political sagacity.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: Absolve Senator Flynn!

Senator Flynn: Why?

Senator Stewart: If you want to withdraw your statement, do so simply and honestly, rather than in that snide way!

Senator Roblin: Why certainly. If I have offended Senator Stewart in any way, I withdraw that comment. I do not bow; that is left to senators on the other side, but I withdraw it unreservedly. My honourable friend is a man of principle, and I am the first to recognize it.

Senator Frith: And you don't think that any of us others are?

Senator Hastings: We are not principled?

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: What about Senator Flynn? Is he a man of principle?

Senator Flynn: Why would you doubt that?

Senator Roblin: If I have hurt his feelings, or if I have hurt anyone's feelings, I would be glad to apologize, but I do not think I would be departing from my judgment for one minute.

Senator MacEachen: Does the honourable senator not agree with me that Bill C-83 is an attempt at an unprincipled raid on the people's treasury?

Senator Murray: He wanted to get in on it, though!

Senator Roblin: I have seen one or two unprincipled raids on the people's treasury that are under consideration in the Senate at the present time; so I shall not comment on any invitations of that kind.

Senator Guay: It would be hard to do so.

Senator Roblin: You know what I am talking about.

Bill C-130 is an interesting piece of legislation. My comments on this bill have been entirely preempted. Senator Balfour gave my speech, Senator Everett gave my speech, and Senator Doyle gave my speech. I do not know what is left for me to say.

Senator Frith: Make us an offer!

Senator Roblin: With that encouragement, I think I will make you an offer. I do not look at this bill in the apocalyptic way in which my honourable friend, the Leader of the Government, does. And I really do not think that any elements of political hari-kari—

Senator Frith: Here comes the sweet talk!

Senator Roblin: —are enclosed within the bill at all. I think it is quite different from that point of view, and I think that, while the bill is not perfect, it is defensible. I think that, while the Free Trade Agreement is not perfect, it is defensible. I think it is no argument against free trade to say that the other fellow got something out of it too. It is no argument whatsoever, because it takes two to make a deal. If two parties do not see something in the arrangement, there will not be a deal.

So you trade. That is what you do when you make these agreements. You trade, and, because you have the whole panorama of economic activity to deal with, you are able to make offsets in one place to make up for losses in another place.

The Free Trade Agreement is an agreement to deal with a number of matters—some of which you make points on, some of which you lose points on, but on the whole you are better ahead. That is the most you can expect from any free trade agreement. If you expect any more, you are, I think, living in "cloud cuckoo land". You have to quite understand that a free trade agreement is not a one-way street. The other fellow has to see some good in it; we have to see some good in it; and it would be most improbable if such an agreement were to eliminate or to wipe off the slate all the problems that exist between the two nations, because they could not do it. The fact of the matter is that "Free Trade Agreement" is probably a misnomer. If you called it a "freer trade agreement", you would be better off, because there are great swatches of economic activity and of public interest that are not covered in this Free Trade Agreement at all.

I see the agreement as a continuation. I do not see it as something new that we suddenly took out of the sky. I do not see it as a solution to all our problems. I see it as a good step forward. I see it as a continuation of over 25 years of free trade enhancement with the United States of America. It is not complete free trade. It is not a customs union. There is no merging of our economies. We are able to deal with third parties on our own terms, without reference to the Free Trade Agreement. It is not a document that enshrines policy harmonization of the kind that is worrisome to so many people in this country. It is a continuation to freer trade, and it remains conditional free trade, just like we have had in this country for the past 25 years.

Some areas have been left out. They have been discussed here. They include transportation, cultural interests, agriculture—and I suppose I will have to come back to that after a while—supply management, income stabilization, price supports and so on—in fact, so many of the great panorama of agricultural policies adopted by the nations of the world these days are not in the Free Trade Agreement. They are excluded. We have tiptoed around some of the issues involved with agriculture. Certainly we are not dealing with them all; nor can we, nor should we, until the GATT arrangements are clear.

We have not done away with investment review. In fact, it is estimated that 75 per cent of our non-financial assets are still subject to the investment review procedure. Social policies, the futures of which are so important to all of us and about which so much doubt has been raised in the minds of many, in my opinion are not included in this Free Trade Agreement. Domestic dumping and countervail laws, as discussed at great length by Senator MacEachen—and I expect to say something about them—are not in here. Regional development programs are still in place. So there are large areas of concern that are still outside the Free Trade Agreement.

New features of the agreement are, of course, the dispute-settlement mechanism and a number of services—financial, tourism and government procurement. These have now been approached, and the practice of sideswiping Canadian interests has been eliminated.

What I would like to point out to the house is that almost all of the new items in the Free Trade Agreement that arouse so much concern on the part of my honourable friends opposite are the very same issues that are before the GATT. The GATT is dealing with services; the GATT is dealing with agriculture; the GATT is dealing with energy. They want new arrangements on these items. If my honourable friends opposite support the GATT—and they say they do; they say that it is the way to go, they had better get used to talking to the GATT about these issues of services, and even dispute-settlement mechanisms and agriculture, because they will all come up. I can tell you that negotiating these issues with the 97 nations of the GATT will be no picnic, and I think you will find that the Americans are pretty good negotiating partners compared to running up against these other issues with the GATT. If you believe in the GATT and if you want the GATT to succeed, you had better get used to talking to the GATT about these issues that so concern Senator MacEachen. You will have to get used to talking about agricultural policies, the services that have been mentioned, the dispute-settlement mechanism and all these things, because they will be on the table with the GATT.

However, it is my impression that, in spite of all the sincere, well-intentioned opinions—which I respect—of people who have concerns about this agreement as going beyond the economic realm; in spite of those wide-spread public concerns, which will be expressed in the debate that will undoubtedly take place, I think most Canadians will conclude that the Free Trade Agreement is really a question of economics. I think they feel that overall the Free Trade Agreement will be positive. There are problems—some of them have been mentioned today—but, overall, the agreement will be positive. There is solid ground for that feeling; that public feeling which I believe will be manifested shortly in this country rests on solid ground, because Canadians know that for 25 years the economies of Canada and the United States have become increasingly intertwined. It is not only that tariffs have come down but a wide range of other economic activities have been intertwined, and, as a result, bilateral trade has exploded.

● (1700)

I believe yesterday Senator Doyle illustrated the picture for Ontario. There has been a phenomenal explosion of trade between Canada and the United States in the province of Ontario in the last ten years. Why? It is mostly due to the Auto Pact.

As a result of that bilateral trade, which is now the wonder of the world, mirabilis munde, the trade relationship between Canada and the United States, in volume, is the largest trade relationship in the world, both ways. It is the wonder of the world. It seems to me that we must reflect upon that when we deal with our economic relations with that country.

Canada, its workers and consumers, has been better off. Take the Auto Pact—everyone takes the Auto Pact, so I might as well take it too—conditional free trade in cars and trucks is a free trade agreement that is just as conditional as the one we are negotiating today. It has been the powerhouse of Ontario's prosperity. It has given Canadian autoworkers a high, if not the highest, manufacturing wage in Canada. A record of increasingly freer trade between Canada and the United States is the strongest possible evidence that we have benefited economically.

While this economic cooperation has been proceeding, Canadian social policy and Canadian cultural development—the personality of the Canadian nation—have seen an efflorescence of growth, of development and of the establishment of levels of confidence that we have never seen before in this country. Our social network, unemployment insurance, hospital insurance, medical care, regional equalization—all these great social policies came into existence and our cultural personalities became more expressive than ever before while this economic cooperation was going on.

We not only had the will to do these things to make a distinctive Canada, with the rights of the citizen recognized as they are now, but, honourable senators, we had the means to do it. The establishment of our Canadian lifestyle, our social policy, our culture and our national identity was not hurt by trade; it was helped by trade, because it made us more prosperous. I say to this house that culture and caring do not thrive on poverty: they thrive on ample means, and the trade policy that this country has followed in the last 25 years with reference to the United States has helped to give us those means to support those policies.

Free trade in cars has not made Oshawa workers any less Canadian than Winnipeg workers, but it has made them much more prosperous. I want to see that prosperity spread across this nation. Yet, contrary to that experience, which is the experience of other countries that have been in free trade groups, the cry goes up that our sovereignty is on the block. The cry goes up that the Free Trade Agreement will make Canada a colony of the United States, deprive us of our sovereignty and of our right to run our own affairs.

Free trade processes over the past 25 years have not done so. Indeed, it was precisely during that period of increasing economic cooperation that our social policies significantly diverged and deviated from the American way of doing things. Trade and prosperity have given us the means to build our own country, with our own structures, so that we do not have to follow the example of other nations with which we are closely associated and connected. Our cultural personality has been enhanced and, to make the assurance doubly sure, we all know by this time, surely, cultural and social policies are deliberately excluded from the Free Trade Agreement. They remain our own. They remain our own to develop and to expand as our people wish.

The Liberal Party today, I suggest to you, senators, personifies two contradictory but curiously reinforcing strands in the Canadian psyche. One is a feeling of inferiority—the feeling that we cannot measure up; that the challenge is too great; that the Yankees will get the better of us; and that, in a fair and equal contest, they will surely hornswoggle this innocent and rather simple Canadian. It is a feeling of inferiority. The second is a feeling of superiority. We are proud of our history and the fact that we have not had a revolution in this country. We are proud of our cultural activities, which are reaching such a flourishing state these days, and our social arrangements, which, in North America, are particularly our own—our very own ethos. We regard those as illustrative of the superiority of the Canadian way of doing things.

Yet, while these two strands, inferiority and superiority, appear to contradict each other, in fact, they feed on one another. Neither of those two sentiments, in my opinion, do us all that much credit, either as individuals or as a nation, and they lead, I suggest, to what I would call “closet anti-Americanism”. I am not anti-American; I am not pro-American; but I am a Canadian. We will hold our own with these Yankee traders. We are not superior, but we are different and we cherish our differences and we will maintain our differences.

Senator MacEachen: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: To that end, a free trade agreement is not an obstacle; it is an opportunity. It is certainly an opportunity in my part of Canada. Our livestock producers like it. My friend tried to cast doubt on some of the emotions that wracked the breast of the agricultural community in western Canada, or, perhaps, to underline those aspects of it which give him some cause for thought. Our livestock producers like it, and they produce half of the agriculture produced in western Canada. They see the fact that the non-tariff barriers, which have been so irritating and so exasperating, will now be struck down and that the beef and pork trade can proceed without the harassment from Americans that we have had in the past.

Some of our mining people like it. The uranium miners like it very much. The Canadian Wheat Board has been confirmed, in spite of some fears to the contrary. The American wheat farmers are furious about that, and I suppose they have every right to be so, because, when our high protein wheat can get into their market when the subsidies are equal—and heaven knows when that will happen—certainly a lot of their millers will find it appealing. I can understand why they are concerned.

Canadian manufacturers that upgrade products to a higher level of manufacture are happy about this agreement, because the burden of modern tariffs is not on natural products; they mostly flow freely; the tariff burden is on manufactured goods, and the more highly manufactured the goods are the higher the tariff. Those will come down and our western manufacturers, including metal refiners, will be glad to see the end of those high tariffs. The manufactured goods in the west will have some opportunity of flowing to the United States in the way the Auto Pact has in Ontario.

Honourable senators, all is not rosy; adjustments are called for in the food producing industry, to which my honourable friend alluded. I was interested in his remark about Mr. McLean, because I heard Mr. McLean and I do not want to say this in any unkind way, because he cannot get at me.

Senator Frith: Well, don't then.

Senator Roblin: He can contradict me.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I am sorry to interrupt Senator Roblin, but I would point out that we have Royal Assent scheduled for 5.30 this afternoon.

Senator Roblin: I will not hold up Royal Assent. I move that I be allowed to continue my discussion of this matter on another occasion.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Roblin, debate adjourned.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

QUESTION PERIOD

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED USE OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS BY IRAQ AGAINST KURDS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, on September 8 I drew the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate to an appeal by Amnesty International to the United Nations, wherein they deplored the systematic and deliberate policy of liquidating Kurds by utilizing chemical weapons, which was contrary to the Geneva Protocol of 1925.

Apparently, since that time the United States Congress has taken steps to invoke embargoes against the Government of Iraq. Other governments, such as Britain, have issued strong statements deploring these acts taken by the Government of Iraq. It is my understanding that the Government of Iraq is a signatory to the Geneva Convention of 1925. In these circumstances, I should like to know whether the Government of Canada has taken any steps whatsoever to mobilize the international community against this obscene policy.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the day after my friend asked his question the Iraqi Ambassador was informed, in the strongest possible terms, of our government's profound concern over reports of renewed use of chemical weapons and the overall treatment of Kurds by the Iraqi government.

My colleague Mr. Clark, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, informs me that these reports are being investigated on an urgent basis. Mr. Clark states further that Iraq risks losing completely the support and approval it had earned for its part in ending hostilities with Iran.

Canada has repeatedly condemned the use of chemical weapons in the Iraq-Iran war and we have publicly deplored Iraq's use of these weapons. These reports of further use of chemical weapons underline, in our view, the importance of concluding negotiations at the Geneva Conference on Disarmament for a comprehensive and verifiable global chemical weapons ban, including destruction of existing stocks and a prohibition of future weapons production.

Canada reiterates its support for UN Security Council Resolution 620 of August 26, which requested the Secretary General to investigate the use of chemical weapons contrary to the 1925 Geneva Protocol.

Senator Grafstein: Does the Government of Canada intend to take steps similar to those taken by the Senate of the United States to invoke sanctions against the Government of Iraq?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I shall take that question as notice and ask for a reply from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

FISHERIES

PROVISION OF FISH TO VICTIMS OF NATURAL DISASTERS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, each day we read in the local newspapers of the catastrophe in Bangladesh. Today we hear about the terrible hurricane in Jamaica. We hear each day about the starving people of Ethiopia and Africa. At the same time as these disasters are happening, Canada is providing financial assistance to those countries in which people are starving to death or in which people are dealing with the aftermath of a natural disaster.

● (1410)

I am thinking of the 25 million people in Bangladesh—almost the population of Canada—who now have to live in homes surrounded by water. One hundred thousand people—the population of Prince Edward Island—are now homeless, and a thousand others have starved to death.

In Atlantic Canada the fishermen are having a difficult time trying to survive, with herring priced at eight cents a pound. I am told that, of the herring population, half are male and half female, and that it is only the females that are bought, for their roe, by Japan. The males are either processed into fish meal or used as fertilizer.

Would the Government of Canada consider paying a bonus of four cents a pound to the fishermen so that that fish could be pickled, filleted, or whatever, and sent to those countries in which people are starving to death? That would eliminate this tremendous wastage while, at the same time, increasing employment on Prince Edward Island and helping these unfortunate people in the world.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my colleague the Honourable Monique Landry, Minister for External Relations, has been in touch with the Bangladesh High Commission here in Ottawa and has announced, on behalf of the government, various forms of assistance to Bangladesh because of the terrible circumstances in which the people of that country find themselves. We are also giving a positive response to the appeals from the International Red Cross.

As to the particular suggestion of the honourable senator, I will convey that to my colleague; if she has a comment to make on it, or a further report, I shall convey that to the Senate.

JAMAICA

HURRICANE RELIEF—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As I think we all know, Hurricane Gilbert, which passed over the Caribbean and is now in the Gulf of Mexico, has been rated as the worst hurricane in history. It has passed over the Island of Jamaica. Today all communications are out, although there may be some slight ability to transmit a telex to that island. Generally speaking, though, all telephone lines and power lines are down and roads are blocked. The situation is as desperate for that country as any country has ever experienced.

I wonder if the government, in the time it has now had—a couple of days—has actually prepared any plan to get some assistance to that island. The people of Jamaica need assistance for every want a great disaster like this can create. There is very little potable clean water, there is no electricity, there are no communications, and the roadways are blocked. A great deal of planning and a great deal of assistance are required to make any impact on a catastrophe of this magnitude.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I appreciate the point raised by Senator Molson. It is correct to say that communications have been effectively interrupted between Jamaica and the rest of the world. Indeed, the last report I received was that we had not yet re-established our communications with our High Commission in Jamaica.

I can tell the honourable senator that a Canadian Armed Forces aircraft is leaving for Jamaica tomorrow with telecommunications equipment and other emergency supplies. That will happen tomorrow. I have some further information in French.

[Senator Bonnell.]

[Translation]

The Pan-American Health Organization and the American Government have already sent teams to measure the extent of the assistance required.

[English]

I will read the note that was provided to me by my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He confirms that our direct communications with our own High Commission have not yet been re-established.

[Translation]

Therefore, we do not yet have details on the extent and nature of the disaster. However, we have found out indirectly that the hurricane caused very serious damage and that considerable assistance will be required to offset the immediate and long-term impact of the hurricane on Jamaica's economy.

The Pan-American Health Organization and the American Government have already sent teams to evaluate the extent of the assistance required.

The Canadian Government and people have already let the Jamaican Government know that they are ready to come to Jamaica's assistance together with other interested countries and institutions. Canada intends to play an active role in the rehabilitation and reconstruction efforts that are now beginning. A Canadian Armed Forces plane will leave for Jamaica tomorrow with telecommunications and emergency relief equipment on board.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to two questions. I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—PUBLIC HEARINGS ON IMPACT ON FISHERIES OF PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING—ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in reply to a question raised in the Senate on September 7 and 13, 1988, by the Honourable John B. Stewart, regarding Transport—Northumberland Strait—Public Hearings on Impact on Fisheries of Proposed Fixed Crossing—Environmental Study.

(The answer follows:)

The decision making process for the Fixed Link has been published in all the major Atlantic newspapers. The process consists of receiving proposals for a Fixed Link Crossing from several private sector organizations. These proposals will be reviewed and any environmentally dangerous proposals will be thrown out. The sponsors of each valid proposal will then have to submit a complete environmental study which will be reviewed by the Provincial and the Federal Governments including some eight environmental regulatory agencies.

By the middle of October, public information sessions will be opened for all interested parties to review both the project and the environmental study related to that project.

The Minister of Public Works will call for public environmental hearings if there is a significant environmental impact as decided by the Department of Environment and their experts both provincially and federally.

TRANSPORT

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—PUBLIC HEARINGS ON IMPACT ON FISHERIES OF PROPOSED FIXED CROSSING—ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I also have the response to a question on the same subject raised in the Senate on September 13, 1988, by the Honourable M. Lorne Bonnell.

(The answer follows:)

A reference to the Minister of the Environment will be considered after the environmental evaluations have been made public and if significant environmental impact is expected.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION BILL

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

On the Order:

Third reading of the Bill C-205, An Act to protect heritage railway stations.—(Honourable Senator Turner).

Hon. Charles Turner: Honourable senators, when this bill was before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, I was not aware that there was a list of further witnesses scheduled for next Tuesday. Because these witnesses have deep financial concerns about safety, I suggest that the bill be referred back to that committee for further study. Consequently, I move—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Turner, are you moving third reading?

Senator Turner: I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, that Bill C-205 be referred back to committee.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by Honourable Senator Murray, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, subject to correction, I think someone should move third reading, and then a motion should be put that it be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, for some reason this order stands in my name on the scroll. In actual fact, Senator Turner was the mover of this bill. It was he who proposed it for second reading, and presumably it is he who will move it for third reading when and if he so desires.

It is a private member's bill. It came from the other place in the name of Mr. Gordon Taylor. Senator Turner undertook to sponsor it in this place, and the bill stands in his name. I might say at the same time that there is some urgency, according to requests from the Heritage Canada group, which is most anxious that the railway stations of Canada be declared heritage property. Of course, honourable senators are familiar with that. Whether they wish to refer it back to the committee is entirely up to them.

● (1420)

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I understand that the problem is exactly as has been described by Senator Doody. In addition, some groups opposed to the bill—

Senator Doody: The railways.

Senator Frith: Yes, the railways—were not heard by the committee. Our committee acknowledges that it did not hear the position of those opposed to this bill. There is some urgency to this matter, however. If I may, I will suggest that Senator Turner move that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the committee. We can make that kind of instruction. In that way the other side will be given an opportunity to be heard. Perhaps we could set a date by which the bill should come back to the Senate so that we will not unduly hold it up.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I think one fact has been overlooked here, and that is that the clerk of the committee gave undertakings to certain people that they would be allowed to appear before the committee next week. Some of those people left the city with that understanding.

When the matter was before the Transport Committee, the only person giving evidence was the sponsor of the bill, which was, I think, a most difficult situation. I think it is unfortunate that this problem was not brought to the attention of the members of the committee when they were considering the motion to report the bill without amendment. Under those circumstances, in my view, it would be only right to allow these other witnesses to be heard. They will have some knowledge about safety matters on railways. There are potential problems with stations that may be designated heritage railway stations, because decrepit conditions may have arisen over time. Think of what such conditions might mean to a high-speed train passing through. I believe such evidence would be of interest to the committee. I think these are the sorts of people who could explain potential problems to honourable senators.

Senator Flynn: But we have reached the stage of third reading.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I think that for the record it should be said—and I know they have not had an opportunity to be heard in the Senate—that these people have had an opportunity to be heard on this matter before a committee of the other place. I am not suggesting that that should influence our decision here in the Senate. I simply want to make it clear that the railways have been heard on this matter in the other place, and in saying this I am not suggesting that they be denied their right to be heard in the Senate.

Senator Sinclair: I think that if senators look at the record they will find that the representatives of the short lines were not heard in the committee of the other place. They were not even contacted.

Senator Doody: Who were not heard?

Senator Sinclair: Representatives of the short lines.

Senator Doody: Oh, the short lines. I am sorry; the terminology escaped me for a moment in the course of the dialogue between Senators Sinclair and Turner.

Senator Sinclair: It is a well-known term. I am sure the honourable senator understands that there are long lines and short lines.

Senator Doody: There is no one more aware of just how short lines can get, unless he comes from Newfoundland.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Has Senator Doody moved the third reading of the bill?

Senator Doody: It is Senator Turner's bill, Your Honour; it has nothing to do with me.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I shall first put the motion before the Senate.

It is moved by the Honourable Senator Turner, seconded by the Honourable Senator Stewart, that this bill be read the third time now. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: He did not make that motion.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I should like to speak to the motion.

Senator Turner: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Sinclair:

That Bill C-205, to protect heritage railway stations, be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for further study.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I rise to reject the motion that has been made, and I do so in the interests of the Heritage Canada organization and the tens of thousands of people who have a very real interest in the entire question of preserving railway property, especially railway stations.

I recognize that the railroad—namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway—did not appear before a Senate committee. As Senator Doody has pointed out, the railway companies did appear before the House of Commons committee. The CN had no objection; VIA Canada had no objection; the CPR objected. They objected on the basis that the bill was redundant, that it was covered by the Railway Act. From what I gather, that is not correct, because the Canadian Transport Commission will not take a position on heritage railway property on the basis of the Railway Act.

[Senator Sinclair.]

Heritage Canada, for many years, has carried out an intensive lobby of the government to attempt to preserve one of Canada's historic features, namely, Canadian railway properties. There has been an opportunity on many occasions for the views of the railways to be presented. I would not object to the proposal that this bill go back to committee if we were not likely on the verge of a dissolution of Parliament. If we were in the middle of a session and there were another few days, that would be one thing. However—and I am seeing affirmative nods by members on the other side and smiles on their faces—it is quite possible that we will not be here to listen to the report of the committee, in which case this absolutely necessary legislation will die on the order paper.

I am worried about this, as are the people from Heritage Canada and the people who would like to protect that kind of property.

As far as I am concerned, the railways have made their case. They have been given every opportunity in that regard. I do not see that anything will be gained, and we run the risk of having this important legislation denied to the people of Canada, who are so interested in it. I have to say that I personally do not support the motion of the chairman of the committee.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, without getting into the issues between the railway companies and the Heritage Canada people, there are clearly three principles involved in this motion, as has been indicated by Senator Doody and Senator Buckwold. First, should we, as a Senate, ever refuse an opportunity for all sides of a question to be heard? Secondly, should we allow that to happen if there is a risk of an election, and make that an exception to what is our normal rule, which is to give all sides an opportunity to be heard? Thirdly, in considering that principle, should we take into account the fact that a person wanting to make a submission to a Senate committee has already been heard in the other place? I agree with Senator Doody completely on that. One, it is relevant; two, it should not be determinative.

Senator Roblin: Very statesmanlike.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I shall put the motion in amendment made by Senator Turner.

In amendment to the main motion, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Turner, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sinclair, that the bill be not now read the third time but that it be referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications for further study.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

● (1430)

Senator Doody: Do they have to report back before an election is called?

Senator Frith: If the government is making an offer that we add a condition—

Senator Flynn: It is not a government bill!

Senator Frith: —that the committee has to report before the election call, then the government, in order to complete that undertaking, would have to tell us the date. In that case, we should add that condition.

Senator Steuart: Cowering innocents!

Motion in amendment agreed to, on division, and bill referred back to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Murray P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., for the second reading of the Bill C-130, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.—(Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C.)

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I appreciate the courtesy extended to me to allow me to continue my remarks on this important subject, as they were interrupted yesterday by the need to proceed with the ceremony of Royal Assent.

I have one or two points this afternoon. First, I want to express some real appreciation to members opposite for having provided the special committee that is promoting free trade with a splendid joint chairman in the form of the Honourable Gerald Regan, who was the last Minister of International Trade in the previous administration. His views are welcome to us, because we know that he approves of what is going on. To the extent that my honourable friends opposite feel able to—

Senator Steuart: He did not do that much when he was a minister, did he?

Senator Roblin: —be responsible for him, I thank them.

Senator Murray: He is a protégé of Senator MacEachen's.

Senator Roblin: That reminds me about something concerning Senator MacEachen. I had intended to start off with a few flowery—well, not flowery, but sincere words of congratulation—

An Hon. Senator: Make it flowery!

Senator Roblin: —flowery and sincere.

Senator Frith: It can be both, yes.

Senator Roblin: Yes, it can. I wish sincerely to congratulate Senator MacEachen for the splendid speech that he gave us yesterday—I by no means minimize that. However, I am rather disappointed that the Puppet-Master of the Senate will not be here this afternoon to hear what else I have to say, because I will be deprived of the stimulation of watching his reaction to some of the points I make, which I hope will go some way to convince honourable senators that he was not altogether right—

Senator Frith: I will try to react for him.

Senator Roblin: —in the various statements he made with respect to the Free Trade Agreement.

When the Puppet-Master returns, I presume we will have an opportunity to engage in further dialogue on some of these matters, particularly if he attends the committee which I understand my friends opposite have deemed to agree to with respect to this bill.

Yesterday, when I was talking on this subject, I had reached the stage where I was discussing the advantages some of the people in western Canada see in this bill. I will not repeat them; nor will I itemize everything that one could possibly say about them. But there is one category of persons that deserves to be mentioned, and that is the consumers.

I have noticed in this debate, particularly in the speech of my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, no reference to the consumer; or, if there was, it was a reference that escaped my notice. It seems to me that in western Canada the consumers are perhaps among the big winners in this new Free Trade Agreement.

In the last many years the tariff situation in this country has cost the people of western Canada billions of dollars. It has been a serious obstacle to economic growth and prosperity in my part of the world. It is no small thing that the consumers of my part of the country, as well as from the rest of Canada, will be relieved of that enormous burden of tariff expenses, which did nothing but add to the cost of living in that part of the country.

Close to one-half of the average consumer's purchases in western Canada will be affected by the Free Trade Agreement, and they will be affected for good. I have a strong suspicion that consumers of Manitoba will not complain when they see prices starting to move down closer to the prices that are paid in North Dakota and in neighbouring American states. They are going to be equally pleased, I think, when they see that the variety of merchandise they can buy is improving. Therefore, the comparison will come a little closer in Winnipeg, Manitoba, than it does now with what is available in the stores of the American cities immediately adjacent to my province.

I am well aware, honourable senators, that all is not sweetness and light. Canadians will still have to worry about provincial sales taxes and things like that, unless they happen to be citizens of Alberta. However, the average western family will be better off under free trade by hundreds of dollars per year. The elimination of tariffs alone will be advantageous, to say nothing of the other benefits we foresee arising from free trade to the benefit of our economy, and which I mentioned yesterday.

Honourable senators, the saving to the consumers of my province is not insignificant. As tariffs go down, their real incomes will increase by 2 to 3 per cent over the period. This means that hundreds of dollars of increased spending power and increased real income will be available for the families that dwell on the western plains.

One of my friends over there is shaking his head, but I am willing to place a bet that, when this Free Trade Agreement is in action, he will see that there are real benefits for those people.

Honourable senators, after the citizens of western Canada have discounted the Liberal and also the NDP hobgoblins I referred to yesterday and the political scare tactics that are going to be the stuff and substance of this coming election, and after they have listened to all this talk about social disintegration, cultural shock, creeping colonialism and national decay, I think, like the sensible folk they are, they will see this Free Trade Agreement for what it really is: a continuation of economic policies that have proved helpful to us over the last many years and a positive advantage to a confident nation in building a more Canadian society on the basis of better economic growth and rising efficiency.

I want to deal now, and probably throughout the remainder of my speech, with some of the statements made by the Puppet-Master yesterday, because I do not believe they should go unquestioned. One of the first things he said, whilst introducing his remarks, was that we should not be alarmed by this story that protectionism in the United States was still alive and vigorous and would like to eat us up. He said, and I would like to use his exact words—

... the obsolete and discredited fear—

That was his phrase—

... the obsolete and discredited fear of American protectionist tendencies ...

Also, in order to make his case, he reported upon a visit made to Washington some time ago by a committee, of which both he and I were members, during which this subject came up. He quoted quite correctly from a statement by a man called Mr. Katz that protectionism was not a national issue and that it was a mistake to portray the Free Trade Agreement as a defence against protectionism. However, the same gentleman, Mr. Katz, had another observation to make. Mr. Katz said that protectionism in his country was regional and sectoral—and don't we know that to be the truth! It may not be national policy but it is regional and sectoral policy. Just listen to the statements of Senator Baucus in connection with lumber and shingles in the United States; just listen to the statements of Representative Dingell when he speaks about the Auto Pact in Ontario; just listen to the statements of Representative Olympia Snowe from the State of Maine about the introduction of New Brunswick potatoes into her part of the world. If you don't think protectionism is still a powerful force in the American body politic, you indeed are much mistaken.

Another member of the distinguished group of men who spoke to our committee was a Mr. Horlick. Mr. Horlick was also quoted by the honourable Puppet-Master of the Senate. He said that larger protectionist measures would not be passed by the United States Senate. My friends, it was only weeks after that that the United States Senate did exactly that, twice! First, they passed the Omnibus Trade Bill, which was not as bad as it might have been but was certainly of no help to us. The Omnibus Trade Bill is certainly a larger protectionist measure, and I shall say a word about the meaning of the bill with respect to protectionism in a short time.

Then we saw just the other day a bill passed by Congress, dealing with high protectionism on clothing, textiles and shoes, that will certainly affect us. We are hoping, I suppose, that the President will veto it. However, to say that the United States will not be engaged in larger protectionist measures is certainly a statement that cannot stand unchallenged. No sooner was it made than we saw these events unfold.

• (1440)

Honourable senators, others have also spoken on this subject. Mr. Bergsten is one. I must frankly admit that he is also on the side of those who say, "Don't be scared of protectionism." A singular event happened after those statements were made that should be brought to the attention of the Senate, because the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition did not give you everything that was said on this particular subject. After this point was discussed, and those who were at the committee meetings will be able to bear testimony to what I am about to say—indeed, it is on the record—the key question was asked: What happens to protectionism with respect to Canada if we do not pass the Free Trade Agreement? That is the key question: What are we going to do if we renege on this deal? I must say that we did not get comforting answers. The report says that all the people who spoke on this particular topic agreed that there would be substantial difficulties. They spoke of serious, adverse, bilateral consequences and of no return to the status quo ante.

Honourable senators will have to add those remarks to the ones that were quoted yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition if they are to form any impression of what protectionism in the United States might mean for Canada in the future. New protectionist pressures can be expected. Canada will have fewer friends, and the special relationship, if that is a factor, will certainly be one that will be hard to find. It was not only the academics who made such statements. I am surprised at my honourable friend, because yesterday he was quite harsh on the use of academics to support any of the points others were making, but he did not hesitate to use them himself if he felt that it added to his case. I do not complain about that; I merely point it out as being a bit of a curiosity. These people who spoke to us were not the only ones who mentioned what would happen if we had problems with the free trade bill.

Representative Sam Gibbons had something to say. I do not know whether all members of this house know Sam Gibbons, but a number do.

Senator Doody: I do.

Senator Roblin: They know that he is not an alarmist, that he does not use threats, that blackmail is as far from his mind as anything could be, that he is a rational man in most respects—not in all, but a rational man—and that he is certainly a friend of Canada. He warned us in a very careful, low-key, non-threatening manner that the United States congressional reaction to a rejection of the Free Trade Agreement would be cause for concern. I shall not say anything about Congressman John LaFalce who spoke in New York. He is a friend of ours, but I think he came on a little too strong, so I do not care to quote him in this connection.

I think we have to recognize the fact that protectionism is not dead in the United States. I suggest that honourable senators read the editorial of the New York Times, August 9, when the Omnibus Trade Bill was passed. It said that the bill sends a warning, that it threatens retaliation where United States deems unfair trade practices are taking place. The New York Times is a pretty balanced journal. The point they made was that, while Mr. Gephardt and his amendment were defeated, the underlying protectionist emotions of the United States survive. It seems to me that we have to take those warnings into account when we consider whether or not protectionism is a factor that should be considered, and when the Leader of the Opposition says that it is obsolete and discredited. By no means. It is there, and I tell my honourable friend that, if we have a decline in the economic life of North America, one will see a revival of the protectionist spirit in the United States, and it will not make us very happy. Keep those thoughts in mind, because under the free trade bill, even considering some of these new laws that we have been talking about—and I think that some of them violate the FTA—we have, if we pass the bill, a measure of protection against such measures that we did not have before. We have the binational dispute-settlement mechanism.

I am not one who claims that the dispute-settlement mechanism achieves everything that I would wish for, but I can tell this house that it is a great deal better than the present situation and that it is a great deal better than the kind of situation in which the Max Baucuses of this world can distort the policy of the United States with respect to protectionism on shingles and shakes, as we have seen. It is a procedure in which there is a binational body on which we have an equal voice. Now, mind you, we have to deal with American law and we have to deal with Canadian law, depending on where the problem lies, but both parties have an equal voice. This little country, with one-tenth of the population and the economy of the United States, has an equal voice with them in the deliberations of that committee. To say, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, that they will be motivated by crass political manipulation on the part of ministers when such matters come up for consideration is a sentiment that, frankly, I do not share. I look at other bodies of a similar nature, such as the International Joint Commission, which is operated on the principle of equal access to it. I have found that body to be a model that gives some hope that this new organization will indeed be a good one.

Senator Stewart laughs at all this, and I am surprised that he does, because I think he is a man of some discerning judgment. I regret that he does not feel that the binational adjudication system will do any good. We know with respect to countervail and dumping, which are the important areas of dispute, that the findings of this body are binding. I believe that this procedure eliminates the possibility of irrational regional and local pressures, such as the Baucus pressure being brought to bear, as we have seen done so nakedly in the past. Such action will not be found to the same degree whatsoever under the binational dispute-settlement mechanism. So I do not join my honourable friend opposite in his down-playing of the role of protectionism in the future economic life of this country, and I do not join my honourable friend when he belittles the dispute-settlement mechanism.

It is the finest dispute-settlement mechanism in the world today, and no one who understands this matter and will speak on it will deny that this is so. This measure is far better than any comparable measures in the GATT. It is far better than any binational adjudication system in the world today, and we owe it to ourselves to adopt it, to try it, and to make it work.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: I will not join those who deprecate it and say, "Because we did not get everything we would have liked, we are going to reject what is good for the lack of what is perfect." I will not join them at all.

I say to this house that the dispute-settlement mechanism does introduce an element of the rule of law that is not there now, and that goes a long way towards eliminating the political influence in the determination of these decisions in the United States that we have seen so often in the past. It gives us some hope that we will have a good, and better, deal when dealing with the problems we have with our friends in the United States. So I say to my honourable friend in his absence—and I regret his absence—that he is not right about protectionism in the United States, that, while it does not appear to be so strong today, it is not dead. It will come to life and if, when it comes to life, we have no free trade agreement and no dispute-settlement mechanism, we will rue the day, because the odds will be against us. We will not have anything like the even break that I expect we will achieve in the situation as it stands at the present.

My honourable friend went on to talk about agriculture. I want to spend a little time on that subject, too. He said, and I think it was a wise remark, that it is a good thing to take a look at the work that the Foreign Affairs Committee has done on the whole of this free trade system. For the sake of the record, I want to tell you in brief outline what the committee has done.

The members of this committee have been meeting regularly for nine months. They have had 32 public sessions and a number of private sessions. They have had 13 meetings on the dispute-settlement mechanism. They have had 8 meetings with 18 witnesses on energy. They have had 6 sessions and heard 13 witnesses on agriculture. They had a five-session introductory period before we started. They had 2 sessions on the GATT and other bilateral organizations; and they had 2 sessions on the constitutional jurisdiction as between the Government of Canada and the provinces of this nation.

What was done—and I want to underline this—was not a rehash of what the Senate committee did in 1982. Nothing like it. We did not get into those questions that were settled in that document to any great extent. What we did do was focus on the new areas that had been so much discussed in this whole debate. Those are the areas on which we spent most of our time and in which we achieved, I think, a great deal in eliciting opinion and information on all these matters.

Now the Leader of the Opposition describes the goings on in that committee as “prodigious”. That is his word, and I subscribe to it. It was prodigious. I subscribe to some of the things he said in another speech on Bill C-130, when we were moving for the pre-study that was not granted. He made the case that the work that was being done on the agreement itself was just as good as the work done on that bill. He made that case very strongly. I have quotations here, but I will spare you the quotations because you have heard them before.

But this leads to one point: we are now going to have another committee. Does he now propose to re-examine and rediscover the wheel? Are we going to look again at all these matters and proceed with a nine-month study in the Senate, with countless meetings to hear the testimony which I hold in my hand here? Is that all to be redone? I certainly hope not. However, if his aim is just to keep the thing afloat as long as possible, there is no reason why we cannot examine every jot and tittle of what was said and done before. I hope I am not unduly suspicious when I say that that might very well be in his mind.

Going on from there, we have this emphasis on new initiatives and something else. In selecting the witnesses—not all of them, since some of them were invited and some of them were voluntary—there was a plan; and that plan was to have representation from all points of view. The witnesses were not selected because they supported the government's point of view, as you can tell by reading some of the evidence; they were selected in order to give the committee a broad view from every conceivable opinion and angle, and that was achieved. I think that is something that certainly cannot be overlooked. Therefore, when you make a selective reference to certain witnesses who appeared and whose views you may have liked—and I have to admit that that is a very human failing, and I am not able to say that I have never done that myself or that I will never do it again—you have to offer a warning to your hearers that that is the case.

For example, we heard a lot about Mr. Fleischmann of the Grocery Products Manufacturers' Association. He had some things to say that the Leader of the Opposition found agreeable. One of the things he had to say, which was not mentioned, was that his organization did not come out in favour of or against the Free Trade Agreement. Why would that be so? The answer, of course, is clearly obvious: Because the Free Trade Agreement may be objectionable to some of their members, but it is very satisfactory to a great many others, and, while they had no objection as a whole to appearing before the committee to allow the objectors to have their say, they certainly were not going to sink the deal and deprive all the others who like it of the advantages it brings.

Senator Stewart: May I ask the honourable senator a question on the point about which he is now speaking?

Senator Roblin: I would prefer that Senator Stewart ask the question afterwards. I have quite a lot to say and I shall probably outwear his patience. However, if he asks me later, I will do my best to answer.

I give my view. I cannot prove that that is the case, because I have not heard all of the people in the organization, but it seems logical to me that, when they say that they appear neither to support nor to condemn, there is a reason for it. I suspect the reason is that a good many of their people find that there are things in that agreement which they really like.

I shall now go on to deal with some of the things that were said by the grocery manufacturing people who feel badly done by by this treaty and to point out to the house that their problems have not gone entirely unnoticed. Indeed, with respect to people who use eggs, chickens and commodities like that, there are special duty-free quantities allowed into the country, calculated in such a manner as not to upset the supply marketing boards but calculated to supply some good assistance to the people who use those products.

There was a deal on sugar that would enable our manufacturers of products that contain sugar to have a considerably better deal in the United States than they have at the present time. There was a change in the price of domestic wheat that was designed to help the grocery manufacturers in Canada by reducing the price of that important element of their raw materials. The reduction in the price of wheat was certainly considerable.

The real target, I suspect, of much of the information that came to us from the grocery manufacturers and others was not really the Free Trade Agreement, although they had lots to say about it; the real target was the marketing board system, and they had a lot to say about that. They do not like it. They would like it changed and they want pressure brought on the people who use the marketing boards to bring their prices down. That is their policy. Good luck to them. I do not think they are going to have any chance of doing anything like that.

I want to go on to another witness who appeared before us in the same vein, who received, I think, approval from the Leader of the Opposition—a gentleman called Archie McLean. Mr. McLean is the representative of McCain Foods of New Brunswick. I have to tell you that he was a very articulate and persuasive witness. In fact, I found him a little bit overwhelming. He is opposed to the Free Trade Agreement, root and branch, and he had some reasons for that. He said, "I'm a potato man." I did not say a "couch potato". He is a potato man and he is a lively one! McCain Foods has a plant in Manitoba that uses a lot of our potatoes, so you can be sure I paid some attention to what that gentleman had to say. He told us of some of the problems in the potato industry in the North American continent. He said, "To your Keystone producers, Roblin, in Manitoba, we have to pay $124.75 per short tonne for the potatoes we buy; whereas in South Dakota, just over the boundary, we can buy them for $86." It is a 20 per cent premium to buy in Canada.

Senator Frith: Are those Canadian funds in both cases?

Senator Roblin: Yes. Mr. McLean very kindly translated the figures into Canadian funds.

In terms of electrical power, the figures were five kilowatts in Canada and three kilowatts in the United States. The yield of potatoes per acre is six to seven tonnes in Manitoba and 25 tonnes in the state of Washington. Bear in mind, honourable senators, that these are enormous handicaps for anyone in the potato business to overcome, and they exist now, before free trade or anything like it ever approaches the statute books of this country.

After free trade, where will they stand? They will stand with the same difficulties I have just recited to you, plus one more: they will also lose their protection on the Canadian tariff. What does that amount to? It is a 10 per cent tariff that is being reduced over ten years; so the added burden from Mr. McLean's point of view in terms of the Free Trade Agreement is 1 per cent on those items with respect to tariff reduction.

Honourable senators, there is something curious here. I do not think that Mr. McLean has told us everything about the costs of dealing with potatoes. I think he must have left one or two things out that are perhaps advantageous from the Canadian producers' point of view. Perhaps it has something to do with transportation; or perhaps it has to do with the price of land. There are other things that must go into the calculations, because one must rationally ask: If he is confronted with these enormous discrepancies in costs between Manitoba and South Dakota, what is he doing in Manitoba? He has a plant there and it seems to be operating satisfactorily. Is the plant going to stay there when the tariff has been reduced by 1 per cent in the first year, or will Mr. McLean move out on that account? Mr. McLean can answer that, because I certainly cannot.

It seems to me that, without examining it further, we should be careful about accepting the testimony of these gentlemen who, quite properly, have a self-interest to express. They should not be purported to the house, as was done yesterday, without qualification.

Mr. McLean gave us another interesting piece of information which has to do with tomatoes, most of which are grown in the Niagara Peninsula. He told us that in Ontario the cost of tomatoes was $1.10 and in California 76 cents; so there is a 46 per cent advantage to the California manufacturers over Canadian manufacturers. He predicted the demise of the tomato industry in that part of Canada. Later on, perhaps the same day although I am not quite sure, we heard from somebody else on the same subject and that somebody else was Dr. Larry Martin, an agricultural economist from Guelph University. Speaking about tariffs, he said that, on the whole, American tariffs against us in this particular category of manufactured grocery products are greater than our tariffs against them. So that is something to be taken into account. However, with respect to tomatoes, and I do not know why he mentioned it, he said that the Canadian climate is really quite good for tomatoes. Furthermore, the processing of tomatoes—the very point that Mr. McLean was talking about—is one of the fastest growing domestic industries we have. Tomatoes are subject to the same 1 per cent American tariff system as I described for potatoes. There is something more. Who are the biggest exporters of tomato paste to the United States? Is it Canada? No. The Italians are the biggest exporters, and they are going to have to pay a duty of 15 or 17 per cent on what they ship to the United States, whereas our duty will be reduced to nothing.

• (1500)

I say to the Canadian tomato people that there may just be an opportunity for them here in respect of the manufacturing of tomato paste in this country after the Free Trade Agreement comes into effect. There were those who wondered why the industry was unable to speak with one voice and say, "We do not like the deal," or "We do like the deal." They may have heard from some people, like the tomato paste dealers, that maybe it was not as bad as all that. So I say, when you trot forth the evidence of the committee, which it is appropriate to do, it is necessary to look at it very carefully to ensure that you have not misled yourselves—and I am not immune to that—with respect to the facts that you present to the Senate.

There is another issue which I think should be ventilated. It has to do with energy. Some very telling points were made yesterday so far as my friends opposite were concerned. Very telling points. They liked what they heard, because they heard that we were doing things with respect to energy that we were going to live to regret and that our capacity to deal with the supply necessary for the Canadian people was going to be seriously impaired if that particular energy clause continued to be part of the bill.

I want to say a word or two about that. First of all, I do agree with my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, that the GATT rules on energy can be disregarded because they are superseded in any respect. I am not sure whether I understood him exactly, but he seemed to think that there were two kinds of shortages. One was caused by OPEC and there was some other kind of shortage as well. I think there is only one kind of shortage in an international trading policy, and OPEC is probably part of it. If the national energy policy taught us anything, surely it taught us that we cannot get away from the world market in this particular product. However, my friend did not dwell on that. He dwelled on the National Energy Board. He made the statement that the National Energy Board would be the one that decided whether the proportionality clause in the treaty would be invoked. At least he left me with that impression. I am not sure what he meant, but I can tell him that it is the federal Governor in Council only who will decide whether to invoke the proportionality clause by prohibiting the exports of oil to the United States of America. However, I want to go one step further, because that clause can only be read and understood in connection with the International Energy Authority. The International Energy Authority is a body that my honourable friend dismissed. He said that it has no application and is a red herring. I think that was his expression. I venture respectfully to disagree. I say to him that that is not the case, because, in case of crisis, the International Energy Authority prevails over the Free Trade Agreement. Senator Stewart agrees with that.

Senator Stewart: I think it is the International Energy Agreement rather than "Authority".

Senator Roblin: I am sorry, I should say "Agreement". With all this material in front of me, some of it does not come out right, but my friend corrects me and he is correct.

Senator Everett: I think it is "Agency", with respect, is it not?

Senator Roblin: I thought it was the International Energy Authority. Is it "Agency"?

An Hon. Senator: Agreement.

Senator Roblin: Agreement? At any rate, do you know what I mean?

An Hon. Senator: Yes.

Senator Roblin: That is the main point.

Senator Stewart: Or is it all of the above?

Senator Roblin: Or all of the above, yes. Well, it does prevail in time of crisis. In any conflict between the agreements, the International Energy Agency prevails over the Free Trade Agreement. That is something that is clearly set out in the agreement itself. We know that.

Now, what is the effect of that? That is the real point I want to come to. What is the effect of that? I have already said that it is for the government to decide key policy questions such as whether to impose export restrictions that would trigger obligations under the FTA. I have said that, in the event of a major oil supply distribution problem, restriction of oil exports would be contrary to Canada's commitments under the International Energy Agency's sharing program. The International Energy Agency commitments would take preference over the Free Trade Agreement. All right. So much for that.

[Senator Roblin.]

What does it mean? Well, we were told what it meant, and I have to admit that my honourable friend, yesterday, made it quite clear that he did not like what he was told. He did not believe the evidence presented to the committee with respect to the meaning of the IEA clause and the fact that it prevails over the Free Trade Agreement. Now, the experts had prepared two scenarios. You can prepare any number, but they had prepared two scenarios based on the assumption that OPEC had blown up and there was a crisis in world oil.

The first scenario was based on 1987, when Canada was in surplus and we were net exporters. The study compared the obligations under the IEA and the obligations under the FTA. The nub of it is that under the IEA we were responsible for 967,000 barrels per day, whereas under FTA it would be 833,000. That means that the IEA is more onerous than the FTA in conditions of shortage of the kind mentioned in this scenario.

They then took another scenario. They said, "Supposing that in 1995 we are net importers of oil and a crisis arises of the kind that is mentioned; what happens to us then?" Well, under the International Energy Agency our obligation is to provide 421,000 barrels per day, whereas under the Free Trade Agreement it is 394,000 barrels per day. So that is the comparison of the proportionality clause in the FTA with the obligations to supply oil that we undertook—in 1974, mind you; nothing new—under the International Energy Agency.

So I put it to you that, whatever you may think about the proportionality clause, the fact that we are bound to act under the International Energy Agency, should need arise, is the overriding clause of the agreement. According to those two scenarios, which were prepared by people we must believe were not fudging the books—whatever else they are doing, they are not fudging the books—our obligations under the International Energy Agency are as onerous as, if not indeed more onerous than, the ones we see under the Free Trade Agreement. So I think it is wrong to dismiss the International Energy Agency in the way my friend does. It is wrong to come to the conclusion that we will not honour our obligations under that agreement. I believe we will. It says so in the Free Trade Agreement. If that is so, then the relative burdens under the two different plans of dealing with energy emergencies become clear. Certainly we are no worse off, and I say we are better off, under the Free Trade Agreement than we were under the still existing and still dominating arrangements of the International Energy Agency. I think that question has to be weighed carefully to see whether you follow my logic, whether you agree with my reasoning. That is a point we can discuss.

● (1510)

But there is another point, and this is where my friend really hit home. When discussing the question of what happens to the supply of gas if we find that we do not have enough to go around, he said that under this agreement the National Energy Board could not stop the exports and that, if the government tried to stop the exports, it would introduce proportionality, and we would be in a mess and would not be able to control the supply of gas to our own people because, first of all, we would have to consider our obligations to the United States.

I must say that he was exercised by that and he felt that we had given away a dollop of sovereignty that would not be satisfactory in years to come.

But it is not that tough. If he were here I would comfort him and tell him that it is really not that tough, that there are good, businesslike ways one can deal with this long before any emergency arises. If he just took the trouble to read the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources entitled: "Natural Gas Deregulation and Marketing", he would get some fairly good ideas of what should be done in order to protect us now against shortages in the future. I will read some of the recommendations of that committee because they are enlightening. The report states:

The Committee makes the following observations regarding the Canadian gas market.

Over the last three years, Canada has made a substantial achievement in moving from a highly regulated market—which, incidentally, I think Senator MacEachen would prefer to a free and responsible market. The Committee supports this initiative of freeing oil and gas markets from heavily administered arrangements.

Canadian public policy should nevertheless recognize the legitimate, long-term role of providing energy security to consumers and stability to producers, transporters and distributors when market forces are unable to do so.

Long-term supply commitments secured by contracts should be the basis for protecting the interests of all participants in the natural gas market.

To protect these interests and to help resolve one of the contentious issues in today's domestic gas market, the Committee advises:

That the core market of gas consumers who lack fuel switching capability or access to other readily available energy supplies be protected by supply contracts no less than 10 years in length;

So far so good.

It goes on to state:

That those supply contracts be evergreened—which means that they keep on going and contain equitable price adjustment and price arbitration provisions;

That the National Energy Board oversee the system of long-term core-market contracting; and

That short-term direct sales to consumers in the core market be prohibited.

The final comment is:

The Committee believes that its analysis, advice and recommendations provide a sound policy position from which it can fairly evaluate the merits of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Well, if you cannot catch them on the swings, you catch them on the roundabouts, and, if you are concerned about the supply of gas down the years to Canadian consumers, as my honourable friend was yesterday, here is one possible answer to that question. It seems to me that, if we just take the sensible, businesslike, practical observations contained in this report, which, incidentally, is a unanimous report, we can find an answer that does not involve us in the horrendous fears that were aroused in the minds of members opposite during my honourable friend's discussion yesterday.

Honourable senators may be glad to know that I have done the best I can with the important points my friend raised yesterday. I simply come back to a question that has not yet received the thoughtful consideration of senators and others but that I think must be uppermost in our minds before long: If we are a party to defeating this agreement, what are we doing to our country? That is the question. Are we really preserving its social policies, its cultural policies, its independence and national character from destruction, as the extremists would have us say? Or are we really dealing with an economic policy that supports the cultural policies, the social policies and the Canadian way of life as we have developed it?

I made this point yesterday, and I return to it again because I think it is one of the key considerations we have to debate. If you accept my argument that all these horror stories about national dissolution are probably just a little exaggerated, to put it no milder than that, and if you accept my argument that there is a substantial, indeed, I think, overwhelming economic character to this agreement, then we have to ask ourselves what we are doing if we do not pass this bill.

I do not know how many honourable senators read the publications put out by Informetrica, which is a private economic research firm. After what happened to the C.D. Howe Institute yesterday, I am a little hesitant to bring forward any expert of any kind, because they usually get shot down by my friends opposite. However, if honourable senators do read this impartial and balanced publication, they will know that it is not a government toady by any stretch of the imagination. If honourable senators have been reading the publications of that firm, they will have seen that they are saying to us that if we do not pass the Free Trade Agreement legislation there will be adverse economic consequences that we will not be able to avoid.

I have one such publication in my hand; it consists of two pages, but I will not read it now. I simply say to the Senate that in dealing with this question of free trade we have to consider these larger issues. Maybe Mr. Turner should be elected; maybe Mr. Mulroney should be elected; but it seems to me that the issues here go deeper than the fortunes of any one political person or, indeed, any one political party.

There are those who feel in their hearts that the deal is evil. I shall not convince them to change their minds. But there are those who have been looking for reasons to support the agreement. I hope I have offered some reasons to support the agreement in what has been a lengthy intervention in the debates of this house.

Hon. John B. Stewart: I wonder if the Honourable Senator Roblin would deal with questions now.

Senator Roblin: Certainly.

Senator Stewart: I have two questions, one is fairly simple and the other more complicated. He told us, when he was mentioning the testimony of the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, that the association said it was not prepared to take a stand one way or the other on the Free Trade Agreement.

I do not want to ask a rhetorical question, so let me put it this way: Does Senator Roblin remember that when the association appeared before the committee a comment was made that its membership hardly appeared like the membership of the IODE, that it includes Campbell Soup Company? Why should they be opposed to the agreement? Why should General Foods Inc. be opposed to the agreement? Why should H.J. Heinz Company be opposed to the agreement? Why should Kellogg-Salada be opposed to the agreement? Why should Christie Brown be opposed to the agreement? Why should Nabisco Brands be opposed to the agreement?

Is there any wonder that strictly Canadian firms might take a position different from that taken by these other members of the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada?

Senator Roblin: I think I can argue with my friend as to which of those firms are multinational, but I really do not care to do so, because I say to him that I am not at all alarmed if international firms find the Free Trade Agreement to be a good thing, because they have been good citizens of this country. If they all left and moved to the United States tomorrow, my honourable friend would be the first to miss them. So I am glad that they like the Free Trade Agreement and I hope that they stay and prosper under it.

Senator Stewart: Of course, they will prosper in Chicago rather than in Toronto or its suburbs, but that does not worry my honourable friend. I understand.

I will pass over questions concerning Mr. Archie McLean's testimony. I want to come to what Senator Roblin has said about the provisions in the agreement with regard to energy. What I have there is a logical problem rather than a factual problem.

Senator Roblin sketched out for us very briefly this afternoon the obligations relative to oil under the International Energy Agency. He outlined in a similar, brief way the obligations of Canada under the Free Trade Agreement. He argued that the former are more onerous for Canada.

● (1520)

Are we to understand that Senator Roblin believes that the two sets of obligations are to apply in the same circumstances? I believe that is what he said when he entered upon that comparison. If that is so, why was a new set of obligations introduced? If, in the circumstances in which there are to be restrictions, the International Energy Agency obligations apply, why does this agreement set forth a second set of obligations? Is it not a fact that the second set of obligations, those under the FTA, are to apply in a different set of circumstances?

Senator Roblin: I should like to deal with Senator Stewart's first question in which he says that all of these American nationals are going to go to Chicago. I do not think they will. I think my honourable friend will live long enough to see that they do not. He will see that some will move to Chicago, but he will also see that some come here, because that is the nature of the economic process. So I think he can set his mind to rest on that.

In connection with the other agreement, I was not present at the negotiations so I cannot give a factual answer, because I do not know. But it seems to me that the agreement clearly recognized that the International Energy Agency had a role to play; and if it came in conflict with the Free Trade Agreement then the International Energy Agency obligations would take precedence. I think that is a reasonable assumption to make.

Senator Stewart: I do not want to press too persistently, because there does not seem to be much there to be extracted. Does Senator Roblin think that there are some circumstances in which the obligations under the Free Trade Agreement with regard to energy would apply to Canada? Or does he think that we always, in the circumstances of any shortage, have to meet the more demanding obligations under the International Energy Agency?

Senator Roblin: I think my friend will have to recognize the fact that either possibility is present; and the aim of my address was to indicate that the obligations that we have already accepted under the IEA, no matter how they happen to be triggered, are more onerous for us than the obligations under the Free Trade Agreement.

Senator Stewart: The trigger would be different.

Senator Roblin: I am not saying it is different, because my friend does not know. He makes the supposition. Neither of us knows, but the point at issue is whether we have accepted a new obligation that, in principle, is more onerous than the one we already happen to have. I say no.

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: If Senator Roblin would permit another question arising out of his comments, I, with my colleague the senator, was also a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee and had the opportunity to spend many meetings reviewing the different aspects of the agreement. I found that the information that we received from the diverse group of witnesses was both enlightening and, in many instances, puzzling. Is Senator Roblin suggesting that, having spent that comprehensive time on the agreement, as the members on both sides of the committee did, we should not examine the legislative draftsmanship that is to implement that agreement and, at the same time, review the American legislation, which is supposed to conform with the agreement as well?

Senator Roblin: I would not object to that on either count.

Senator Grafstein: So I take it that the senator, in his comments, is not suggesting that, if the chamber deals with it, a committee should not spend an adequate period of time to examine whether or not the American legislation and the Canadian legislation, in fact, conform to the agreement.

Senator Roblin: I would refer to the description of the Free Trade Agreement study given by Senator MacEachen in which he said it was equivalent to studying the bill itself, and as such it was a valuable work to do. Maybe he is right on that. I think it is equivalent to the bill itself. I said so at the time.

If the committee has already done this work, I do not think it could profitably be occupied in threshing old straw and in redoing things it has already done. If he wants to look at the legislation in the United States, he is perfectly free to do so.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I should like to ask Senator Roblin a question. He referred to the testimony of Mr. McLean. I was not at the hearings and I am not a member of the committee; I presume he was there, because he said that he was very impressed by the presentation. He indicated that he still had several questions in his mind in that regard, I gather, because he felt that there was something missing. If that is a correct assumption on my part, would it be useful to ask Mr. McLean to come back before the committee so we can clarify these matters?

Senator Roblin: At the time of the committee, I remember well asking Mr. McLean to account for this apparent ability to overcome all of these adverse economic situations and still produce a profit of 4 per cent in his industry, which he does; but he was not very forthcoming on that.

Senator Molgat: But I thought you had indicated that there was some information that he did not give. Was that not the impression you were giving in your comments?

Senator Roblin: I do not know what impression my honourable friend received, but I stand by what I said.

Senator Molgat: My honourable friend, particularly as the former premier of Manitoba, knows how the marketing boards in our province, particularly in the fields of chickens, eggs, turkeys and dairy products, have been very important in providing a diversified agriculture for Manitoba—much more so than in our two neighbouring prairie provinces. Has he studied what the impact on these marketing boards under free trade will be?

Senator Roblin: I can say that the Free Trade Agreement saves the marketing boards harmless. What it does in order to extend some small comfort to the manufacturers is to set a quota of material that can come in from the United States. It does not have to go through the marketing board system. Those quotas are relatively modest, and in my opinion they will not harm the marketing board system at all.

Senator Molgat: But would it not permit or encourage the manufacturers to close their Canadian factories that are using products from the marketing boards and establish those manufacturers elsewhere?

Senator Roblin: I have gone over that thoroughly with respect to the tomato growers, because this clearly indicates to me that they would not move on that ground. In fact, other expert testimony, as I have told the house, says that they will prosper.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States is undoubtedly one of the most important decisions that have been placed before this house. We have been offered an enormous amount of information, even by those who have not read the bill in full. We have had opinions pro and con from the media, both written and on the air; and in Parliament the debates have spread out both the political and partisan aspects of Bill C-130 with considerable heat.

I should now like to comment on the quality of the speeches of the senators who preceded me. If I may be permitted to say so, I think this debate has brought forth some of the best speeches we have heard in the Senate in a very long time—and I would not distinguish in this case between the quality of the “old” Senate and the “new” Senate. Both deserve our congratulations and, I think, our thanks.

• (1530)

In spite of all this, what we might call “son et lumière”, including the excellent speeches in this chamber, there is one vital aspect of the situation that, in my view, has not been brought into focus. It appears to me to be crucial to our decision to support or to oppose the Free Trade Agreement, and I will come back to it later.

Without wishing to bore senators with my personal opinion or experience, I should explain that over 50 years my own business experience has been with a company that has had a successful history for a couple of hundred years and is, in fact, the oldest company in the industry in North America.

Honourable senators, that industry provides taxes to federal and provincial governments of over $3.4 billion annually and provides 18,500 jobs directly and a total of 85,500 jobs directly and indirectly. Its contribution to the gross national product amounts to $9.426 billion. That is 1.7 per cent of our GNP. It operates under licence and regulation from both levels of government. Among other odd conditions, it is compelled to buy a principal ingredient, barley, through the Canadian Wheat Board at a premium varying between 50 and 100 per cent over world prices. This unusual condition has provided a bonus to grain farmers of about $25 million annually.

But honourable senators must realize that there is no free trade within Canada. Our provinces, in their wisdom—or in their greed—have set up barriers so that no beer can be sold by a company that does not operate a brewery in that province. My company had ten breweries across the land, all but three too small to compete in a modern world, and this was compounded by high labour rates and lower production. Some provinces have increased the difficulty by selling imported discount beer at lower discount prices in direct competition with the product of the Canadian companies.

The quickest snapshot of the Canadian scene for this industry is that the consumer, on average, pays 52 per cent of his cost of a bottle of beer in Canada in tax, while in the United States the average tax content is 19 per cent. It is obvious that there is no contest here. We pay 52 cents to our government every time we spend $1 on beer, while Americans pay 19 cents out of the dollar. All of this explains why the brewing industry has been given time to completely reorganize its affairs, and this will be a massive task.

This reorganization must be undertaken or they will be out of business—the shareholders, the employees and the management. There is no other way out. This also explains why one with my background can only be expected to oppose the agreement vigorously.

I want to return to the factors I mentioned earlier that have a bearing upon the decision to support or to oppose the bill.

First is the enormous accumulative deficit in the United States, which is over 2.125 thousand million dollars—a staggering figure. Second is the continuing United States trade deficit, which is running at a rate of about $10 billion to $12 billion monthly. These are obviously not situations which the Americans will accept permanently. They will insist upon putting their financial and trading house in order some day soon. When they do, what will happen?

We are all too well aware of powerful, pervasive protectionism in the United States. I was interested in Senator Roblin's observations in that regard, because I cannot but completely agree with what he said. The serious problems we have experienced in recent years with our exports of softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, potash, steels, fish, potatoes and other important items have to be accepted as proof of the consequences of the status quo. Obviously, when steps are taken to improve the U.S. balance of trade, their greatest trading partner will have to be hurt the most. We all know that Canada is by far their greatest trading partner.

Although Senator MacEachen assured us that evidence in Washington persuaded him that there was no danger of protectionist action, I have never forgotten our surprise when, as your chairman, I attended a meeting of the Canada-U.S. Inter-Parliamentary Association. We were arguing with our American counterparts the circumstances surrounding the fisheries and boundaries agreement. At that time one of our members said that he could not understand how a treaty, which had taken a year and a half to work out and which had finally been agreed to and signed by both countries, had still not been ratified by the U.S. Senate a full year and a half later. The argument we heard was that the President's signature was not binding. When our members expressed some astonishment at this, the American response—and I do not remember the name of the spokesman—was, "You Canadians don't understand our Constitution. We regard our President only as the agent of the Senate." Honourable senators, this shows the great difference in governmental practice between the two countries. It also shows what can happen when we think something is all settled when in reality it is not. I am not the least bit reassured by protestations of innocent intention.

[Senator Molson.]

The world, with Europe presently on the march, is moving towards closer and closer ties. We have no choice but to follow this trend. If not, we will go proudly towards insignificance.

Honourable senators, the reasons I have outlined explain why, although my personal feelings persuade me to oppose the bill, my conviction is that not to have the agreement would lead to disaster. Under the circumstances, I have become convinced that I must support the free trade bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, until this very moment I had not intended to speak. I hope that my doing so does not disturb the chamber. I am rising at this time to put forth one anecdote, or perhaps a warning, as we go into a general election. I had prepared a lengthy speech to deal with this issue, but Senator Everett completely underscored everything I had to say. I felt that I was going to make myself totally redundant in repeating what he has said to this chamber.

What I am basically afraid of now is that, if we go into a general election on this issue of free trade, we are going to see 1911 repeat itself. I must confess—and this is a profession of faith—that I would have voted Liberal in 1911, as I will vote Conservative this time because of the same issue.

• (1540)

I remember my dear, long-gone father-in-law telling me a story about the days when he was a young man. In those days there was no radio or television; there were no electronic media. However, there were candidate meetings with Liberals and Conservatives—there was no NDP then—and they would both debate. The Liberal candidates, who were supporting the Laurier government, would promote the advantages of reciprocity with the United States. A Tory candidate would not deliver any message whatsoever. He would merely put his hands behind his back and pull out a Union Jack. There were roars of applause, and Laurier went down to defeat.

I am afraid that, if we get into this debate publicly in an election campaign, we will have the Margaret Atwoods, the Pierre Burtons and publishers such as Hurtig out west get into an emotional confrontation about an issue that should be purely and exactly an economic issue. But, no, you will hear from all these people out there. They will be on the hustings, and they will try to drive us into the last refuge of the scoundrel: patriotism. This is an economic issue; it is not a question of patriotism.

I have no fear whatsoever that we, in our culture as Canadians, will survive as Canadians, as distinct from citizens of the United States. What I am saying today—and I should not be standing and improvising—is that I was a Liberal. If I had been born in 1911, I would have voted Liberal. Today I have to put myself in the invidious position of voting Conservative and yet, at the same time, trying to vote against Meech Lake.

I should like to deal with Meech Lake for a moment. The worst thing we can do is get into a situation of free trade with the United States and, at the same time, weaken the whole structure of our federal system under Meech Lake.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Lang: I cannot conceive of a government doing those antithetical things. I know what my friend Senator Flynn wants. He wants to paralyze the central system. I want to go into a free trade agreement with the United States with all the powers and strengths the federal government needs to deal with a much larger entity, that of the Government of the United States.

How do I vote? I do not know how I am going to vote.

Senator Frith: Go to Florida, Dan.

Senator Lang: I think I will leave town until it all blows over.

Senator Frith: That's the only way.

Senator McElman: Wait until the hurricane passes.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, this is merely a confession of faith, and I hope you accept it as such. In this campaign, please do not bring out these little flags.

Senator Flynn: We will pray for you.

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRATIC DEVELOPMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the second reading of Bill C-147, to establish the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

He said: Honourable senators, forty years ago, the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, a remarkable document that has provided the foundation for international law on rights and freedoms. Together with the covenants adopted subsequently on civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, the Declaration now constitutes what is called the International Bill of Human Rights, which is very much the basis of our own Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is in this context that Bill C-147 proposes to establish an International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development.

The concept of the centre goes back to recommendations made by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Canada's International Relations, in its report of June, 1986. At the time, the committee recommended that Canada establish an international co-operation program that would support and promote the advancement of political, civil and cultural rights, just as its aid program supports economic and social development. To that end, the committee recommended establishing an international institute of human rights and democratic development. Since then, three more parliamentary committees were to support this concept: the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, Senator Tremblay, which committees prepared these studies?

Senator Tremblay: Three other parliamentary committees were to support the same concept and I will name them: the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, the Parliamentary Group on Haiti and the Special Committee on the Peace Process in Central America.

Senator Frith: Do you have the dates of the studies done by these various committees?

Senator Tremblay: Unfortunately I don't have the exact dates, but I imagine they were done after 1986, because in the text that was so kindly prepared for me I started by mentioning the Special Committee of the Senate which reported in 1986.

Senator Frith: I won't pursue the matter.

Senator Tremblay: Well, it was during the last two years, from 1986 onward.

More specifically, the provisions of Bill C-147 reflect the general philosophy of a report prepared in June 1987 by Professor Gisèle Côté-Harper of Laval University Law School and Dr. John Courtney of the Department of Political Science of the University of Saskatchewan.

Their report entitled International Co-operation for the Development of Human Rights and Democratic Institutions was itself the result of a consultation involving several hundred Canadian and international organizations and individuals.

Honourable senators, as prescribed in clause 4 of the bill, and I quote:

4. The objects of the Centre are to initiate, encourage and support cooperation between Canada and other countries in the promotion, development and strengthening of institutions and programs that give effect to the rights and freedoms enshrined in the International Bill of Human Rights, and, in carrying out those objects,

(a) to support developmental programs and activities for the benefit of developing countries; and

(b) to foster research and education, discourse, the exchange of information and collaboration among people and institutions in Canada, developing countries and elsewhere.

Within the context of its mandate, the centre will endeavour to design programs for developing countries. To that end, statutory financing is provided under Official Development Assistance, the ODA program. Programs in co-operation with developed countries, however, will be financed from sources other than this program, and more specifically from contributions received from public and private sources.

In any case, as far as developing countries are concerned, the centre will provide technical and financial assistance to countries that want to develop their own institutions in support of rights and freedoms or improve existing ones. It may assist non-governmental groups and organizations as well as public institutions. For instance, it may offer advice and provide technical assistance or training to co-operatives, trade unions, professional associations and any other groups involved in seeking a stronger voice for citizens. It may also help governments, commissions and parliaments to improve electoral, legislative, judicial and legal law enforcement and correctional systems. It may also support public and private organizations which seek to secure equality of rights for disadvantaged groups.

● (1550)

An independent corporation, the centre will be headed by a 13-member board, of whom at least nine will be Canadians and three from developing countries. Ten of the directors will be appointed by the Governor in Council. These, in turn, will select and appoint their three colleagues from the developing countries.

This board of directors will develop the centre's program of activities from the applications it receives from organizations interested in participating. The bill provides for funding under official development assistance, the program I just mentioned, that will go from one million dollars in the first year to five million dollars in the fifth year. For subsequent years, the level of funding for the centre will be determined by Parliament. Every five years, the centre will be subject to a thorough review by Parliament. This five-year review, in addition to the annual report to be submitted by the centre, will make it possible to ensure that the centre's programs remain compatible with the main thrusts of Canada's foreign policy and Canadian cooperation in international development.

Honourable senators, the idea of an international centre for human rights and democratic development has been well received abroad. The government has already received many inquiries from governmental and non-governmental organizations in several countries. The institutions, institutes and foundations working to promote rights and freedoms internationally welcome the prospect of a new Canadian actor on the scene, so to speak, with enthusiasm. This is an opportunity Canada should not miss to make its mark in an area where fundamental values are involved.

When Bill C-147 has been passed, the government will choose the members of the board of directors. A selection committee has been tasked with examining the many applications received from throughout the country and suggesting a list of candidates. This committee is chaired by Gordon Fairweather and includes Marc Brault, Canada's Ambassador in Cairo, Margaret Catley-Carlson, President of CIDA, Francine Fournier, Secretary General of the Canadian Commission for UNESCO, René Lacoste of the Jules and Paul-Émile Léger Foundation, Dr. William Saywell, President of Simon Fraser University, and Judge Walter Tarnopolsky of the Superior Court of Ontario.

Honourable senators, I conclude by saying that Bill C-147 reiterates and confirms a commitment of the government, Parliament and the Canadian people to human rights and democratic institutions. It is a logical extension of Canada's commitment as a party to the International Bill of Human Rights to respect, strengthen and promote rights and freedoms.

[Senator Tremblay.]

Therefore, it is not surprising that the bill was approved unanimously by all parties in the House of Commons.

I imagine and hope that it will be the same in this House. Thank you.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, it seems to me that the principle of this bill now before us has been around for a long time already. It has now reached a quite respectable age.

This principle has also received widespread support.

For these reasons, it seems to me, after consulting two of my colleagues, that there is no reason not to accept the principle of the bill and give it second reading so that it can then be sent to committee.

The Senate committee that seems most appropriate to me is Foreign Affairs or maybe also Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Perhaps the sponsor of the bill has thought of this and prefers one committee over another.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if Senator Tremblay speaks now, his speech will end debate on second reading.

Senator Tremblay: This will not be a speech to end debate, Mr. Speaker.

I simply want to point out that I did notice Senator Frith's use of the word "catholique" in French. I suppose that he meant it in its original meaning of "universal".

Senator Frith: That is right, Senator Tremblay.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, this may just be a superficial preference, but in the list of items for the mandate of the various committees, "foreign aid" appears under the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

So I think it is quite right to refer to this committee a bill that obviously—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): The bill relates to international assistance and not rights.

Senator Tremblay: Rights as they relate to foreign aid.

On motion of Senator Tremblay, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

THE HONOURABLE ANN ELIZABETH BELL

FELICITATIONS ON RETURN TO CHAMBER

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, on your behalf I wish to salute and welcome back to this chamber Senator Bell, who has been away for a long time and with good reason. Welcome, senator.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I have been sitting here busily thinking what a very good case Senator Tremblay has just made for this International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development, and I almost missed the Speaker's remarks. It is very kind of you. I must say I love being back and I have missed you all very much.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

CONSIDERATION OF TWELFTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ENTITLED: "NATURAL GAS DEREGULATION AND MARKETING"— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Twelfth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, entitled: "Natural Gas Deregulation and Marketing", tabled in the Senate on 7th September, 1988.

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, I want to speak today about the natural gas sector in Canada, in the context of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources tabled September 7, 1988, and in view of the pending Free Trade Agreement. At the beginning of my comments I should like to associate myself with the remarks made by Senator Roblin earlier in the debate on Bill C-130 in support of the core market concept, which is a recommendation of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. I should like to talk about this subject at some length, the reason being that the core market is a very controversial idea. At the present time it is not the policy of the Government of Canada, and it is a matter of dispute between one of the major producing provinces, my province of Alberta, and the Province of Ontario, the major consuming province, as to whether or not this is a good idea. Senator Roblin and I believe that it is.

I might also point out in my opening remarks that the International Energy Program, which is administered by the International Energy Agency—a creature of the International Energy Agreement—is not applicable to natural gas. I make that comment, honourable senators, because it was the subject matter of an exchange between Senator Roblin and Senator MacEachen in the context of the effect of the Free Trade Agreement on the energy trade within Canada and our ability to provide for our own long-term security of supply.

Natural gas, after oil, has become Canada's most important commodity in domestic energy use and in energy trade with the United States. It is important, therefore, that we understand the nature of the gas market in its new deregulated environment, with the resulting security of supply implications generally, and, in particular, the special concerns we should have in the event Canada enters into the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

The Energy Committee's Report on Natural Gas Deregulation and Marketing addresses two very important issues: First, while acknowledging the role of market forces in governing the day-to-day workings of the energy marketplace, the committee recognizes that a complex and highly-sophisticated commodity market will not always operate in the interests of all or any of the participants in that market. The committee identified three areas in which there are practical limits to deregulation: ensuring the energy security of the consumer; ensuring the financial viability of the gas transportation and distribution system; and ensuring the economic and operational stability of the natural gas exploration, development and production sector.

The second matter to which I will refer from the committee's report is the controversial issue of long-term gas supply to the core market. The committee recommended that residential, commercial and small industrial gas users in Canada—more precisely, consumers who typically lack fuel-switching capability or access to other readily available energy supplies and characterized as the "core market" or "essential service customers"—be protected by supply contracts no less than ten years in length. These supply contracts should be evergreened—that is, they should contain a rollover provision—and should contain price adjustment and arbitration provisions.

The committee further recommended that the National Energy Board oversee the system of long-term, interprovincial core market contracting. Core market gas buyers could enter into direct-purchase agreements, provided that the contractual arrangement was for no less than ten years. Those consumers wishing to retain the option of installing fuel-switching capability or of changing to a new fuel in the future could remain customers of the local distribution company, which would provide the requisite security through its own portfolio of long-term gas purchase contracts. I will return to the core market issue later in my remarks, observing for the moment that the committee's proposed solution to this contentious matter has several appealing features.

First, however, I want to broaden the basis for arguing that market forces alone are an inadequate mechanism for safeguarding the public interest in the natural gas market in particular and in energy markets in general. Like the committee, I believe that the time horizon over which market forces operate is inadequate to ensure security of energy supply. That security is a function of the evolution of our national energy system over time. Long-term change must be accommodated and guided by long-term policy as energy sources rise and fall in importance and as financial and trading circumstances change. Market forces operate within a timeframe that is largely irrelevant to and decoupled from this evolutionary change.

Secondly, market forces have a history of externalizing environmental costs whenever possible. Society has a dismal record of dumping its waste materials into the air, the water and the soil, unless required by government intervention to act in such a way as to protect the greater public good. Today we see the legacy of that past in the acid rain that damages our forests, lakes and wildlife while corroding society's artifacts and damaging human health; in the accumulation of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in the atmosphere and the growing potential for devastating climatic modification, and in the host of new chemicals that we introduce into our world environment without knowing the consequences thereof.

At a July 1988 meeting in Winnipeg concerning the western Canadian drought one participant from Environment Canada's Atmospheric Environment Service observed:

Carbon dioxide, the principal greenhouse gas in the atmosphere, has increased in concentration by about 30 per cent since pre-industrial times. When combined with other greenhouse gases, an effect equivalent to a doubling of carbon dioxide will occur during the first half of the 21st century.

The conference secretariat stated in its summary remarks that:

... during the past 100 years the global climate has warmed by 0.5 to 0.7 degrees Celsius. That warming is now expected to take place up to five times the rate to which we have become adapted. Within a decade or two conditions in both an absolute sense and with respect to the rate of change may be outside the range of previous experience.

Such environmental problems are far beyond any ameliorative action that market forces can provide. Electric utilities install acid gas scrubbers because governments impose emission limits. Automobile manufacturers add catalytic converters to their products because governments require them. This view that people and companies operate with something less than philanthropic abandon is well captured in a quotation from the book The Politics of Hunger by John Warnock:

... people pursue their own immediate self-interest. The goal is to maximize personal well being, right now, today. There can be no concern for future generations. As Robert Heilbroner points out, given this view of life "No argument based on reason will lead me to care for posterity or to lift a finger in its behalf. Indeed, by every rational consideration, precisely the opposite answer is thrust upon us with irresistible force"...

Still another issue to which the market is largely insensitive is the plight of disadvantaged groups or regions. Social programs and regional development programs are driven by government policy, not by market forces, and are necessary for just that reason. No modern democratic government is going to allow undue hardship to a significant segment of its public because economic circumstances have left those citizens behind.

● (1610)

Warnock also examines this issue in his book and makes an appropriate comment. Writing about Ireland in the middle of the last century, he says:

The Irish famine was also a major test of Adam Smith's theory of laissez-faire, or the free market. As Cecil Woodham-Smith points out in her classic study of the famine, almost every politician at that time, Whig or Tory, embraced this classical economic theory with religious fervour: individuals should be allowed to pursue their own self interests; private property in the means of production was sacred; the landlord must be free to charge the rent the market would bear. In this instance the British Government was not to interfere in the legitimate commerce of selling Irish food and agricultural products to the highest bidders.

The results of this policy in combination with the surprise of the potato blight causing failure of that crop are well known. Within ten years two million people starved to death and another two million emigrated. Labour became Ireland's major export, and its population today, 1988, is still around one-half of what it was in 1941.

It is important to recognize what market forces cannot do as well as crediting them with their beneficial impact. We must be aware that an objective of the proposed Free Trade Agreement is to tie Canada much more closely to a market-driven world, leaving the Canadian government less latitude to act in the future in what may be perceived as the public interest.

In this context, I refer to the recently published report of the Energy Options Group, entitled: "Energy and Canadians Into the 21st Century, An Inconsistent Review of Canada's Energy Future". In a section of the report dealing with security of supply generally and the potential problems presented by Article 904, the proportional access provision of the Free Trade Agreement, the report extols the virtues of unfettered energy sector markets, arguing that:

Developing trade and using our resources, guided by economic considerations and the operation of market forces, will increase the number of choices available both now and tomorrow, and help make the adjustments necessary to cope with energy conditions and the broader economic realities of the next century.

Yet later the report concludes:

Thus, as the advisory committee sees it, an informed and vigilant Canadian Government remains fully empowered to ensure that exports to U.S. markets do not exceed long-term sustainable levels.

That assertion does not sound to me like any reliance on market forces. I read it as a willingness to return to some form of export control if circumstances are judged by a "vigilant" government to warrant such action.

The trend in the export of Canadian gas to the United States clearly warrants monitoring. From a very low level of export in the 1950s, Canadian gas sales grew at an impressive rate throughout the 1960s, peaking in 1973 at 1.03 trillion cubic feet. Sales held steady during the remainder of the 1970s in the range of 0.9 to 1.0 trillion cubic feet. The early 1980s saw depressed gas exports as the regulated Canadian price began to move out of line with prices in the U.S. market and as American demand contracted sharply. From 1980 through 1984 yearly export volumes ranged from 0.71 to 0.80 trillion cubic feet.

Exports recovered to 0.92 trillion cubic feet in 1985, only to fall back again in 1986 as the price of oil plummeted and many American industrial and utility users switched from natural gas back to oil. During the winter of 1987-88, however, gas exports surged to a record monthly high as Canadian prices continued to slump. Over 1987 gas exports amounted to almost one trillion cubic feet, representing the foreign sale of about 36 per cent of Canada's marketable output of natural gas.

During the first three months of 1988 U.S. gas deliveries were running 33 per cent higher than in the corresponding period in 1987, indicating that Canadian producers will apparently set a new record in annual exports this year. I must say that, as an Albertan living in a community where energy is the prime motivator of economic activity, I am pleased with this development. I would, however, like the Canadian market to be given special consideration, because I believe it should be our best market. For this reason I strongly support the core market concept recommended by the committee, because I believe it can achieve that objective within the market-based environment in which we wish to operate.

Let me now return to the question of protecting core market gas users, an issue linked to the erosion in authority of the National Energy Board in the new free market environment and under the Free Trade Agreement.

For a quarter of a century, from 1960 to 1986, the National Energy Board applied a reserves formula to determine the quantity of Canadian gas that could be sold in the export market. For most of that time the test took the form of retaining in Canada reserves equal to 25 times the current year's domestic demand. For the period 1979 to 1986 a deliverability test was also applied.

In 1986 the reserves formula was replaced by a reserves-to-production ratio requirement of 15 times current annual gas output, supplemented by a productive capacity check. In 1987, in the context of deregulation, the National Energy Board adopted a market-based procedure that abandoned any quantitative test for gas export licensing.

In this new gas licensing regime, the National Energy Board granted a 24-year export permit, in June of this year, to Pan-Alberta Gas to sell up to 2.1 trillion cubic feet of gas into the southern California market. This new authorization extends by 16 years an existing Pan-Alberta licence that was to expire in 1996. Of most interest, the licence was granted despite the board's assessment that Pan-Alberta does not have sufficient proved reserves of natural gas under contract from Canadian producers to meet all of its current contractual obligations in Canada and the United States.

In this landmark decision, the National Energy Board has allowed reserves yet to be established or contracted for to be committed for export. The board's reasoning makes interesting reading, as the following quotation from its publication "Reasons For Decision in the Matter of Pan-Alberta Gas Ltd." indicates:

Pan-Alberta's ultimate United States buyer, SOCAL, is seeking long-term supply and has signed contracts to meet its needs. SOCAL is attempting to sign contracts now to supply its requirements starting in 1996. In the board's view there is no reason in principle why Canadian buyers cannot do likewise, and the fact that they have chosen not to do so is not a valid reason to consider deferring the board's decision in this matter, nor is it sufficient reason to deny the export. Moreover, the board's July-1987 decision clearly states that the market is to be allowed to work and under this premise it is up to Canadian buyers to determine their negotiating strategy in the light of available information on other demands for Canadian gas supply.

Apart from the assumption that a local consortium of municipalities, school boards, hospitals, small businesses and so forth can negotiate and anticipate gas market developments in two countries 25 years into the future on an equal footing with the Southern California Gas Company, this is a remarkable statement.

From protecting the interests of all Canadian gas consumers over a 25-year period, the National Energy Board has essentially swung 180 degrees to the position that it is every gas buyer for himself.

Given this abdication of the role of consumer protection, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee concluded that only the device of long-term contracting remained to ensure security of gas supply to essential service customers in Canada.

In the absence of such long-term contracting in a deregulating market, what situation would prevail? The energy options report that, if governments are not vigilant in safeguarding consumer interests, they will subsequently be held accountable by the electorate. Defeating a government that had allowed control of Canada's gas reserves to pass into the hands of U.S. buyers would, at best, be a Pyrrhic victory for the public. The need is to be vigilant today.

The question has been raised whether or not domestic gas buyers would have to pay more in contracting for a minimum of ten years as opposed to a short-term contractual agreement. The answer to this question is not obvious. It may well be that the buyer can obtain a better price in providing demand security for the longer period. In any case, many American buyers are now contracting for Canadian gas in 15- to 20-year arrangements in the current market and do not appear to be having any difficulty in settling these contracts with Canadian suppliers.

At the provincial level, regulatory boards have adopted varying positions. In a joint study, the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board and the Alberta Public Utility Board recommended to the provincial government that core market buyers be required to sign supply contracts of at least ten to fifteen years in length to achieve the desired security of supply. In contrast, the Ontario Energy Board, in an August 1988 report:

... takes the position that the focus of attention, when assessing the security of Ontario's gas supply, should not be directed toward the supply of gas as a commodity.

Natural gas will be reasonably available so long as all the participants in the market act in accordance with their declared support for a functioning, competitive marketplace.

● (1620)

Despite this conclusion, the OEB acknowledges that an overall physical shortage of gas "... would have a severe and damaging impact on Ontario's economy and citizens." One might ask why the board did not previously object to the 25-year protection formula that the National Energy Board administered from 1960 until 1986. The OEB did recommend a minimum three-year term for direct purchase contracts, but only to avoid constraints developing in upstream pipeline capacity.

The challenge then, as I see it, is to operate in a market-sensitive environment while, at the same time, addressing the issues of security of supply, environmental concerns and assistance for those individuals, groups or regions in need.

In past oil crises, one of the first alternatives that Canadians and Americans turned to was the substitution of natural gas for oil. In Canada we did this with considerable effectiveness under the National Energy Program. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, the Democratic vice-presidential candidate, is quoted in the press of September 11 as saying that the increased use of natural gas is one of the initiatives needed to halt the growing U.S. dependence on foreign oil.

One may reasonably conclude that the next oil crisis will similarly cause an extraordinary demand for natural gas. To the extent that we have left essential service customers unprotected, the federal government will be required to reinstate export regulation, if it can. The public will demand it of government.

Given the erosion of NEB regulatory authority to protect Canadian gas consumers, the rationale for the recommendation of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources for ten-year contracting to protect the core market becomes apparent. That erosion in NEB authority under the implementing legislation is very real indeed.

A legal opinion prepared for the committee concludes that, should Bill C-130 be enacted, the board's regulatory function in relation to gas exports would be materially altered. Under proposed sections 84.3 to 84.6, the board would no longer have the authority to limit exports to the United States on grounds of short- or long-term supply shortages, if the export restrictions it intended to impose contravened the rules set out under Article 904 of the agreement respecting proportionality, non-discriminatory pricing and traditional channeling of supplies. Under clause 137 of the bill, the imposition of such restrictions can be ordered by declaration of the Governor in Council and, if no declaration is made, the board has to grant the export application even if the limits allowed under the surplus test might thereby be exceeded.

GATT allowable trade restrictions notwithstanding, the fact remains, if clause 137 were enacted, the board's existing authority to place restrictions on or deny gas exports to the U.S. for reasons of shortage would devolve entirely upon the Governor in Council. It would be up to the Governor in Council to impose the appropriate restrictions in accordance with the limitations set out under Article 904. If cabinet decided against restrictions, the board would appear to have little option but to grant the export application, even though this might jeopardize the reasonably foreseeable gas needs of Canadians.

What type of energy partner would Canada be tying itself to in the Free Trade Agreement? In its most recent fact sheet on "Oil and Gas Reserve Disclosures: 1983-1987", Arthur Andersen & Co. observes that the 1987 replacement of U.S. oil and gas reserves was only 45 barrels of new oil discovered for each 100 barrels produced and only 44 per cent of the natural gas produced. In only one year out of the last ten has the U.S. petroleum industry managed to establish more oil reserves than it produced; and in only two years out of the last ten has the industry added more gas reserves than it produced.

The prime hydroelectric sites in the United States have been exploited. The last surviving order for a new nuclear reactor was placed in 1973, and the nuclear power program is in disarray today. Although the United States possesses huge reserves of coal, the environmental impact of burning coal to generate electricity has created strong public resistance to construction of new coal-fired generating stations. Until 1970, when U.S. oil output peaked, energy supply and demand were not far out of balance in the United States. Since then the U.S. has suffered a persistent shortfall in domestic energy supply, reflected particularly in its imports of oil.

The Reagan administration has presided over the demise of the Synfuels Corporation and the dismemberment of much of the American solar energy R&D program, contributing to the growing energy difficulties in that country.

The energy options report asserts that "... as the advisory committee sees it, an informed and vigilant Canadian government remains fully empowered to ensure that exports to U.S. markets do not exceed long-term sustainable levels." This implies that Canada retains the authority to restrict energy exports. Can Canada, in fact, apply some form of surplus test as a basis for justifying export restrictions?

According to the U.S. Statement of Administrative Action, tabled in Congress with the U.S. implementing legislation, the "National Treatment" obligation set out in chapter five of the Free Trade Agreement applies to all parties to the agreement, including federal and state governments and their corresponding regulatory agencies.

The statement goes on to say, on page 49, that:

Practices forbidden under the national treatment obligation would include, for example, discriminatory internal taxes, or a domestic rule in either nation imposing an internal quantitative requirement that a specified portion of natural gas or electricity needs be supplied from domestic sources, or that no foreign coal or oil can be marketed to domestic buyers, unless the measure can be justified under an exception (such as for government procurement).

The statement further observes, on page 56, that the national treatment obligation also applies at the state and provincial levels.

The American point of view is that a surplus test employed to restrict export sales is not permissible under the Free Trade Agreement in any event.

If the Reagan administration is interpreting the agreement correctly, and there is some reason to believe that it is, then the Energy Options Advisory Committee could find itself opposing the energy provisions of the agreement. As the advisory committee states on page 51 of the energy options report:

The advisory committee feels that the potential limitations on government authority to manage export volumes in the short term that are implied by proportional access are not a significant practical concern. If Canadian buyers hold back during normal market operations and thereby allow U.S. buyers an increasing share of Canadian supply; or if a temporary demand surge is translated into a sustained and significantly higher level of demand, then the question is: Does proportional access limit the authority of the Canadian government (or its agencies) to protect what it decides are long-term Canadian energy security interests?

In the advisory committee's judgment, the answer is no. The Canadian government retains the authority to protect Canadian interests, if necessary. Were this not the case, the committee feels that the price of accepting the notion of proportional access might be unacceptable.

If the U.S. interpretation is correct, does this mean that Canadians begin lining up at gasoline pumps on the same day as Americans if there is another disruption in international oil supply? It certainly implies that Alberta could no longer provide preferential treatment to its own provincial energy consumers, and it suggests that Alberta's ethane policy may have to be abandoned.

The difference in regulatory approach between Canada and the United States is evident in the implementing legislation. Section 84.2, paragraph (1), of Bill C-130, the Canadian implementing legislation, specifically makes the National Energy Board subject to the Free Trade Agreement when it states: "In exercising its powers and performing its duties, the board shall give effect to the agreement." The U.S. legislation makes no reference at all to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The American "Statement of Administrative Action" concludes, on page 56 in its discussion of the energy chapter, that:

Both FERC and the ERA (Economic Regulatory Administration) have discretion to adhere to old policies or adopt new ones. This discretion is fully consistent with the FTA so long as these agencies perform in a way that does not discriminate on the basis of nationality of the gas or electricity supply and otherwise conforms with the rights and obligations of agreement.

The statement observes that FERC opinion 256 and order 500 are fully consistent with the Free Trade Agreement and that its implementation "... does not require the FERC to change either action, in any particular way, or at all."

By way of explanation, order 256 has to do with the passing on—the so-called "as billed" issue—of certain costs as part of the transportation component. It was disallowed by FERC and, as a result, has cost Canadian gas producers a considerable amount of money. As you will see in a moment, it was something that Canadian gas producers thought would be addressed in the Free Trade Agreement.

● (1630)

Furthermore, because of FERC's "ex parte communication" rule, which is designed to reinforce the commission's independent status, it does not even have to be a party to any Canadian-U.S. consultation on energy regulation, even though that consultation may be the result of a FERC ruling.

I question the extent to which the Free Trade Agreement and its implications are being accurately portrayed to the Canadian public. Let me illustrate that with the "as-billed" issue. To explain again, that is an issue in which the U.S. Federal Energy Regulatory Commission disallowed, by order 256, the pass-through of certain costs by Canadian gas suppliers to U.S. purchasers. The result is that Canadian producers receive a smaller netback on sales of natural gas.

On page 142 of the Canadian version of the Free Trade Agreement, one reads in the preamble to chapter 9, entitled "Trade in Energy":

...if discrimination inconsistent with this agreement results from a regulatory decision, direct consultations can be held with a view to ending any discriminatory action, such as the decisions earlier this year (1987) by the Federal (Energy) Regulatory Commission prohibiting Canadian suppliers of natural gas from passing all their shipment costs on to their customers.

There is no ambiguity there. FERC's regulation on the as-billed issue is held up to the Canadian public as a prime example of the type of discriminatory action subject to Canadian-U.S. consultation under the agreement.

What, then, does one make of the subsequent letter of April 18, 1988, from Ambassador Gotlieb to Senator J. Bennett Johnston, chairman of the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources? In that letter the ambassador states:

The Canadian government does not view FERC's as-billed decision as being inconsistent with or affected by the Free Trade Agreement. I can assure you that the Canadian government has no plans to use the agreement to overturn FERC's existing as-billed decision (Opinion 256).

In how many other instances has the government been mistaken in portraying the issues involved in the Free Trade Agreement to the Canadian people?

Let me close by reiterating my support for the position that the Senate Energy Committee has taken in providing security of gas supply for essential-service customers in Canada. Long-term contracting would achieve that security while allowing market forces to operate in a deregulated environment.

I am not reassured, however, by the Reagan administration's opinion of what the Free Trade Agreement implies for the Canadian gas sector. The Energy Options Advisory Committee is certainly right when it says that Canadians must be vigilant. That vigilance must, I suggest, be directed toward our own policy makers.

In an article in the fall issue of Foreign Affairs, quoted by the Calgary Herald of September 8, Daniel Yergin of Cambridge Energy Research Associates in the United States said:

To talk of uncertainty in assessing energy security is not to avoid the issue, but rather to face the fundamental reality.

That quotation goes to the heart of my concerns about the deficiencies in current Canadian energy policy. Rather than a series of unrelated, election-eve pronouncements by the federal government for funding Hibernia and the Lloydminster upgrader, as well as a partial reinstatement of energy R&D programs that this government itself eliminated earlier in its term, Canada needs a comprehensive, consistent energy policy that acknowledges the uncertainties in our future energy affairs and contains plans to accommodate those uncertainties.

An appropriate national policy would incorporate the core market recommendations of the Senate Energy Committee and the earlier proposals made in the committee's 1986 report on oil marketing.

The current government has changed its non-interventionist position taken in 1984 and now acknowledges that market forces alone do not, and cannot, constitute adequate federal energy policy. That acknowledgement is implicit in its recent ad hoc interventionist announcements. What is still missing, however, is a comprehensive policy framework within which one could judge whether or not these government initiatives provide good value to Canadians.

On motion of Senator Hastings, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

WEDNESDAY, September 14, 1988

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

THIRTY-SECOND REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-15, An Act to amend the Patent Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 21, 1988, examined the said Bill and now presents its interim reports as follows:

In dealing with this reference, the Committee heard testimony from: officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; representatives of the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association; Novopharm Ltd.; Green Shield Prepaid Services Inc.; Musial, Taciuk and Associates; Smith, Kline & French Canada Ltd.; and the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association. The Committee also had access to drug pricing information provided by the governments of Saskatchewan, New Brunswick and British Columbia.

A number of other witnesses, including the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, expressed their desire to appear with respect to the Bill; however, the Committee's limited schedule made it impossible to make appropriate arrangements to hear from them at this time.

BACKGROUND

Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act, was given Royal Assent on November 19, 1987. In addition to making a number of technical changes to the Patent Act, this statute (hereinafter referred to as Bill C-22), alters the so-called compulsory licensing system for patented medicines by establishing certain time periods before which a compulsory licence would become effective.

Bill C-22 also provides for the creation of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board (the Board) to monitor the drug prices set and the research and development undertaken by the innovative pharmaceutical industry. As part of its mandate to examine drug prices, the Board is empowered to determine whether the price at which a patented medicine is being sold is excessive and to impose penalties on the patentee of that medicine when the price is found to be excessive. When overpricing occurs, it may order a patentee to reduce the price or remove a patentee's market exclusivity.

The Bill requires the Board to take a number of factors into consideration when determining whether a price is excessive. Included among these are: prices in preceding years, prices of medicines in the same therapeutic class and in other countries and the Consumer Price Index (CPI).

There has been considerable discussion about the possible effects of Bill C-22 on drug prices and the ability of the prices review board to ensure that prices are not excessive. Both the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada (PMAC) have publicly declared that they expect the Board to produce a downward pressure on drug prices. Moreover, in past testimony before this Committee, the PMAC was of the view that annual price increases would be limited to the Consumer Price Index.

Bill S-15, introduced in the Senate on February 10, 1988, would amend certain provisions of the Patent Act relating to the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. Price increases occurring after June 27, 1986 would be subject to the scrutiny of the Board. The Bill would require the Board to examine the prices at which patented medicines are sold in Canada on an annual basis and to make a determination as to whether these prices are excessive. Prices would automatically be excessive whenever their rate of increase exceeded that of the Consumer Price Index.

If a price is excessive, the Bill would require the Board to take remedial action. It could remove a patentee's market exclusivity or order the price of the medicine to be reduced to a level that is not excessive. In addition, the Board could limit future price increases in order to recoup a price overcharge. Thus, Bill S-15 would make the CPI the governing factor in matters relating to prices and oblige the Board to act whenever a price increase exceeds the rate of increase in the CPI.

DRUG PRICES

When Bill C-22 was being debated in Parliament, a wide variety of views were expressed with respect to its ultimate impact on drug prices in Canada. Opponents of the Bill argued that prices would increase dramatically while supporters claimed that the creation of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board would moderate price increases, despite increased periods of exclusivity granted to brand-name drugs. Indeed, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Harvie Andre, stated on numerous occasions that the Board would keep price increases in line with the rate of inflation. Bill S-15 requires the Board to use just such a yardstick in judging drug price increases. Moreover, as mentioned above, the PMAC expressed its view that the Board would limit price increases to the overall rate of inflation.

The Committee has not yet been able to undertake a complete examination of drug price increases in Canada. We have, however, had access to data from several sources upon which some preliminary observations can be made.

The Committee heard a considerable amount of evidence on recent trends in drug prices. Most of the evidence indicates that in the past year drug prices have increased at rates in excess of the rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index. Representatives of Green Shield Prepaid Services Inc. (Green Shield), a large Ontario-based prescription drug plan, told the Committee that for the period from January 1, 1987 to January 1, 1988 the average ingredient cost of the prescriptions filled under its plans increased by 12.6%. (This figure includes some medications that are not subject to patents but does not include the pharmacist's dispensing fee.) Green Shield also noted that from January 1, 1988 to the end of June of this year its average ingredient cost increased a further 9.41%. It is not clear to the Committee that these increases in average ingredient cost represent price increases of the same magnitude. A change in the pattern of consumption of drugs, to those with higher prices, would increase the average ingredient cost even though there may be no change in drug prices. Changes in average ingredient cost, therefore, may not accurately reflect price changes.

Representatives from the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association (CDMA) and Novopharm Ltd. indicated that over the past few years price increases for generic drugs have been a relatively modest 3%-4%, although they noted that some generic products have undergone substantial increases because competitive discounting had reduced prices to levels which the Association described as being too low. One example of such an increase, cited by Novopharm, is the rise in the price of Diazepam to $5.60 from $2.30 for 1000 5mg tablets.

In its brief to the Committee, the CDMA noted that the July, 1988 Ontario Drug Benefit Formulary reported that the prices of 834 of the drugs listed in the formulary increased by more than 5% when compared to the prices listed in January of 1988. The CDMA then went on to compile a list of thirteen brand-name drugs with the highest increases listed in the July formulary. Price increases for these drugs, for the period July 1987 to July 1988, ranged from a low of 5.05% to a high of 18.3%. The CDMA also reported that, last year, the New Brunswick prescription drug plan recorded a rise of 7.3% in the cost of brand-name drugs and 2.6% in the cost of generic drugs.

The Committee heard testimony from Mr. Paul Roache, the president of Smith Kline & French Canada Ltd. on the most recent changes in that company's drug prices. As of July 1988, three of Smith Kline's products, representing approximately 55% of its current sales by value experienced price increases of 4%. This was the first price increase in over two years for these particular products. In January of 1988 the prices of the majority of the company's products increased by 6% over the January 1987 price.

There is no doubt that increases in the prices of many brand-name medicines have occurred since the passage of Bill C-22 and, indeed, since June 27, 1986, the operative date for the restrictions on compulsory licences. The question then arises as to whether those increases can be linked to that bill.

Officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs expressed the view that if price increases exist, there is nothing to connect them to Bill C-22. Green Shield felt that it was too early to say if there is a direct linkage between the price increases that it has experienced and the bill. The CDMA, on the other hand, believes that the recent price increases are connected to Bill C-22 but did not present the Committee with any hard evidence in support of that belief.

Consumers are concerned with the prices that they pay for prescription medicines, either directly or indirectly through drug insurance plans. That is, they are concerned with retail prices. The Committee is ultimately concerned with the impact that Bills C-22 and S-15 may have on such prices, but our immediate interest is with prices charged by manufacturers, since it is these which are under the jurisdiction of the Board. The Committee notes that an examination of the Statistics Canada index of industry selling prices of the pharmaceutical industry indicates that these prices are indeed increasing faster than the rate of inflation; but that no obvious effect of Bill C-22 is evident.
